19. It is the policy of the Established Church by giving the minister an estate for life in his office to render him in some degree independent of the congregation; but if it be the usage amongst any particular class of dissenters to appoint their ministers for limited periods, or to make them removable at pleasure, though a Court of Equity might not struggle hard in support of such a plan, there is no principle upon which the Court would not be bound to give it effect (b). And, accordingly, where a decided majority of the congregation passed a resolution for the removal of their pastor, the Court granted an injunction against his officiating (c).

Original intention cannot be defeated by bye-laws.

20. To every corporation there belongs of common right the power of establishing bye-laws for the government of their own body; but this privilege cannot authorize the enactment of any rules or regulations that would tend to pervert or destroy the directions of the original founder and the objects of the charity (d). And so a clause in a deed investing the trustees, or the major part of them, with the power of making orders from time to time upon matters relating to a meeting-house would not enable them to convert the meeting-house, whenever they thought proper, into a meeting-house of a different description, and for teaching different doctrines from those of the persons who founded it, and by whom it was to be attended (e).

Mistake.

21. It is not the custom of the Court to remove objects of a charity who have been elected under a mistake, where the election was bonâ fide and without any fraud or corruption (f).

Act of Parliament necessary for the purpose of changing the trust.

22. The charity funds cannot be diverted into a different channel without the authority of Parliament (g), either directly by a special Act, or indirectly through the Charity Commissioners,

247, per Lord Eldon. By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 110, s. 15, the powers of the Charity Commissioners, as to the appointment and removal of trustees, are extended to "buildings registered as places of meeting for religious worship."

who are now empowered to approve, provisionally, of a scheme varying from the original endowment, with a view to submit it to Parliament for its sanction (a).

Expenses of an Act.

23. Formerly trustees, before applying to the legislature, were in the habit of procuring the sanction of the Court of Chancery for their greater security; for if they took such a step upon the mere suggestion of their own minds, and failed in obtaining the contemplated Act, they were not allowed the costs and expenses incurred in the proceeding (b); but if the application to Parliament was attended with success, the trustees were then allowed their costs, though the sanction of the Lord Chancellor had not been previously obtained; for the Court could not with propriety pronounce those measures to be imprudent which the legislature itself had enacted as prudent (c).

Letter may be broken and yet the spirit preserved.

24. The management of the trust may contravene the letter of the founder's will, and yet, on a favourable construction, be conformable to the intention.

Free grammar school.

It was the opinion of Lord Eldon (d) and Sir T. Plumer (e), that if the wish of the founder was to establish a free grammar school, the Chancellor, though he felt perfectly convinced that a free grammar school (that is, a school for teaching the learned languages) could be of little or no use, would yet be bound to apply the revenue as the donor had directed, and could not substitute a school for teaching English and writing and arithmetic. But it has since been held by Lord Lyndhurst (f), Sir John Leach (g), Lord Langdale (h), and Lord Cottenham (i), that the Court has jurisdiction to extend the application of the charity fund to purposes beyond the literal intention, and that writing and arithmetic may be well introduced into a scheme for the establishment or better regulation of a free grammar school.

Free school.

And this may of course be done in the case not of a free grammar school, but of a free school (j).

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 77, the system of education in any grammar school is extended to other useful branches of literature and science, in addition to or in lieu of the Greek and Latin languages, or such other instruction as may be required by the terms of the foundation, or the existing statutes. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 77.

25. By the Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), the Commissioners appointed by Her Majesty to inquire into Schools were empowered, by sect. 9, "in such manner as might render any educational endowment most conducive to the advancement of education, to alter and add to any existing, and to make any new trusts, directions, and provisions in lieu of any existing trusts, directions, and provisions." But by sect. 14, the Act was not to apply to charities created less than fifty years before the commencement of the Act, unless the governing body of the endowment assented to the new scheme. By 37 & 38 Vict. c. 87, the powers of the Endowed Schools Commissioners have been transferred to the Charity Commissioners, and certain amendments of the law have been introduced (a). 32 & 33 Vict. c. 56.

[26. By the City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883 (b), the Charity Commissioners are empowered "to inquire into the nature, tenure, and value of all the property and endowments" of certain parochial charities of the City of London, and to prepare schemes for "the future application and management of the charity property and endowments." But by sect. 21, no scheme is to affect any endowment originally given to charitable uses less than fifty years before the commencement of the Act, unless the governing body assent to the scheme. By sect. 39, power is given to the Commissioners to direct the sale of any part of the charity property upon such terms and conditions, and to such purchasers, as they may think fit; and the trustees for the time being of such property are thereupon to effect such sale. By sect. 48, a new corporate governing body to be called "The Trustees of the London Parochial Charities" is to be established, with perpetual succession and a common seal.] [London Parochial Charities Act.]

Ejectment of person ceasing to be schoolmaster.

27. A schoolmaster or other officer of the trustees, whose appointment has been cancelled or whose office has otherwise ceased, and who in defiance of the trustees continues to hold over the premises given up to him, cannot, as he was lawfully put in possession, be treated on the footing of a trespasser on another's lawful possession, so as to be removable with as little force as may be necessary; but can be ejected in a summary way by application to two justices of the peace under the provisions of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 136, s. 13.

"Finding a master."

28. Where the trustees were directed to apply the rents "towards the necessary finding a master, and for the pains of such master," and the trustees applied part of the revenue towards rebuilding and repairing the school-room and school-house, it was held to be a good execution of the trust, because a school-room and house were necessary, and if these were not provided by the trustees they must have been provided by the master himself, and so it was in effect applied for the pains of the master (a).

"Relief of poor."

29. So a trust "for the relief of the poor," has been construed to authorize an application of the funds to the building of a school-house, and the education of the poor of the parish (b).

Repairing and rebuilding.

30. So where an estate had been given to trustees for the repair of a church and chapel of ease thereto belonging, and the parish had taken down the chapel to erect a new one on a different site, it was determined that the trustees had not exceeded the line of their duty in expending the accumulated rents upon the rebuilding of the chapel; but it was held that the rents only, and not the corpus of the estate, could be so applied; and the Court had great doubt whether anything could be laid out upon the fitting-up of the chapel (c). But where there was a large surplus fund and the objects of the charity were sufficiently provided for, the Court in a special case made repairs and improvements out of the capital, without any direction for recouping the capital out of the income (d).

[In regard to "reparations" of buildings for a charitable purpose the law is very wide, and it has been frequently laid down that the word "reparation" is not to be confined to the repairs of the old building, but may in a proper case be extended to the erection of a new building (a). Where the trust was for the reparations, ornaments, and other necessary occasions of a parish church, a scheme was sanctioned by which the trustees were allowed to provide for the cost of a spire to a new parish church, as being within the words "necessary occasions" (b).]

Augmentation of salaries.

31. Where the direction of the founder was that the master of a school should receive 50*l.* a year, and the usher 30*l.*, and the trustees had raised the salaries respectively to 80*l.* and 60*l.*, as the will did not contain any prohibition against increasing the salaries, and it could not be supposed that the trustees were not under any circumstances to alter the amount, the Court refused to compel the trustees to refund the augmentations (c).

Reduction of salaries.

32. And, vice versâ, if a fund be given, not for the purposes of individual benefit, but for the discharge of certain duties, as for the support of a schoolmaster, and the fund increases to such an extent as to yield more than a reasonable compensation for the duties to be performed, the Court will not allow the surplus to be expended unnecessarily, but will order it to be applied for the promotion of some other charitable purpose (d).

Loans.

33. Legacies had been left by several different testators (between the years 1545 and 1666) for the purpose of being lent out in sums varying from 5*l.* to 200*l.* without interest; and Sir J. Leach was of opinion, that, regard being had to the alteration in the value of money, it was not inconsistent with the intention of the testators to raise the loans to sums varying from 100*l.* to 500*l.* (e).

"Parishioners."

34. Where the trust was to elect children, who or whose parents were parishioners of a certain parish, to Christ's Hospital, it was held by V. C. Malins that the word "parishioner" must be taken in an honest and bonâ fide sense, and could not be applied to a person who had taken a small house temporarily for the mere purpose of obtaining a qualification, and had been rated to the parish collusively, and that where a disqualified candidate was elected after notice to the electors of such disqualification, the votes were thrown away, and the opposing candidate, though he had a minority of votes, was duly elected (f). appeal Lord Justice James observed, that if the law allowed a man to be qualified, he was qualified however his qualification might have been gained—that men constantly acquired qualifications for voting in counties by buying a 40*s.* freehold for the sole purpose of giving themselves votes, and the decree of the Court below was reversed (a).

Retainer of the charity fund.

35. It need scarcely be remarked that a trustee would be guilty of a gross breach of trust, should he keep the charity fund in his hands, and not apply it, as it becomes payable, to the objects of the trust (b).

Alienation of the charity estate.

36. Trustees of charities could not as a general rule, even before the restrictions recently imposed, have made an absolute disposition of the charity estate: they could not, for instance, have parted with lands to a purchaser, and have substituted instead the reservation of a rent (c). And as the trustees could not have aliened absolutely, so they could not have accomplished the same end indirectly by demising for long terms of years as for 999 years (d); or for terms of ordinary duration, with covenants for perpetual renewal (e): or by granting reversionary terms (f).

Where allowable.

37. But there was no positive rule that in no instance could an absolute disposition be made, for then the Court itself could not have authorized such an act—a jurisdiction which, it is acknowledged, has from time to time been exercised in special cases. "I do not doubt," observed Sir J. Wigram, "the existence of this power in the Court: the trustees have the power to sell at law, they can convey the legal estate, but it is only a Court of equity that can recall the property, and if that Court should sanction a sale it would be bound to protect the purchaser" (g). The true principle was, that an absolute disposition was then only to be considered a breach of trust when the proceeding was inconsistent with a provident administration of the estate for the benefit of the charity (h). And the transaction was strongly assumed to be improvident as against a purchaser until he had established the contrary (a).

Recent charity Acts.

38. Now under the provisions of the recent Acts, the Charity Commissioners are empowered on application made to them to authorize the sale or exchange of any part of the charity property (b), and the trustees are restricted from any sale, mortgage or charge, without the consent of the Commissioners (c). But this does not interfere with the powers of trustees of charities to sell under railway and other public Acts, where the legislature has made proper provision for the due application of the purchase-monies (d).

Sales to railway companies.

Power of trustees to pass the legal estate.

39. By another Act, "a majority of two-thirds of the trustees of any charity assembled at a meeting of their body duly constituted, and having power to determine on any sale, exchange, partition, mortgage, lease, or other disposition of any property of the charity," are empowered to pass the legal estate for giving effect to such disposition (e).

Re-investment of sale monies.

40. Where a sale or exchange is effected under the Charity Acts, the purchase or exchange monies may be laid out with the consent of the Commissioners in the purchase of other lands without a licence in mortmain (f). But the Act is silent as to the requirement of 9 G. 2. c. 36 (repealed but substantially re-enacted by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), and the conveyance should therefore be by deed attested by two witnesses, and enrolled in the Central Office of the Supreme Court within six calendar months (g).

to be created, but as to the legal estate expressed to be conveyed (a).]

Investment of accumulations in land.

41. Where there are accumulations from a charity estate, the Court, considering the purchase of land with personal estate belonging to charity to be opposed to the general policy of the law, will not as a general rule sanction such an investment (b). But there is nothing illegal in such an investment, if accompanied with the required formalities; and therefore should a highly beneficial purchase offer itself, the trustees would, it is conceived, run no risk in so investing the accumulations (c). Indeed the Court itself has made such orders where the purchase of the land was not the main object, but incidental to a general scheme, as for the enlargement of a school (d). But in every case where by conveyance inter vivos land comes into mortmain for the first time, such conveyance must be by deed executed in the presence of at least two witnesses, and inrolled within six calendar months from the execution (e). Even where the land of a charity, whether vested in the corporation or in trustees, is taken by a public company, and the purchase-money is laid out under the direction of the Court in the purchase of other lands upon the like trusts, the deed must be inrolled (f).

Inrolment.

Loans of charity money on mortgage.

42. Trustees of a charity may lend the trust fund upon a mortgage of real estate, though a legal condition is expressly reserved, and though after default an equity of redemption arises by the rules of equity, the statute (g), which avoids conveyances to a charity containing any reservation or condition for the benefit of the grantor, being held not to apply to such a case (h). But of course care should be taken that the mortgage is by indenture attested by two witnesses, and inrolled. The Court itself on one occasion, when its attention had been directed to the question, authorized the trustees of a charity to lend on mortgage (i).

holding monies in trust for any public or charitable purpose, may invest them on any real security authorized by, or consistent with, the trust, and the requirements of the Mortmain Act are dispensed with. But upon foreclosure or release of the equity of redemption, the land is to be held upon trust to be converted into money, and to be sold accordingly.

[44. By the Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act, 1868, a body of trustees may be appointed in any parish for the purpose of accepting by bequest, donation, contract or otherwise, and of holding any contributions which may be given to them for ecclesiastical purposes in the parish. The trustees are to consist of the incumbent and two house-holders or owners or occupiers of land in the parish, one to be chosen by the patron and the other by the Bishop of the diocese; and the trustees so appointed are to be a body corporate with perpetual succession and a common seal (a).] [Church trustees.]

45. Trustees of charities cannot grant leases to or in trust for one of themselves, for no trustee can be a tenant to himself, and the Court will charge him with an occupation rack-rent (b). Where two trustees were expressly authorized by the will to grant a lease to themselves, or either of them, with the consent of the tenant for life, and one of them took a lease with such consent accordingly, which was fair and proper, but it was found in effect that the relative characters of trustee and lessee were inconsistent, and led to inconveniences, the Court removed the trustee at the instance of the cestuis que trust, on the ground of the repugnant characters in this particular case of trustee and tenant; and though the trustee offered to surrender the lease, the Court, as it was beneficial to the cestuis que trust, held him to it, and dismissed him from the trust (c). Lease to a trustee.

46. Trustees should be cautious how they grant leases to their own relations, for that circumstance is calculated to excite a suspicion, which, if confirmed by any other fact, it might require a strong case to remove (d). Relations.

47. So a lease should not contain any covenant for the private advantage of the trustee; as where a corporation directed the insertion of a covenant that the lessee should grind at the corporation mill, in a suit for the establishment of the charity the corporation were, for this instance of misbehaviour, disallowed their costs (a).

Fines or rack-rent.

48. Where trustees have a power given to them in general terms to grant leases, it is said that they may take fines or reserve rents as, according to the circumstances of the case, may be most beneficial to the charity (b). If the trust estate held on lease increase in value upon the outlay of the tenant, the trustee is not called upon immediately to raise the tenant's rent, for such a practice would obviously prevent any improvement of the property (c). Nor if the value of the estate increase from the rise of agricultural produce will the trustee be personally liable, because he neglects for a few months to raise the rent; but if he wilfully continues the old rent when clearly a much higher rent can be obtained, he may be held responsible (d).

Adequate consideration.

49. In granting leases of charity lands care must be taken that the lease be for an adequate consideration, and if this be not observed, the Court will interfere and order the lease to be cancelled, and with the lease will also cancel the covenants (e).

Leases at an under-value.

50. The lease may be annulled on the mere ground of under-value (f); but it must be an under-value satisfactorily proved and considerable in amount: it is not enough to show that a little more might have been got for the estate than has been actually obtained; still less is it sufficient to infer the underletting from the value of the property at some subsequent period (g).

"Rent not to be raised."

51. Even where it was ordained at the creation of the trust, that no lease should be made for above twenty-one years, and the rent should not be raised, it was held that the trustee would not be justified in granting leases from time to time at no more than the original reservation: that as the times alter and the price of provisions rises, the rent ought to be raised in proportion (h). part of the charity, and in fact is void in itself for perpetuity (a).

Under-value must be fraudulent to render the lease impeachable.

52. In considering the question of value it must be remembered that the case of a charity estate is one in which of all others, the security of the rent is the first point to be regarded, and therefore the inadequacy of the amount reserved is less a badge of fraud in this than it would be in almost any other instance (b). And Lord Eldon desired it might not be considered to be his opinion that a tenant who had got a lease of charity lands at too low a rate with reference to the actual value was therefore to be turned out, if it appeared he had himself acted fairly and honestly. The only ground for so dealing with him would be some evidence or presumption of collusion or corruption of motive (c).

Compensation for the under-value.

53. When leases are set aside for under-value and the Court awards a compensation to the charity for the loss which has been sustained by the charity through the collusion of the trustees and the tenant, the burden will fall upon the trustees or the tenant according to the circumstances of the case (d). For whatever length of time renewals of leases of charity lands upon payment of fines certain may have been granted, and though in pursuance of a scheme settled by the Courts, the tenants have gained no right, and cannot insist upon any further renewals (e). But if money has been laid out in improvements upon the faith of renewals, and the lessees have not been recouped their outlay by any subsequent enjoyment of the property, the Court, in the charity scheme, will have regard to their claims (f).

Unreasonable extent of the lease.

54. A lease of charity lands may also be invalidated on the ground of the unreasonable extent of the term. The duration of the lease should be such only as is consistent with the fair and provident management of the estate (g). It was therefore always a direct violation of duty to grant a lease for one thousand years (h), not only on the ground before noticed that such a demise would in effect be an absolute alienation, but also on the principle that no private proprietor would choose to debar himself from profiting by the progressive improvement of the property. Sir Thomas Plumer observed, "The compensation which the trustees receive may be adequate at the date of the contract, but they are precluded for one thousand years from any advantage of increased value. It is true they are secured from diminution, and in some instances to guard against fluctuation may be as much the interest of one party as the other; but that would be an answer to all cases in which the trustees have made an alienation at a fixed rent. At the same time," continued his Honour, "it is just to say, that these principles seem not to have been acted upon at so early a period as 1670. In many cases in Duke's collection the Court acted on inadequacy of value, in none on mere extent of term" (a).

Husbandry leases.

55. Husbandry or farm leases should not be granted for a term certain exceeding twenty-one years (b). But neither is this rule to be taken as absolutely inflexible; and where the alienation is for any longer period, as for ninety-nine years, the Court will put it upon those who are dealing for and with the charity estate to show the reasonableness of such a transaction, for primâ facie it is unreasonable: there is no instance of a power in a marriage settlement to lease for ninety-nine years, except with reference to very particular circumstances; the ordinary husbandry lease is for twenty-one years (c).

Leases determinable upon lives.

56. In Attorney-General v. Cross (d), the trustees had been in the habit of granting leases for ninety-nine years, determinable on lives, in consideration of fines and the reservation of a small rent, a mode of letting very general in the county where the lands were situate, and which was proved to have been adopted by the founder himself. A bill was filed to set aside such a lease, but Sir W. Grant said, "I am not aware of any principle or authority on which it can be held that such a lease is on the very face of it a breach of trust. The legislature has, both in enabling and disabling statutes, considered leases for three lives as on a footing with leases for twenty-one years absolute. So have the founders of charities, who prohibited the letting on lease for more than three lives, or twenty-one years." And his Honour dismissed the bill, and allowed the trustees their costs out of the charity estate.

Leases for lives.

57. In a later case, where charity lands had for two hundred years been let for lives upon a fine or foregift at a small reserved rent, Lord Langdale said there was no principle that a lease of a charitable estate for lives was, on the face of it, a breach of trust; and as there appeared no other ground of invalidating the leases, he refused to set them aside (a).

Building leases.

58. Building leases should be for a term not exceeding sixty, or ninety, or ninety-nine years (b). If granted for a longer period, it would be thrown upon the parties to show the reasonableness of the prolonged term from the particular circumstances of the case.

Founder's intention.

59. What has been said as to the proper duration of leases is of course only applicable where the founder himself has not otherwise given directions, for in general the will of the settlor, where explicit, must be strictly followed; as if the terms of the endowment be that the charity estates shall be let only for twenty-one years, the trustees, though satisfied that leases for ninety-nine years would be more beneficial, could not make such a deviation from the directions of the trust without the sanction of the Court. It was said on one occasion, with reference to such variations from the founder's intention, that the Court itself could not give a good title to the lessee, but that it required the authority of an Act of Parliament (c). It is plain, however, that there is a wide distinction between a deviation from the founder's intention as to the objects of the charity, and a deviation from the directions as to management, which were no doubt originally meant to be governed by circumstances.

the permanent improvement of the property, the Court will direct an inquiry to what extent the charity estate has been benefited, and will allow the holder of the lease the amount of the benefit found (a).

Late Acts.

61. By the Charitable Trusts Acts the Charity Commissioners are empowered to authorize the grant by charity trustees of building, repairing, improving, mining or other leases (b), and the trustees are restricted from granting without the sanction of the Commissioners "any lease in reversion after more than three years of any existing term, or for any term of life, or in consideration wholly or in part of any fine, or for any term of years exceeding twenty-one years" (c). [A lease for more than twenty-one years made without the required consent does not enure for any purpose, but is absolutely void (d).

[Agricultural Holdings Act.]

62. The powers conferred by the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, on a landlord in respect of charging the land are not to be exercised by trustees for ecclesiastical or charitable purposes, except with the previous approval in writing of the Charity Commissioners (e).]

Power of majority to pass legal estate.

63. By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, it is enacted that "where the trustees or persons acting in the administration of any charity have power to determine on any sale, exchange, partition, mortgage, lease, or other disposition of any property of the charity, a majority of those trustees or persons who are present at a meeting of their body duly constituted, and vote on the question, shall have and be deemed to have always had full power to execute and do all such assurances, acts, and things as may be requisite for carrying any such sale, exchange, partition, mortgage, lease, or disposition into effect; and all such assurances, acts and things shall have the same effect as if they were respectively executed and done by all such trustees or persons for the time being, and by the official trustee of charity lands" (f). The majority, therefore, in those cases of charity can bind the estate not only in equity but at law also, and that, whether the legal estate be vested in the trustees or other the persons aforesaid, or in the official trustee of charity lands.

Charities may be incorporated.

64. By "The Charitable Trustees Incorporation Act, 1872" (35 & 36 Vict. c. 24), it is enacted by s. 1, that from the date of the Act the trustees or trustee for the time being of any charity, may apply to the Charity Commissioners for a certificate of registration, and the Commissioners may grant such certificate subject to such conditions and directions as they may think fit as to the qualifications and number of the trustees, their tenure or avoidance of office, and the mode of appointing new trustees, and the custody and use of the common seal, and thereupon the trustees shall become a body corporate, by the name described in the certificate, and may sue and be sued in their corporate name, and hold, acquire, convey, assign, and demise any present or future property of the charity as the trustees might have done before the incorporation. But the Act is not to extend, modify, or control the Act of 9th Geo. II. c. 36.

By section 2, the certificate of incorporation is to vest in the body corporate all the real and personal estate belonging to the charity, or held in trust for it; and persons in whose names any stocks, funds, or securities are standing in trust for the charity, are to transfer the same into the name of the body corporate; but, if such property be copyhold, liable to the payment of a fine or heriot on the death or alienation of the tenant, the lord of the manor shall receive a corresponding fine or heriot on the granting of the certificate, and a like fine or heriot at the expiration of every subsequent period of forty years. But the certificate is not to vest in the body corporate any stocks, funds, or securities held by the official trustees of charitable funds, which are not to be transferable except under an order of the Commissioners, and by ordinary transfer or assignment.

By the 4th section, the Commissioners are to see that proper trustees have been appointed before they grant the certificate, and after the grant the trusteeship is to be duly kept up, and a return of the names of the trustees is to be made at the expiration of every five years.

By the 5th section, the trustees of the charity, notwithstanding their incorporation, shall continue chargeable for such property as shall come to their hands, and be answerable for their own acts, receipts, neglects, and defaults, and for the due administration of the charity.

By the 10th section, donations and dispositions in favour of the charity by deed, will, or otherwise, shall take effect as if the same had been made to the charity by its corporate name.

By the 11th section, contracts by the trustees of a charity which would have been valid and binding if no incorporation had taken place, shall be valid and binding though not made under the seal of the body corporate.

Exempted charities.

65. It should be noticed that the Universities and the Colleges thereof, and various other bodies of a charitable description, and charitable institutions wholly maintained by voluntary contributions (which expression is used in contradistinction to the term endowments (a)), are excepted from the operation of the Charitable Trusts Acts (b).

Roman Catholic charities.

66. Charities the funds of which are applicable exclusively for the benefit of Roman Catholics were originally exempted for a period of two years, which was afterwards repeatedly extended, and by the latest of these Acts was extended to July 1st, 1860 (c). Roman Catholic charities have therefore now fallen within the operation of the Charitable Trusts Acts.

[Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891.]

[67. By the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (d), the definition of "land" contained in the Act of 1888 (e) is varied by excluding therefrom "money secured on land or other personal estate arising from or connected with land;" and it is provided that land may be assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use, but such land, notwithstanding anything in the will contained to the contrary, is to be sold within one year from the death of the testator, or such extended period as may be determined by the High Court, or any judge thereof sitting at chambers, or by the Charity Commissioners. If the limited time expires without completion of the sale, provision is made for sale by the order of the Charity Commissioners (f). Personal estate directed to be laid out in land for the benefit of a charity, may be held as though there had been no such direction (g), and the Court, or judge in chambers, or Charity Commissioners may sanction the retention or acquisition of land which is required for actual occupation for the purposes of the charity, and not as an investment (h).]

CHAPTER XXII.

OF TRUSTEES UNDER THE SETTLED LAND ACTS.

UNDER the Settled Land Act, 1882 (a), fundamental changes have been introduced in dealing with and disposing of Settled Estates, the powers which under the old law were usually given to the trustees of the settlement, and in some cases much more extensive powers, having been conferred on tenants for life and other limited owners. With a view, probably, to the protection of the remaindermen (though such protection has not been satisfactorily provided for), a class of trustees has been called into existence whose duties arise under the Act; but these duties are, with a few exceptions, to which attention will be drawn, principally of a ministerial nature, and do not involve the exercise of discretion. In the present chapter we propose to treat of the position and duties of these trustees; but incidentally to this it will be necessary to refer to the principal provisions of the Act, and to glance at the important changes which have been introduced by it.

[Definition of settlement.]

1. The term "settlement" is defined by sect. 2 of the Act, which provides (b) that "any deed, will, agreement for a settlement, or other agreement, covenant to surrender, copy of court roll, Act of Parliament, or other instrument, or any number of instruments, whether made or passed before or after, or partly before and partly after, the commencement of this Act, under or by virtue of which instrument or instruments any land or any estate or interest in land, stands for the time being limited to or in trust for any persons by way of succession, creates or is for the purposes of this Act a settlement." It is further provided

(a) 45 & 46 Vict. c. 38; amended by the Settled Land Acts, 1884, 1887, 1889, and 1890 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 18; 50 & 51 Vict. c. 30; 52 & 53 Vict. c. 36; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), all which Acts may (see sec. 2 of the Act of 1890) be cited as the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890.

that an estate or interest in remainder or reversion not disposed of by a settlement, and reverting to the settlor, or descending to the testator's heir, is for the purposes of the Act an estate or interest coming to the settlor or heir under or by virtue of the settlement, and comprised in the subject of the settlement (a), and that the determination of the question whether land is settled land for the purposes of the Act is governed by the state of facts and the limitations of the settlement at the time of the settlement taking effect (b).

From this definition it will be seen that a single "settlement" may be created by several instruments, and it has been held that a settlement of land and a subsequent will devising other land to the uses of the settlement, and bequeathing money to be invested in the purchase of land to be settled to the same uses, constitute together one settlement (c). And where four estates were settled on the same tenant for life with remainders to three different sets of uses, one estate being subjected to a long term of years for payment off of incumbrances on all four estates, and, subject to the term, being divided into moieties which were respectively subjected to the same uses as two of the other estates, it was held that one of the last two estates, together with one of the moieties, constituted one settled estate notwithstanding the interposition of the term (d).

Where, however, there is an original settlement complete in itself, and derivative settlements have afterwards been made by persons who take interests which have not yet fallen into possession under the original settlement, the original settlement alone is the settlement for the purposes of the Act (e), but by the Settled Land Act, 1890 (f), it is specially provided that every instrument whereby a tenant for life, in consideration of marriage, or as part or by way of any family arrangement, not being a security for payment of money advanced, makes an assignment of or creates a charge upon his estate or interest under the settlement is to be deemed one of the instruments creating the settlement; and the enactment is to apply and have effect with respect to every disposition before as well as after the passing of the Act, unless inconsistent with the nature or terms of the disposition.

(f) 53 & 54 Vict. c. 69, s. 4.

2. The trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act may either be nominated by the settlement itself, or appointed by the Court; and sect. 2 of the Act of 1882 (a), provides that "the persons, if any, who are for the time being, under a settlement, trustees with power of sale of settled land, or with power of consent to or approval of the exercise of such a power of sale, or if under a settlement there are no such trustees, then the persons, if any, for the time being, who are by the settlement declared to be trustees thereof for the purposes of the Act, are for the purposes of the Act trustees of the settlement." From this definition it appears that in the case of settlements created before the Act, trustees with a power of sale, or a power of consenting to or approving of a sale, if there are any such trustees, and they only, are "trustees of the settlement" within the meaning of the Act. But trustees to whom personal estate has been bequeathed upon trust to convert it and invest the proceeds in the purchase of real estate to be settled strictly, are not trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Act (b). [Trustees of the settlement.]

Trustees with a power of sale exercisable with the consent of the tenant for life are within the Act (c). But in a case in Ireland it has been held that trustees with a power of sale exercisable with the consent of a person whose consent cannot be obtained, are not within the Act (d), but the soundness of this decision may fairly be questioned.

Where personal estate is settled so that the trustees have authority to vary the investments, and after-acquired real estate is settled by reference upon the same trusts, the trustees, having an implied power of sale, fall within the definition of trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Act (e), and executors or trustees who, under a charge of debts, have an over-riding power to sell settled land, seem to be trustees for the purposes of the Act. [Implied power.] [Executors with charge of debts.]

Trustees with a power of sale of the settled real estate are trustees of the settlement for all the purposes of the Act, including the sale of heirlooms, to which the power of sale in the settlement does not extend (f). [As to heirlooms.]

In instruments since the Act it is usual and proper to appoint expressly trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Act.

time being no trustees of the settlement within the meaning of or for the purposes of the Act of 1882, then the following persons shall, for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, be trustees of the settlement; namely, (1) The persons (if any) who are for the time being under the settlement trustees, with power of or upon trust for sale of any other land comprised in the settlement and subject to the same limitations as the land to be sold, or with power of consent to or approval of the exercise of such power of sale, or, if there be no such persons, then (2) The persons (if any) who are for the time being under the settlement trustees with future power of sale, or under a future trust for sale of the land to be sold, or with power of consent to or approval of the exercise of such a future power of sale, and whether the power or trust takes effect in all events or not.

[Trustees of land comprised in the settlement and subject to the same limitations.]

[Trustees with future power of sale.]

3. Where there are no trustees of the settlement within the statutory definition, or where in any other case it is expedient for the purposes of the Act that new trustees of a settlement should be appointed, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the tenant for life, or of any other person having, under the settlement, an estate or interest in the settled land, in possession, remainder or otherwise, or, in the case of an infant, of his testamentary or other guardian or next friend, appoint fit persons to be trustees under the settlement for the purposes of the Act (a).

[Appointment by the Court.]

The persons appointed by the Court, and the survivors and survivor of them, while continuing to be trustees or trustee, and until the appointment of new trustees the personal representatives or representative for the time being of the last surviving or continuing trustee, are for the purposes of the Act the trustees or trustee of the settlement (b).

[Survival of powers.]

The exercise of this power is in the discretion of the Court, and it has been laid down in a case in Ireland, that, upon an application under this section to appoint trustees, the Court should not only require to be satisfied of the fitness of the proposed trustees, but also that the purpose for which their appointment is asked is such as to render such appointment safe and beneficial to all parties interested. And where the application was with a view to having

In a case of In re Cox and Yeadon, noted 91 L. T. p. 241, it was held by Chitty, J., in chambers, that a tenant for life, who was also one of the trustees, with a power of sale not taking effect until the death of such tenant for life, could make a good title under sec. 16 of the Act of 1890.

a large fund taken out of Court and invested upon mortgage of lands in Ireland, it was refused (a).

Where a trustee who had been appointed by the Court was desirous of retiring on the ground of ill health the Court appointed a new trustee in his place (b), observing that it was very doubtful, to say the least, whether a valid appointment could be made by the continuing trustee under sect. 31 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c).

[Application of Conveyancing Act as to appointment of trustees.]

It is, however, now provided by the Settled Land Act, 1890 (d), sect. 17, that all the powers and provisions contained in the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, with reference to the appointment of new trustees, and the discharge and retirement of trustees, are to apply to and include trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, whether appointed by the Court or by the settlement, or under provisions contained in the settlement, and this enactment applies and is to have effect with respect to an appointment or a discharge and retirement of trustees taking place before as well as after the passing of the Act, and is not to render invalid or prejudice any appointment or any discharge and retirement of trustees effected before the passing of the Act, otherwise than under the provisions of the Act of 1881.

[Application to Court by summons.]

The application to the Court should be by summons, which should be served on the trustees (if any), and also on the tenant for life, if he is not the applicant, but not on any other person unless the Judge so directs (e).

[Solicitor of tenant for life not appointed trustee.]

As the appointment of trustees is required to impose a check upon the extensive powers conferred upon the tenant for life, and sect. 44 contemplates the probability of there being differences between the trustees and the tenant for life, the Court will not appoint any member of the firm of solicitors who act for the tenant for life (f), and à fortiori will not appoint the actual tenant for life, or any person who may become tenant for life (a), such as a tenant for life in remainder (b), to be a trustee of the settlement.

[Infant's share in unconverted realty.]

The share of an infant under the Statute of Distributions in realty which has been improperly allowed to remain unconverted, is settled land within the meaning of the Act (c), so as to enable the Court, under sect. 38, to appoint trustees to exercise the powers of the Act; but the order appointing the trustees will be made without prejudice to any question as to the interests of the infants (d).

[Tenant for life a lunatic.]

Where a tenant for life is a lunatic, and his committee applies, under sect. 62 of the Act, for an order enabling him to exercise the powers of the Act, and no trustees are in existence, new trustees must be appointed for the purposes of the Act, and be served with notice of the application (e).

[Payment of capital money to trustees.]

4. By sect. 39, sub-sect. (1), capital money arising under the Act is not to be paid to fewer than two persons as trustees of a settlement, unless the settlement authorizes the receipt of capital trust money of the settlement by one trustee. But subject thereto, by sub-sect. (2), the provisions of the act referring to the trustees of a settlement apply to the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee of the settlement for the time being.

Where trustees have an implied power of sale over realty settled by reference to trusts of personal estate, and power is given by the settlement to the trustees or trustee to act and give receipts for moneys subject to the trusts of the settlement, the case falls within the exception of sect. 39, sub-sect. (1), and a single trustee may receive the purchase-money of the real estate arising from a sale by the tenant for life (f).

[Tenant for life.]

5. We will next advert to the position of the tenant for life, and the powers given by the Act to the tenant for life, under which term we shall include not only the person or persons beneficially entitled to the possession of the settled land, or the receipt of the income thereof for his life (g), but also the limited owners, who, under sect. 58, have the powers of a tenant for life under the Act.

(g) See sect. 2, sub-ss. (5) and (10) (i).

It may here be remarked that by sect. 2, the tenant for life is defined to be "the person for the time being under a settlement beneficially entitled to possession (a) of settled land for his life" (b); and "if there are two or more persons so entitled as tenants in common, or as joint tenants, or for other concurrent estates or interests, they together constitute the tenant for life for the purposes of the Act" (c); and a person who is "tenant for life within the foregoing definition is to be deemed such, notwithstanding that, under the settlement or otherwise, the settled land, or his estate or interest therein, is incumbered or charged in any manner or to any extent;" and, by sub-sect. (10), possession includes receipt of income. [Defined.]

6. By sect. 58, sub-sect. (1), the powers of a tenant for life are given to each of the following persons, when his estate or interest is in possession (d), namely:— [Persons having powers of tenant for life.]

(1) A tenant in tail, including a tenant in tail who is by Act of Parliament restrained from barring or defeating his estate tail, although the reversion is in the Crown, and so that the exercise by him of his powers shall bind the Crown, but not including such a tenant in tail where the land in respect whereof he is so restrained was purchased with money provided by Parliament in consideration of public services.

(2) A tenant in fee simple, with an executory limitation, gift, or disposition over, on failure of his issue, or in any other event.

(3) A person entitled to a base fee, although the reversion is in the Crown, and so that the exercise by him of his powers shall bind the Crown.

(a) The words "entitled to possession" mean entitled "in possession," as distinguished from entitled "in reversion;" Re Atkinson, 30 Ch. D. 605; 31 Ch. Div. 577.

(b) Where there is a trust for accumulation of rents during the life of the tenant for life, who is also heir-at-law, and as such entitled to the residue of the life estate after the expiration of the period limited by the Thellusson Act, the heir-at-law is tenant for life under the Settled Land Act; Re Atherton, W. N. (1891), p. 85.

(c) This must be compared with section 19, which provides that where the settled land comprises an undivided share, or, under the settlement the settled land has come to be held in undivided shares, the tenant for life may join or concur to any extent necessary or proper for any purpose of the Act, with any person entitled to or having power or right of disposition of or over another undivided share. Where two shares are comprised in the same settlement, and one has become vested in an owner in fee, the tenant for life of the other share cannot sell without the concurrence of such owner in fee; Re Collinge's Settled Estates, 36 Ch. D. 516. As to sales by trustees in such a case, see post, Chap. xxiii. s. 2, v.

(d) These words refer to possession as contrasted with reversion or remainder, not to personal possession as contrasted with possession by another person; Re Morgan, 24 Ch. D. 114, 116; Re Jones, 26 Ch. Div. 736, 741, 744.

(4) A tenant for years determinable on life, not holding merely under a lease at a rent.

(5) A tenant for the life of another, not holding merely under a lease at a rent.

(6) A tenant for his own or any other life, or for years determinable on life, whose estate is liable to cease in any event during that life, whether by expiration of the estate, or by conditional limitation, or otherwise, or to be defeated by an executory limitation, gift, or disposition over, or is subject to a trust for accumulation of income for payment of debts or other purpose.

(7) A tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct.

(8) A tenant by the curtesy (a).

(9) A person entitled (b) to the income of land under a trust or direction for payment thereof to him during his own or any other life, whether subject to expenses of management or not (c), or until sale of the land, or until forfeiture of his interest therein on bankruptcy or other event.

[Tenant in fee with executory gift over.]

7. Under this sub-section it has been held that, where estates were devised to the use of trustees upon trust to pay the net income to the testator's wife, for the maintenance, education, and benefit of the testator's son until he should attain twenty-one, and without being liable to account to the trustees or to the son for the same, and upon the son's attaining twenty-one, then upon trust for him absolutely, but if he should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, then upon other trusts, the infant son had the powers of a tenant for life, as being within the meaning of clause (2) tenant in fee simple, with an executory limitation over in the event of his death under twenty-one without issue (d).

[Lease for years given to one for life.]

A gift of an estate, comprised in a lease for years, to a person during the remainder of the term, if he shall so long live, is not within either clause (4) or clause (6) of the sub-section, and the devisee cannot exercise the powers of a tenant for life under the Act (e).

[Tenant for life or years determinable.]

Again, under clause (6) it has been held that a person to whom an estate is devised "so long as he shall reside in my present dwelling-house or upon some part of my B. estate for not less than three months in each year after he shall become entitled to the actual possession thereof" is within the sub-section (a). But the sub-section does not include the case where the property is vested in trustees upon trust during the life of A. to apply the income for the benefit of A. and of his wife and children, or for the benefit of any one or more of them with a direction that, in case A. should assign his interest or do any act whereby he would, if absolutely entitled, be deprived of the enjoyment thereof, the trust in his favour should absolutely cease, and the income should thenceforth during his life be applied by the trustees either for the benefit of A. or for such other purposes and in such manner as the trustees should in their absolute discretion think fit (b).

[Person entitled to income of land.]

Where, subject to a term for raising certain sums, freehold estates were devised to the use of trustees during the life of A., with remainders over, and the trustees were to enter into possession, and during the life of A. manage the property and pay all expenses and outgoings, and keep down the interest on charges, and pay an annuity, and then pay the ultimate residue of the rents and profits to A., and the income was insufficient after payment of the outgoings and interest to pay the annuity, it was held that A. came within clause (9), and had the powers of a tenant for life (c). So where estates were limited to trustees for a term of 1300 years, and subject thereto to A. for life, with remainders over in strict settlement, and the trusts of the term were to raise portions, to pay annuities, including an annuity to A., and to apply the residue as a sinking fund to pay off mortgage debts and other charges, and the trustees were, "during the continuance of the trusts," to enter into and hold possession of the rents and profits of the estate, and "not deliver the same to any person beneficially interested in any part thereof," and manage the estate as therein mentioned, and full powers of management were given to the trustees, and they were also given such other powers over the estate as were given to a tenant for life in possession by the Settled Land Act, 1882, it was held that A. was a tenant for life or a person having the powers of a tenant for life within the meaning of the Act, and that the trustees could not sell or enfranchise without his consent, as required by sect. 56 of the Act (a).

[Tenant for life whose interest is only to arise in futuro.]

But the case is different where by the settlement there is a period of time fixed during which the person claiming to be tenant for life in possession or to exercise the powers of a tenant for life in possession, can have no right to put himself in possession of the estate, or to claim any part of the rents and profits of the estate, however large they may be. Where, therefore, residuary real estate was devised to trustees upon trust during twenty years to manage and improve the estate, and to accumulate or invest unapplied rents, and after the determination of the term to convey to uses under which the testator's son would become tenant for life, it was held that the son during the term could not exercise the powers of a tenant for life. (b)

[Trust for sale of life estate.]

Where the limitation was during the life of A. upon trust to sell the life estate and pay the proceeds after certain deductions to A. and B. as tenants in common, it was held that A. and B. could together exercise the powers of the Act (c).

[Infant absolutely entitled to be deemed tenant for life.]

It may here be observed that by section 59 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, "where a person who is in his own right seised of or entitled in possession to land, is an infant, then for the purposes of this Act the land is settled land, and the infant shall be deemed tenant for life thereof."

[Dealings between tenant for life and the estate.]

8. By the Settled Land Act, 1890 (d), it is provided that where a sale of settled land is to be made to the tenant for life, or a purchase is to be made from him of land to be made subject to the limitations of the settlement, or an exchange is to be made with him of settled land for other land, or a partition is to be made with him of land an undivided share whereof is subject to the limitations of the settlement, the trustees of the settlement shall stand in the place of and represent the tenant for life, and shall, in addition to their powers as trustees, have all the powers of the tenant for life in reference to negotiating and completing the transaction.

[Powers of tenant for life.]

9. Speaking in general terms, the Settled Land Act has not only given to the tenant for life all the powers of disposition of the settled land which were previously given in well-drawn settlements to the tenant for life, or to the trustees with his consent, but has also conferred on him larger and more extended powers, and has effected a complete revolution in the manner of dealing with settled estates, and in the mutual relations of the tenant for life and trustees. Thus the Act has given to the tenant for life an absolute power at his own discretion to sell, enfranchise and exchange the settled land, to grant building, mining, and other leases thereof, to concur in a partition, to accept surrenders of leases, to dedicate parts of the settled land for streets and open spaces, and other similar purposes, and various other powers, the details of which, and the conditions and restrictions upon and subject to which they are exercisable, do not fall within the purview of the present work.

[Cannot be assigned or released.]

10. These powers of the tenant for life are not capable of assignment or release, and do not pass to a person as being by operation of law or otherwise an assignee of a tenant for life, but remain exercisable by the tenant for life after and notwithstanding any assignment of his estate or interest; and a contract by the tenant for life not to exercise any of the powers is void. But the exercise of the powers will be without prejudice to the rights of the assignee for value of the tenant for life's estate or interest; and the assignee's rights are not to be affected without his consent, except that unless the assignee is in actual possession of the settled land or part thereof, his consent is not to be requisite for the making of leases by the tenant for life at the best rent, without fine, and in other respects in conformity with the Act (a).

[Provisions prohibiting exercise of powers are void.]

By sect. 51, any provision in a settlement tending or intended to prohibit or prevent the tenant for life from exercising, or to induce him to abstain from exercising, or to put him into a position inconsistent with his exercising any power under the Act, is to be deemed to be void. A clause which defeats the estate of a tenant for life in case he fails to comply with a condition as to residence on the settled property is within this section (b). But in order to bring a case within the section there must be in the settlement "a limitation which, but for the attempted prohibition, would constitute a tenant for life capable of exercising the powers of the Act" (a). The effect of the section is that "from the time at which a sale or disposition takes place the attempted fetter on the power of the tenant for life is removed;" but until sale or disposition the condition may be good, and the breach of it cause a forfeiture (b). By sect. 52, notwithstanding anything in a settlement, the exercise by the tenant for life of any power under the Act shall not occasion a forfeiture.

(a) Sect. 50. In this section "assignment" includes assignment by way of mortgage, and any partial or qualified assignment, and any charge or incumbrance, and "assignee" has a corresponding meaning. But an assignment by the tenant for life in consideration of marriage, or by way of any family arrangement, is not to be deemed an instrument vesting in any person any right as assignee for value within section 50; see sect. 4 of the Act of 1890, and ante, p. 606.

[Provision against forfeiture.]

11. By sect. 56, the powers conferred by the Act are not to affect prejudicially any powers subsisting under the settlement, or by statute or otherwise, exercisable by a tenant for life, or by trustees, and the powers given by the Act are cumulative, by which is understood that the powers of the settlement, and those under the Act, are co-existent, and that it is optional with the tenant for life to exercise the powers conferred by the Act, or, his consent to the exercise by the trustees of their powers being rendered necessary by sub-sect. (2), to allow the powers under the settlement to be exercised (c).

[Powers of the Act cumulative.]

12. One of the objects of the Act doubtless was to give the tenant for life, in his uncontrolled discretion, large and absolute powers of dealing with and disposing of the settled land, without requiring him to procure the consent of any person interested in remainder, or making him responsible to any one for the exercise of his discretion; subject only to this, that by sect. 53 the tenant for life, in exercising any power under the Act, is to have regard to the interests of all parties entitled under the settlement, and is, in relation to the exercise thereof by him, to be deemed in the position, and to have the duties and liabilities, of a trustee for those parties (d); and that under sect. 44, the trustees, if any difference arises between them and the tenant for life, may obtain the directions of the Court (e).

[Powers of tenant for life absolute.]

[But in exercising them he is in position of a trustee.]

In one of the first and most leading cases decided under the

(a) Per Cotton, L. J., Re Atkinson, 31 Ch. Div. 577, 581, in which case there was a discretionary trust to apply rents during the life of A. for him and others, and it was held that A. never became tenant for life within the Act.

(d) Hatten v. Russell, 38 Ch. D. 334, 342.

(e) The section, it has been said, is rather to be read as imposing the responsibilities of a trustee on the tenant for the life than as conferring on him the rights of a trustee. Per Stirling, J., In re Llewellin, 37 Ch. D. 317.

Act, Pearson, J., when adverting to the absolute power conferred upon the tenant for life of deciding whether or not a sale should take place, said, "there is nothing in the Act to enable the Court to restrain the tenant for life from selling, whether he desires to sell because he is in debt and wishes to increase his income, or whether, without being in debt, he thinks he can increase his income, or whether he desires to sell from mere unwillingness to take the trouble involved in the management of landed property; or whether he acts from worse motives, as from mere caprice or whim, or because he is desirous of doing that which he knows would be very disagreeable to those who expect to succeed him at his death. There is not, so far as I can see, any power, either in the Court or in trustees, to interfere with his power of sale" (a). But in the same case the same learned judge, when referring to the mode in which the sale was to be conducted, said that "a tenant for life, in selling under the Act, must sell as fairly as a trustee must sell for the tenant for life and for those in remainder;" and in another case (b), the present Lord Justice Kay, then Kay, J., said, "I think the meaning of this 53rd section is that, for the security of the remaindermen, as between the tenant for life and them, he, in the exercise of this power shall be treated as a trustee, and shall have all the liabilities of a trustee exercising a like power," and his lordship intimated that if a purchaser knew the tenant for life was exercising the power improperly, and that what he was doing would amount to a breach of trust, the purchaser had a perfect right to refuse to complete. And it has been said by Stirling, J., that it is the duty of the tenant for life, in exercising the discretion which is vested in him under the Act as to the application of capital money, to consider whether he is unduly prejudicing any of the parties by the proposed exercise of that discretion; but where it is a matter of doubt, in the absence of any reason for supposing that the discretion is unfairly exercised, then that discretion ought to prevail (c). And the general conclusion seems to be that the effect of the section is to make the tenant for life, in relation to the exercise of the powers of the Act, a trustee for all parties interested, and therefore subject to the same rules as any other trustee; and liable to the interference of the Court if the exercise of his discretion is affected by improper motives (a).

In a subsequent phase of the leading case already referred to, the remainderman having offered to purchase the estate for 7,500*l.*, and undertaken at the bar not to withdraw his offer, an injunction was granted by Kay, J., to restrain the tenant for life from selling for less than 7,500*l.*, and from entering into any contract (otherwise than by public auction), for sale of the estate, or any part thereof, without first communicating the offer to the remainderman, and giving him two clear days to make an advance on the price offered (b).

On the other hand, it has been said that the section is rather to be read as imposing the responsibilities of a trustee on the tenant for life than as conferring on him the rights of a trustee (c), and he is not necessarily entitled to costs on the footing of his being a trustee (d).

[Effect of judgment in action to execute trusts.]

The fact that a judgment has been given in a pending action for the execution of the trusts of a will or settlement of realty, will not prevent a tenant for life thereunder from exercising the powers of the Act without procuring the consent of the Court. To require such consent would be to impose a fetter on the free alienation by the tenant for life inconsistent with the spirit and terms of the Act (e).

[Notice to trustees.]

13. By sect. 45, sub-sect. (1), the tenant for life, when intending to make a sale, exchange, partition, lease (f), mortgage, or charge, is to give notice of his intention to each of the trustees of the settlement, and also to the solicitor for the trustees, if any such solicitor is known to the tenant for life, by registered letter, posted not less than one month before the making by the tenant for life of the sale, exchange, partition, lease, mortgage, or charge, or of a contract for the same; and by sub-sect. (2), at the date of notice given the number of trustees shall not be less than two, unless a contrary intention is expressed in the settlement. Under this section it was held that a general notice of intention to sell or lease all or any part of the settled estate at any time or times as opportunity should occur, was insufficient (a); but by sect. 5 of the Settled Land Act, 1884 (b), it is now provided, by sub-sect. (1), that the notice required by sect. 45 of the Act of 1882 of intention to make a sale, exchange, partition, or lease, may be notice of a general intention in that behalf; but by sub-sect. (2), the tenant for life is, upon request by a trustee of the settlement, to furnish to him such particulars and information as may reasonably be required by him from time to time with reference to sales, exchanges, partitions, or leases effected or in progress, or immediately intended; and the section applies, by sub-sect. (4), to a notice given before, as well as to a notice given after, the passing of the Act; provided, by sub-sect. (5), that no objection to such notice was taken before the passing of the Act.

[General notice sufficient.]

It is to be observed that the Act of 1884 does not extend to the case of notice of intention to make a mortgage or charge; and such a notice, to be valid, must specify the particular mortgage or charge contemplated at the time when the notice is given (c).

[Except as to a mortgage or charge.]

The committee of a lunatic tenant for life cannot give a legal notice under the Act, unless he has previously obtained the sanction of the Court of Lunacy thereto (d).

[Committee of lunatic.]

The giving of the notice, unless waived, is a condition precedent to the exercise of the powers (e). But under the Act of 1884 any trustee, by writing under his hand, may waive notice, either in any particular case or generally, and may accept less than one month's notice (f). And it is conceived that the waiver of notice, or acceptance of shorter notice, if signed by all the trustees, will extend as well to the notice to be given to the trustees' solicitor under the Act of 1882, as to the notice to be given to the trustees themselves.

[Waiver of notice.]

powers are made by the settlement exercisable by the trustees or trustee for the time being, it will be sufficient to give notice, under sect. 45, to a sole surviving or continuing trustee: and the number of trustees need not, for the purposes of the notice, be completed (a).

[Purchaser need not inquire as to notice.]

15. By sect. 45, sub-sect. (3), a person dealing in good faith with the tenant for life is not concerned to inquire respecting the giving of any notice required by that section. As, however, under the Act of 1882 at least a month's notice to the trustees was imperative, it was necessary for any person dealing with the tenant for life to see that there had been, for at least that period, before any dealing took place, proper trustees to whom notice could have been given (b); but a notice to the trustees of an intention to sell, given less than a month before the contract, but more than a month before the day fixed for completion, has been held to be a sufficient compliance with the Act (c). Now, under the Act of 1884 (d), it will be sufficient if the trustees, although more recently appointed, by writing under their hands, either waive notice altogether or accept a shorter notice, and it has been held that the non-existence of trustees for the purposes of the Act is not a defect in the tenant for life's title, but rather a defect of conveyance (e), and that it is therefore sufficient for the protection of a purchaser if, by the time he comes to complete, there are trustees in existence and the required notice has been given.

If a shorter notice is accepted, it may still be sent by registered letter, as provided by the Act of 1882.

It is conceived that it is not essential to the validity of the notice that it should be sent by a registered letter, but that that is only a convenient mode authorized by the Act of serving the notice.

[Duties of trustees on receipt of notice.]

16. We come now to consider what are the duties of trustees of the settlement under the Act after they have received a notice of an intended dealing by the tenant for life, and it is somewhat remarkable that, having regard to the importance attached by the Act to the service on the trustees of notice of any intended dealing by the tenant for life with the settled land, the Act should be silent as to what the trustees on their part ought to do in the interest of the remaindermen when they receive a notice. No doubt if it comes to their knowledge that the tenant for life is contemplating or attempting to commit a fraud—as, for instance, by selling or leasing the property at a gross undervalue under some secret arrangement by which he is to derive a personal benefit, it would be their duty to come to the Court and ask for an injunction to restrain the sale or lease (a). Or if they disapproved of the sale and considered it improvident, it might be their duty to apply to the Court for directions under sect. 44 (b). But if the dealing is not on the face of it fraudulent or improper, there is no obligation on the trustees to inquire into or take any steps in the matter; and in any case they are, by sect. 42, expressly protected from any liability for giving any consent, or for not making, bringing, taking, or doing any such application, action, proceeding, or thing as they might make, bring, take, or do.

On the whole, it seems that the protection afforded to the remaindermen against an improper exercise by the tenant for life of his powers by the appointment of trustees of the settlement, coupled with notice to them under sect. 45, is of a very shadowy nature, and in the majority of cases is of no practical value.

17. There are however some powers which the tenant for life can only put in force either with the consent of the trustees or under an order of the Court, and as to these the trustees before giving their consent must exercise their discretion on behalf of all persons interested. Thus under sect. 10 of the Settled Land Act, 1890 (repealing but re-enacting with variations sect. 15 of the Act of 1882), the principal mansion house (if any) on any settled land, and the pleasure grounds and park and lands (if any) usually occupied therewith, cannot be sold, exchanged, or leased by the tenant for life without such consent or order (c),

(b) Hatten v. Russell, 38 Ch. D. 334, 344.

(c) The section further provides that where a house is usually occupied as a farmhouse, or where the site of any house, and the pleasure grounds and park and lands (if any) usually occupied therewith, do not altogether exceed 25 acres in extent, the house is not to be deemed a principal mansion house within the meaning of the section. The Court will sanction a sale even though the testator has expressly directed that the mansion house is to be kept up as a place of residence for the person for the time being entitled to the possession thereof under his will, and that the heirlooms shall at all times be kept in the mansion house, if a proper case for sale is made out, but the sale will not be sanctioned without proper directions being given for the disposal of the heirlooms. They may, however, be sold under sect. 37, if the [Timber.] and under sect. 35, a tenant for life impeachable for waste in respect of timber, can, on obtaining such consent or order, cut and sell timber ripe and fit for cutting.

[Improvements.] So again sect. 25, enumerates the various improvements which fall under the description of improvements authorized by the Act (a), but by sect. 26, sub-sect. (1), where the tenant for life is tenant for life so desires and the Court approves, Re Brown's Will, 27 Ch. D. 179. But where the tenant for life has mortgaged his life interest to its full value, the Court will not, unless the mortgagees consent, sanction a projected sale without full information as to the circumstances and advisability of the proposed sale, Re Sebright's Settled Estates, 33 Ch. Div. 429. And the leaning of the Court against a sale is as strong as, or stronger than, in the analogous case of heirlooms; Re Marquis of Ailesbury's Settled Estates, W. N. 1891, p. 167. Trustees appointed under sect. 60 during the minority of a tenant for life would, it seems, have an unrestricted power to sell the mansion house, Re Countess of Dudley, 35 Ch. D. 338, at p. 343, per Chitty, J.

(a) These improvements are the making or execution on, or in connection with, and for the benefit of settled land, of any of the following works, or of any works for any of the following purposes, and any operation incident to or necessary or proper in the execution of any of those works, or necessary or proper for carrying into effect any of those purposes, or for securing the full benefit of any of those works or purposes, namely:

(1) Drainage, including the straightening, widening, or deepening of drains, streams, and watercourses.

(2) Irrigation, warping.

(3) Drains, pipes, and machinery for supply and distribution of sewage as manure.

(4) Embanking or weiring from a river or lake, or from the sea, or a tidal water.

(5) Groynes, sea walls, defences against water.

(6) Inclosing, straightening of fences, re-division of fields.

(7) Reclamation, dry warping.

(8) Farm roads, private roads, roads or streets in villages or towns.

(9) Clearing, trenching, planting.

(10) Cottages for labourers, farm-servants and artizans, employed on the settled land or not (and any buildings available for the working classes, the building of which, in the opinion of the Court, is not injurious to the estate, see 48 & 49 Vict. c. 72, s. 11).

(11) Farmhouses, offices, and outbuildings, and other buildings for farm purposes.

(12) Saw-mills, scutch-mills, and other mills, water-wheels, engine-houses, and kilns, which will increase the value of the settled land for agricultural purposes, or as woodland or otherwise.

(13) Reservoirs, tanks, conduits, watercourses, pipes, wells, ponds, shafts, dams, weirs, sluices, and other works and machinery for supply and distribution of water for agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, or for domestic or other consumption.

(14) Tramways, railways, canals, docks.

(15) Jetties, piers, and landing-places on rivers, lakes, the sea, or tidal waters, for facilitating transport of persons and of agricultural stock and produce, and of manure and other things required for agricultural purposes, and of minerals, and of things required for mining purposes.

(16) Markets and market-places.

(17) Streets, roads, paths, squares, gardens, or other open spaces for the use, gratuitously or on payment, of the public or of individuals, or for dedication to the public, the same being necessary or proper in connection with the conversion of land into building land.

(18) Sewers, drains, watercourses, pipe-making, fencing, paving, brick-making, tile-making, and other works necessary or proper in connection with any of the objects aforesaid.

(19) Trial pits for mines, and other preliminary works necessary desirous that capital money arising under the Act, shall be applied in or towards payment for an improvement authorized by the Act (a), he may submit for approval to the trustees of the settlement, or to the Court as the case may require, a scheme for the execution of the improvement showing the proposed expenditure thereon; and by sub-sect. (2), where the capital money to be expended is in the hands of trustees, then, after a scheme is approved by them, the trustees may apply that money in or towards payment for the whole or part of any work or operation comprised in the improvement, on—

(A). A certificate formerly of the land commissioners and now of the Board of Agriculture (b) certifying that the work or operation, or some specified part thereof, has been properly executed, and what amount is properly payable by the trustees in respect thereof, which certificate is to be conclusive in favour of the trustees, as an authority and discharge for any payment made by them in pursuance thereof; or on

(B). A like certificate of a competent engineer or able practical surveyor nominated by the trustees and approved by the Board, or by the Court, which certificate shall be conclusive as aforesaid; or on

(C). An order of the Court directing or authorizing the trustees to so apply a specified portion of the capital money.

[Scheme.] It was essential that the scheme for the proposed works should be submitted by the tenant for life to the trustees before the works were commenced; and if the tenant for life before submitting or proper in connection with development of mines.

(20) Reconstruction, enlargement, or improvement of any of those works.

This sub-section includes additional works for the purpose of the permanent working of mines; e.g. machinery required to guard against influx of water into a coal mine from the probable working of adjoining mines; Re Mundy's Settled Estates, (1891) 1 Ch. (C. A.) 399. Re-roofing may, according to circumstances, come under the head of repairs or permanent improvements; Re Newton's Settled Estates, W. N. 1890, p. 24, where Cotton, L.J., dissented from the opinion expressed by Kay, J., that section 9 of the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114), was more extensive than s. 25 of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

The Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 13, provides that improvements authorized by the Act of 1882 shall include (1) bridges; (2) making any additions to or alterations in buildings reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let; (3) erection of buildings in substitution for buildings within an urban sanitary district taken by a local or other public authority, or for buildings taken under compulsory powers, but so that no more money be expended than the amount received for the buildings taken and the site thereof; (4) the rebuilding of the principal mansion house on the settled land: provided that the sum to be applied under this sub-section shall not exceed one-half of the annual rental of the settled land.

the scheme executed the works at his own expense, the Court could not authorize repayment out of capital money (a). But where a scheme had been approved by the trustees without any express limitation as to the amount of the expenditure, any extra expenditure, over and above the estimated cost, which was incidental to and necessary for the execution of the scheme might be paid out of capital money in the hands of the trustees (b).

Now, by the Settled Land Act, 1890 (c), sect. 15, it is enacted that the Court may, in any case where it appears proper, make an order directing or authorizing capital money to be applied in or towards payment for any improvement, notwithstanding that a scheme was not, before the execution of the improvement, submitted for approval as required by the Act of 1882, to trustees of the settlement or to the Court.

The effect of the Act of 1882 is to give to the tenant for life, with a view to the improvement of the land, a power to require the capital money to be laid out under a proper scheme for such improvement; and that, notwithstanding that there is a trust under which the trustees could apply income for such purpose, the power of the tenant for life being by sect. 56, sub-sect. 2, made paramount over that of the trustees (d).

[Capital money under the Act.]

18. We may here observe that under the term "capital money arising under the Act," are comprised, (1) Money received upon any sale or enfranchisement, or for equality of exchange or partition; (2) Fines received on the grant of leases under any power conferred by the Act of 1882 (e); (3) The proportion of rent under mining leases to be set aside under sect. 11 of the Act of 1882; (4) Money raised on mortgage of the settled land, under sect. 18 of the Act; (5) Three-fourths of the net proceeds of the sale of timber cut under the powers of sect. 35, where the tenant for life is impeachable for waste in respect of timber; (6) Money arising from the sale of heirlooms under sect. 37 of the Act; (7) Money received under an option to purchase contained in a building lease or agreement for a building lease under the Settled Land Act, 1889 (f); and (8) Money which under sect. 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890 (g), the tenant for life is empowered to raise on mortgage of the settled land for the purpose of discharging an incumbrance on such land or any part thereof.

[Money arising from other sources.]

By sect. 32, where under an Act incorporating or applying, wholly or in part, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, or under the Settled Estates Act, 1877, or under any other Act, public, local, personal, or private, money is at the commencement of the Act in Court, or is afterwards paid into Court, and is liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to a settlement, then, in addition to any mode of dealing therewith authorized by the Act under which the money is in Court, that money may be invested or applied as capital money arising under the Settled Land Act. And by sect. 33, where, under a settlement (a), money is in the hands of trustees (b), and is liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to the settlement, then, in addition to such powers of dealing therewith as the trustees have independently of the Act, they may, at the option of the tenant for life, invest or apply the same as capital money arising under the Act.

[Application of capital money.]

19. By sect. 21, capital money arising under the Act, subject to payment of claims properly payable thereout, and to application thereof for any special authorized object for which the same was raised, is when received (c) to be invested or applied in one or more of the following modes:—

(1) In investment on Government securities, or on other securities on which the trustees of the settlement are by the settlement or by law (d) authorized to invest trust money of the settlement, or on the security of the bonds, mortgages, or debentures, or in the purchase of the debenture stock, of any railway company in Great Britain or Ireland incorporated by special

(a) For the definition of "settlement," see ante, p. 605.

(b) It has been held in Ireland that this section does not apply to money in Court in an administration action, which has arisen from personal estate given to trustees upon trust to convert and to invest the proceeds in the purchase of lands to be settled; Burke v. Gore, 13 L. R. Ir. 367; but it applies where, under a will devising land to the uses of a settlement, the executors are directed to lay out money bequeathed by the will in the purchase of land to be limited to the same uses; Re Mundy's Settled Estates, (1891) 1 Ch. C. A. 399, and see ante, p. 338. Money arising from sale of land inalienably entailed by statute was ordered to be paid to trustees appointed under sec. 38; Re Bolton, 52 L. T. N.S. 728; W. N. 1885, p. 90.

(c) The words of the Act being "when received," the Court cannot create a charge on capital moneys before they are received. Thus the Court declined to authorize trustees to raise a sum of money to stock and work a derelict farm, part of a settled estate which they had contracted to sell at a future date; see Round v. Turner, W. N. 1889, p. 38; 60 L. T. N.S. 379.

Act of Parliament, and having for ten years next before the date of investment paid a dividend on its ordinary stock or shares, with power to vary the investment into or for any other such securities.

(2) In discharge, purchase, or redemption of incumbrances affecting the inheritance of the settled land, or other the whole estate the subject of the settlement, or of land-tax, rent-charge in lieu of tithe, Crown-rent, chief rent, or quit-rent, charged on or payable out of the settled land.

(3) In payment for any improvement authorized by the Act (a.)

(4) In payment for equality of exchange or partition of settled land.

(5) In purchase of the seignory of any part of the settled land, being freehold land, or in purchase of the fee simple of any part of the settled land, being copyhold or customary land.

(6) In purchase of the reversion or freehold in fee of any part of the settled land, being leasehold land held for years, or life, or years determinable on life.

(7) In purchase of land in fee simple, or of copyhold or customary land, or of leasehold land held for sixty years or more unexpired at the time of purchase, subject or not to any exception or reservation of or in respect of mines or minerals therein, or of or in respect of rights or powers relative to the working of mines or minerals therein or in other land.

(8) In purchase, either in fee simple, or for a term of sixty years or more, of mines and minerals convenient to be held or worked with the settled land, or of any easement, right, or privilege convenient to be held with the settled land for mining or other purposes.

(9) In payment to any person becoming absolutely entitled or empowered to give an absolute discharge (b).

(10) In payment of costs, charges, and expenses of or incidental to the exercise of any of the powers, or the execution of any of the provisions, of the Act.

(a) For the authorized improvements, see ante, p. 622, note (b).

(b) As to the effect of this enactment in enabling the Court to direct payment out of Court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, of purchase moneys of settled lands to trustees, see In Re Smith, 40 Ch. Div. 386. A tenant for life who has power to cut and sell the timber, and apply the proceeds to his own use is not absolutely entitled to the proceeds, if he sells the timber as standing timber along with the estate, In re Llewellin, 37 Ch. D. 317; and trustees appointed under section 38 are not persons absolutely entitled, Cookes v. Cookes, 34 Ch. D. 498.

(11) In any other mode in which money produced by the exercise of a power of sale in the settlement is applicable thereunder.

(12) In payment (if the Court think fit) to the trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts (a). [Settled Land Act, 1890.]

And under the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (b), capital money arising under the Settled Land Act, 1882, may be applied in payment of any moneys expended and costs incurred by a landlord under the former Act in the execution of any improvement mentioned in the first or second parts of the schedule thereto (c), as for an improvement authorized by the Settled Land Act; and such money may also be applied in discharge of any charge created on a holding under the Act in respect of any such improvement as aforesaid, as in discharge of an incumbrance authorized by the Settled Land Act to be discharged out of such capital money. [Improvements under Agricultural Holdings Act.]

20. With reference to the discharge of incumbrances, it has been held that the words "incumbrances affecting the inheritance of the settled land" in subsection 2 of section 21 must be taken in their ordinary sense as referring to mortgages, charges for portions, and the like (d) and not as meaning incumbrances such as charges for land drainage and improvements created under the Land Improvement Act, 1864, and other similar Acts, which, although in one sense affecting the inheritance, are in numerous cases charges rather affecting the tenant for life than the remainderman (e), and therefore [Discharge of incumbrances.] [Land improvement charges.]

(b) 46 & 47 Vict. c. 61, s. 29.

(c) The first part of the schedule relates to improvements to which the landlord's consent is required, and comprises:

(1) Erection or enlargement of buildings.

(2) Formation of silos.

(As to the Court authorizing the formation of silos, see Re Broadwater Estate, 33 W. R. 738; 54 L. J. N.S. Ch. 1104.)

(3) Laying down of permanent pasture.

(4) Making and planting of osier beds.

(5) Making of water meadows or works of irrigation.

(6) Making of gardens.

(7) Making or improving of roads or bridges.

(8) Making or improving of watercourses, ponds, wells, or reservoirs, or of works for the application of water power or for supply of water for agricultural or domestic purposes.

(9) Making of fences.

(10) Planting of hops.

(11) Planting of orchards or fruit bushes.

(12) Reclaiming of waste land.

(13) Warping of land.

(14) Embankment and sluices against floods.

The second part of the schedule relates to drainage, an improvement in respect of which notice to the landlord is required.

where before the passing of the Settled Land Act, 1882, charges of this nature have been created, the tenant for life is not entitled to have them discharged out of capital.

[Settled Land Acts Amendment Act, 1887.]

But now by the Settled Land Acts Amendment Act, 1887 (a), section 1, "where any improvement of a kind authorized by the Act of 1882 has been or may be made either before or after the passing of this Act, and a rent-charge, whether temporary or perpetual, has been or may be created in pursuance of any Act of Parliament, with the object of paying off any moneys advanced for the purpose of defraying the expenses of such improvement, any capital money expended in redeeming such rent-charge, or otherwise providing for the payment thereof, shall be deemed to be applied in payment for an improvement authorized by the Act of 1882." Under this enactment "capital money" may be applied in redeeming a terminable rent-charge by paying not only the unpaid balance of principal, but also a proper sum by way of bonus as compensation for loss of interest consequent on the redemption (b). But the section is not applicable to a sum paid to redeem future annual instalments of tithe rent-charge payable by virtue of an order under the Irish Church Act Amendment Act, 1872, sect. 7 (c).

[Incumbrances affecting part only.]

It is not necessary that the incumbrance should affect the whole of the settled estates; it is sufficient if it affect any land the subject of the settlement (d), and where a part only of settled land is subject to a charge, capital money arising from that part can be applied for the improvement of the other part (e).

[Settled Land Act, 1890.]

By the Settled Land Act, 1890 (f), sect. 11, "where money is required for the purpose of discharging an incumbrance on the settled land or part thereof, the tenant for life may raise the money so required, and also the amount properly required for payment of the costs of the transaction, on mortgage of the settled land, or of any part thereof, by conveyance of the fee simple or other estate or interest the subject of the settlement, or by creation of a term of years in the settled land or any part thereof, or otherwise, and the money so raised shall be capital money for that purpose, and may be paid or applied accordingly. Incumbrance in this section does not include any annual sum payable only during life or lives, or during a term of years absolute or determinable.

[Costs allowed to tenant for life.]

The word "incidental" in clause (10) of sect. 21 of the principal Act has received a liberal construction (a), and it has been held that a tenant for life was entitled to his extra costs of successfully defending an action brought to restrain him from exercising his powers (b), and the costs as between solicitor and client of the solicitor and surveyor of the tenant for life in preparing and carrying out schemes of improvement have been allowed (c); and where a tenant for life, acting honestly and with due diligence in the exercise of his powers, attempted to sell, but the sale was unsuccessful, his costs or expenses properly incurred were allowed, and the Court under sects. 46, sub-sect. 6, 47, and 55, sub-sect. 3, ordered that they should be paid out of the property subject to the settlement, and raised by a charge on the settled land (d).

But the costs of obtaining the consent and concurrence of the mortgagees of the life estate, though "incidental" within the meaning of the clause, ought not as a general rule to be paid out of capital money (e).

[Investment, etc., of capital money.]

21. By sect. 22, sub-sect. (1), capital money arising under the Act is to be paid either to the trustees of the settlement or into Court, at the option of the tenant for life, and is to be invested or applied by the trustees, or under the direction of the Court, as the case may be, accordingly.

Sub-sect. (2). The investment or other application by the trustees is to be made according to the direction of the tenant for life, and in default thereof, according to the direction of the trustees, but in the last-mentioned case subject to any consent required or direction given by the settlement with respect to the investment or other application by the trustees of the trust money of the settlement; and any investment is to be in the names or under the control of the trustees.

Sub-sect. (3). The investment or other application under the direction of the Court is to be made on the application of the tenant for life, or of the trustees.

Sub-sect. (4). Any investment or other application is not during the life of the tenant for life to be altered without his consent.

[Devolution.] Sub-sect. (5). Capital money arising under the Act, and the securities arising from the investment thereof, are for all purposes of disposition, transmission, and devolution, to be considered as land, and to be held and go accordingly.

[Application of income.] Sub-sect. (6). The income of the securities is to be paid or applied as the income of the land, if not disposed of, would have been payable or applicable under the settlement.

Sub-sect. (7). The securities may be converted into money, which is to be capital money arising under the Act.

[Direction of tenant for life.] It will be observed that the tenant for life may direct in what manner, consistently with the Act, the capital money is to be invested or applied, and the duty of the trustees in carrying out such directions is purely ministerial, and, except where the consent or approval of the trustees is expressly required, as for an outlay on improvements, does not involve the exercise of any discretion. But nevertheless, in order that the tenant for life may exercise his option of directing the payment of purchase money into Court, it is necessary that there should be trustees for the purposes of the Act in existence (a).

The option is exercised by the tenant for life consenting to the payment of the purchase money into Court, in consequence of the purchaser refusing to complete unless this were done; and the money having thus come into Court, it was held that it must remain in Court, and be invested and applied under the direction of the Court pursuant to sub-sect. 3 (b); but now by the Settled Land Act, 1890 (c), sect. 14, all or any part of any principal money paid into Court may, if the Court thinks fit, be at any time paid to the trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts.

[Settled Land Act, 1890.]

[Purchase money of land sold under Lands Clauses Act.] 22. Where settled real estate has been sold under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, and the purchase money paid into Court, the Court will, in the exercise of its discretion, appoint trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, and order the fund in Court to be paid out to them to be held upon the trusts of the settlement (d).

23. By sect. 23, capital money arising under the Act from settled land in England is not to be applied in the purchase of land out of England, unless the settlement expressly authorizes the same. [Purchases confined to England.]

24. By sect. 24, land acquired by purchase, or in exchange, or on partition, is to be made subject to the settlement, as follows: Freehold land is to be conveyed to the uses, on the trusts, and subject to the powers and provisions subsisting with respect to the settled land, but not so as to increase or multiply charges or powers of charging. Copyhold, customary, or leasehold land is to be conveyed to and vested in the trustees of the settlement on trusts, and subject to powers and provisions corresponding with the uses, trusts, powers, and provisions of the freehold land, but so that the beneficial interest in land held by lease for years shall not vest absolutely in a person who is by the settlement made by purchase tenant in tail, or in tail male, or in tail female, and who dies under twenty-one. Where there is a charge which does not affect the whole of the settled land, the land acquired by purchase, or in exchange or on partition is not to be subject thereto, unless acquired by purchase with money arising from sale, or by exchange or partition, of land which was subject to the charge, and this is not confined to charges which take priority over the settlement, but extends to charges created by the settlement itself (a). [Form of conveyance.]

25. By sect. 34, where capital money arising under the Act is purchase money paid in respect of a lease for years, or life, or for years determinable on life, or in respect of any other estate or interest in land less than a fee simple, or in respect of a reversion, the trustees of the settlement or the Court, as the case may be, may require the same to be laid out, invested, accumulated, and paid in such manner as in the judgment of the trustees or of the Court, as the case may be, will give to the parties interested in that money the like benefit therefrom, as they might lawfully have had from the lease, estate, interest, or reversion, in respect whereof the money was paid, or as near thereto as may be. [Application of money arising from limited interests.]

Under this section it will be the duty of the trustee to take care upon a sale by the tenant for life of a leasehold interest, or a reversion, that the proceeds of the sale are so dealt with as not to affect the relative interests of the tenant for life and re-mainderman (a). This section corresponds with the 74th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and its construction will be regulated by the decisions under that Act (b). Thus, if the property is subject to a lease at a rent less than the income produced by the investment of the purchase money, the tenant for life will be entitled during the remainder of the term, for which the property was let, to a sum equal only to the rent, and the residue of the income should be accumulated at compound interest until the end of the term, after which the tenant for life will be entitled to the whole of the income, including the income of the accumulations (c).

So, on the other hand, if the property sold was a lease for a short term, the tenant for life is entitled to receive an annuity of such an amount as will exhaust the proceeds of sale in the number of years which the lease had to run (d).

[Heirlooms.] 26. By sect. 37, sub-sect. (1), where personal chattels are settled on trust so as to devolve with land until a tenant in tail by purchase is born, or attains the age of twenty-one years, or so as otherwise to vest in some person becoming entitled to an estate of freehold of inheritance in the land, a tenant for life of the land may sell the chattels or any of them; and by sub-sect. (2), the money arising by the sale is to be capital money arising under the Act, and to be paid, invested, or applied, and otherwise dealt with in like manner in all respects as by the Act directed with respect to other capital money arising under the Act, or may be invested in the purchase of other chattels, of the same or any other nature, which are to be settled and held on the same trusts, and to devolve in the same manner as the chattels sold; but by sub-sect. (3), no sale or purchase of chattels under this section is to be made without an order of the Court. In giving its sanction to any proposed sale the Court must be satisfied that, under the circumstances of the case, such sale is reasonable and proper, having regard to the interests of all persons entitled, the interests of persons more remotely entitled being of less weight than those of persons nearer in succession; but the leaning of the Court is against a sale (e). And by force of sect. 52, the tenant for life is in the position of a trustee with a discretionary power of sale, and must have a like regard to the interests of other persons entitled as well as to his own (a). Where circumstances rendered it expedient, the Court sanctioned the removal of some of the heirlooms to another family mansion, and the sale of the rest (b).

[Title of honour.]

A dignity or title of honour which descends to the heirs general or heirs of the body, is within the definition of land, and heirlooms settled so as to devolve with the dignity or title may be sold under this section (c).

[Whether proceeds of heirlooms devolve as personalty.]

Reference has already been made to the sections regulating the application or disposition of capital money arising under the Act (d), and it is to be observed that under sect. 22, sub-sect (5), capital money is "for all purposes of disposition, transmission, and devolution, to be considered as land," and is to be "held for, and go to, the same persons successively, in the same manner, and for and on the same estates, interests, and trusts, as the land wherefrom the money arises would, if not disposed of, have been held and have gone under the settlement." It has been doubted whether this sub-section has any application to money arising from the sale of personal chattels; and there seems no sound reason for making the money arising from the chattels devolve as land, while if it is re-invested in other chattels they are to devolve as personalty. The latter part of the sub-section points to money arising from land as being the subject matter to which it relates and it would be construing the sub-section in direct opposition to the spirit in which it is framed to hold, that, although its apparent object was to leave the estates and interests of the persons beneficially interested in land unaffected by the sale, yet when applied, by reference, to money arising from personal chattels it is to have the effect of altering the nature of the estates, and in most cases of changing an absolute estate in remainder into a mere tenancy in tail. To effectuate such a change the language of the Act should be clear and unambiguous, and it is conceived that the language of sub-sect. (5) does not meet that test, and that the devolution of the moneys arising from personal chattels will remain unaffected by the sale. The effect of this sub-section in relation to money arising from heirlooms has been discussed in Re Duke of Marlborough's Settlement (a), in which different views were expressed by the judges; but the balance of opinion seems to be in favour of the view that the devolution of the proceeds of the sale of chattels and of any interim investments thereof follows the devolution which originally belonged to the chattels. The tenant for life may, however, apply the moneys arising under sect. 37 for any of the purposes authorized by sect. 21, notwithstanding that the effect of such application may be to alter the devolution, as, for instance, in paying off incumbrances affecting the inheritance of the settled land without keeping such incumbrances on foot; and so long as the moneys are applied for such authorized purposes the tenant for life cannot be prevented from directing any such application, on the ground of his being a trustee of the power under sect. 53, although the effect of the application may be to alter the course of devolution (b).

[Receipts.] 27. By sect. 40, the receipt in writing of the trustees of a settlement, or where one trustee is empowered to act, of one trustee, or of the personal representatives or representative of the last surviving or continuing trustee, for any money or securities paid or transferred to them or him is made a good discharge, and, in the case of a mortgagee or other person advancing money, exonerates him from being concerned to see that the money advanced is wanted for any purpose of the Act, or that no more than is wanted is raised. It would seem that this power extends to trustees appointed by the Court under sect. 38 (c).

In construing sect. 40, sect. 39 must be borne in mind, which expressly prohibits the payment of capital money to fewer than two persons as trustees of a settlement, unless the settlement otherwise provides; and, taking the two sections together, it seems to follow, that, in the absence of any special direction in the settlement, a sole personal representative of the last surviving or continuing trustee cannot give a good discharge for capital money under the Act.

[Indemnity and reimbursement.] 28. Sects. 41 & 43 supply the usual indemnity and reimbursement clauses for the trustees of the settlement.

[Protection of trustees.] 29. By sect. 42, the trustees of a settlement, or any of them, are not liable for giving any consent, or for not making, bringing, taking, or doing any such application, action, proceeding, or thing, as they might make, bring, take, or do; and in case of purchase of land with capital money arising under the Act, or of an exchange, partition, or lease, are not liable for adopting any contract made by the tenant for life, or bound to inquire as to the propriety of the purchase, exchange, partition, or lease, or answerable as regards any price, consideration, or fine, and are not liable to see to or answerable for the investigation of the title, or answerable for a conveyance of land, if the conveyance purports to convey the land in the proper mode, or liable in respect of purchase-money paid by them by direction of the tenant for life to any person joining in the conveyance as a conveying party, or as giving a receipt for the purchase-money, or in any other character, or in respect of any other money paid by them by direction of the tenant for life on the purchase, exchange, partition, or lease.

Under this section the trustees are under no liability if they stand by and take no active part while the tenant for life is exercising his powers, but it is apprehended that the indemnity given by this section to the trustees only holds good so long as they have not actual notice that the tenant for life is acting fraudulently or even improperly. At any rate, trustees, who with the knowledge that the tenant for life is committing a fraud upon his powers take no active steps for the protection of the remaindermen, relying on this section, would be acting most imprudently, and would have little reason to complain if they were made personally liable for any loss arising from their negligence.

[Trustees must see that conveyance is in the proper form.]

It will be observed that trustees, in order to have the benefit of this section where land is brought into the settlement upon a purchase, exchange, partition, or lease, must see that the conveyance purports to convey the land in the proper mode, but they are not bound to do more than take care that the deed on the face of it is properly drawn, and is duly executed by the conveying parties, and that the person to whom the purchase money is paid by the direction of the tenant for life properly joins in the conveyance.

[Differences between tenant for life and trustees.]

30. By sect. 44, if at any time a difference arises between a tenant for life and the trustees of the settlement, respecting the exercise of any of the powers of the Act, or respecting any matter relating thereto, the Court may, on the application of either party, give such directions respecting the matter in difference, and respecting the costs of the application, as the Court thinks fit. It would be right for the trustees to avail themselves of this section if a sale were proceeding which they disapproved of as being improvident (a).

31. By sect. 55, the powers conferred by the Act are exercisable from time to time, and in exercising the powers the tenant for life and trustees may respectively execute, make, and do, all necessary and proper deeds, instruments, and things.

32. By sect. 57, sub-sect. (1), nothing in the Act is to preclude a settlor from conferring on the tenant for life, or the trustees of the settlement, any powers additional to or larger than those conferred by the Act; but by sub-sect. (2), any such additional or larger powers are to operate and be exercisable in the like manner and with all the like incidents, effects, and consequences, as if they were conferred by the Act, unless a contrary intention is expressed in the settlement.

[Infant entitled absolutely or for life.]

33. By sect. 59, where a person who is in his own right seised of or entitled in possession to land is an infant, then for the purposes of the Act the land is settled land, and the infant is to be deemed tenant for life thereof; and by sect. 60, where a tenant for life, or a person having the powers of a tenant for life under the Act, is an infant, or an infant would, if he were of full age, be a tenant for life, or have the powers of a tenant for life, the powers under the Act may be exercised on his behalf by the trustees of the settlement, and if there are none, then by such person and in such manner as the Court, on the application of a testamentary or other guardian or next friend of the infant, either generally or in a particular instance, orders. And persons appointed by the Court under this section can make a good title without the necessity of appointing under sect. 38 trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Act (b). But in such a case the order ought to contain a direction that the purchase money be paid into court (c). Under these sections the Court in Ireland refused, where an infant was entitled to an undivided share of land, to appoint one of his co-owners to exercise on his behalf the powers of the Act, but required the appointment of an independent person (d). The Court in directing the mode of sale under this section can order it to be made out of Court (e).

[Tenant for life a married woman.]

34. By sect. 61, sub-sect. (1), the foregoing provisions of the Act do not apply in the case of a married woman; but by sub-sect. (2), a married woman entitled for her separate use, or entitled under any statute for her separate property or as a feme sole, is, without her husband, to have the powers of the Act; and by sub-sect. (3), where she is entitled otherwise than as aforesaid, she and her husband together are to have the powers. By sub-sect. (4), the provisions of the Act referring to a tenant for life extend to a married woman entitled to property as her separate estate or as a feme sole, and this appears to bring the case of an infant married woman so entitled within sect. 60, so that her powers can during infancy be exercised by the trustees of the settlement (a).

[Settlement containing a trust or direction for sale.]

35. Where the settlement contains a trust or direction for the sale of the property, the rights and powers of the trustees and tenant for life stand upon a different footing, and are governed by the independent enactment contained in the 63rd section (b). The construction of this section is somewhat obscure, and the extent to which the powers of trustees were affected by it was a question of grave difficulty; but by the Settled Land Act, 1884 (c), the powers given by the 63rd section of the Act of 1882 to tenants for life or other persons having limited interests are not to be exercised without the leave of the Court, which leave is to be given by order naming the persons to exercise the powers, and until such an order is made and registered as a lis pendens, it seems clear that the trustees may execute all trusts and powers reposed in them by the settlement as if the Settled Land Acts had not been passed, while after an order has been made and registered and so long as it remains in force the powers of the trustees are suspended, so far as relates to any purpose for which leave is given by the order to exercise a power conferred by the Act of 1882. Under these circumstances no conflict can now arise, under sect. 63, between the trustees and the tenant for life as to the exercise of their powers, and it seems unnecessary to consider what is the proper construction of the section in this respect.

36. Where the powers of the Act are exercisable and any

(a) In the last edition of this work it was pointed out that the case where a woman who is an infant is married to a man of full age, and has property which does not belong to her as her separate property or as a feme sole, was apparently a casus omissus from the Act. But, having regard to the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 2, the omission can hardly at the present time be of practical importance.

(b) As to this section and the extent to which the powers given by the settlement to trustees are affected by it and the Settled Land Act, 1884, see Chap. xxiii. s. 2, v.

(c) 47 & 48 Vict. c. 18, s. 7. For a case in which the leave was granted, see Re Harding, (1891) 1 Ch. 60; post, p. 705.

necessity arises for trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Act, they are by sect. 63, which follows with the necessary variation the definition contained in sect. 2 (a), defined to be "the persons, if any, who are for the time being under the settlement trustees for sale of the settled land, or having power of consent to, or approval of, or control over the sale, or if under the settlement there are no such trustees, then the persons, if any, for the time being, who are by the settlement declared to be trustees thereof for purposes of the Act."

[Application of Act to such settlement.]

37. By sub-sect. (2) of sect. 63, the provisions of the Act referring to a tenant for life, and to a settlement, and to settled land, are to extend to cases under that section with certain exceptions, of which the following are the material ones for the present purpose:—

(A) Capital money is not to be applied in the purchase of land unless expressly authorized by the settlement in the case of capital money arising thereunder from sales or other dispositions of the settled land, but may, in addition to any other mode of application authorized by the Act, be applied in any mode in which capital money arising under the settlement from any such sale or other disposition is applicable thereunder, subject to any consent required or direction given by the settlement with respect to the application of trust money of the settlement.

(B) Capital money and the securities in which the same is invested shall not for any purpose of disposition, transmission, or devolution, be considered as land unless the same would, if arising under the settlement from a sale or disposition of the settled land, have been so considered, and shall be held in trust for and shall go to the same persons successively in the same manner, and for and on the same estates, interests and trusts, as the same would have gone, and been held, if arising under the settlement from a sale or disposition of the settled land, and the income of such capital money and securities shall be paid or applied accordingly.

(C) Land of whatever tenure acquired under the Act by purchase, or in exchange, or on partition, shall be conveyed to and vested in the trustees of the settlement, on the trusts, and subject to the powers and provisions which, under the settlement or by reason of the exercise of any power of appointment or charging therein contained, are subsisting with respect to the settled land, or would be so subsisting if the same had not been sold, or as near thereto as circumstances permit, but so as not to increase or multiply charges or powers of charging.

[Commission for sale.]

38. Where settled property had been put up for sale by auction by the tenant for life under the Act, but withdrawn for want of a sufficient offer, and was afterwards sold by private contract on the same day, it was held that the trustees were at liberty to pay out of the purchase moneys one commission for conducting the sale, including the conditions of sale, and also commission for deducing the title and perusing and completing the conveyance according to the scale of charges contained in Schedule 1, Part I. to the general order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 ; and also the costs occasioned by the concurrence in the sale of the tenant for life's mortgagees, and a proper sum to the auctioneer for his charges (a).]

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE POWERS OF TRUSTEES.

THE powers of trustees are either General or Special; the former, such as by construction of law are incident to the office of trustee virtute officii; the latter, such as are conferred vi terminorum, i.e., by the settlor himself by an express proviso in the instrument creating the trust.

SECTION I

OF THE GENERAL POWERS OF TRUSTEES.

Powers of trustees at law distinguished from their powers in equity.

1. IN a Court of law the trustee, as the absolute proprietor, may of course exercise all such powers as the legal ownership confers; but in equity the cestui que trust is the absolute owner, and the question we have to consider in this place is, how far the trustee may deal with the estate without rendering himself responsible in the forum of a Court of equity.

General rule as to powers of trustees in simple trusts.

2. With respect to the simple trust, as the trustee is a mere passive depositary, he can in equity neither take any part of the profits, nor exercise any dominion or control over the corpus, except at the instance of the cestui que trust.

In special trusts.

3. In the special trust the authority of the trustee is, as a general rule, equally limited except so far as the execution of the trust itself may invest him with a proprietary power, and the duties thus prescribed to him the trustee is bound strictly to pursue without swerving to the right hand or to the left.

Exceptions.

4. But, under particular circumstances, the trustee is held capable of exercising the discretionary powers of the bonâ fide proprietor; for the trust estate itself might otherwise be injuriously affected. The necessity of the moment may demand immediate action, while the sanction of the parties who are beneficially interested could not be procured without great inconvenience (as where the cestuis que trust are a numerous class), or perhaps could not be obtained at all (as where the cestuis que trust are under disability, or not yet in existence). The alternative of consulting the Court would always be attended with considerable expense, and, it may be, an expense wholly disproportioned to the importance of the occasion, and perhaps in the meantime the opportunity might be lost. It is therefore evidently in furtherance of the cestuis que trust's own interest, that, where the circumstances of the case require it, the trustee should be at liberty to exercise a reasonable discretionary power (a). But a trustee for adults should not take any proceeding without consulting his cestuis que trust; and if he do, and the proceeding is disavowed by them, he may have to pay the costs (b).

Notice of trustee's intention to cestui que trust.

5. Where the trust is not definite and precise, and it is doubtful what ought to be done under the trust, it is said that the trustee may give notice to the cestui que trust of his intention to do a particular act, and that unless the cestui que trust interferes to stop it, the Court might well hold the trustee not to be liable for doing the act (c).

Validity of an act without suit.

6. It is a rule of equity, that what is compellable by suit, or would have been ordered by the Court, is equally valid if done by the trustee without suit, i.e., without the sanction of the Court (d). The difficulty with which the trustee has to struggle is the danger of assuming that the Court, on application to it, would view the matter in the same light in which he regards it himself (e).

Matter of form may be dispensed with.

7. Trustees, to avoid circuity, may dispense with forms, the observance of which would only lead to expense. If, for instance, the transfer of a sum of stock be secured to trustees of a settlement, and they have power by the settlement to sell out the fund and invest on mortgage, they need not insist on a transfer of the stock in specie for the purpose of immediately selling out and investing the proceeds on mortgage, but if they have the mortgage ready may take the value of the stock and hand it over to the mortgagor (a). So trustees, having a power to lay out a certain sum in the purchase of an annuity for A. B., may pay the sum to A. B. direct, without going through the form of purchasing the annuity (b).

Repairs.

8. Where the legal estate is vested in trustees in trust for one person for life, with remainders over to others, it would be natural to suppose that the rights in equity as between the tenant for life and the remaindermen would be the same as those at law between a legal tenant for life and legal remaindermen. It is, however, now clearly settled, that whatever may be the legal liability of a legal tenant for life in respect of permissive waste (c), the trustee cannot (where there is no special clause of management) interfere with the possession of an equitable tenant for life who neglects to repair (d). [But in a recent case where property was vested in trustees upon trust for several persons in succession, the Court of Appeal intimated the opinion that there was an obligation upon the trustees for the purpose of properly performing their trust to see that the property did not fall into decay from want of repair, and if the occasion for repairs arose they should apply to the Court to direct the proper repairs and the mode in which the expenses of such repairs were to be borne (e).]

Legal rights.

9. In other respects the rights in equity must, it is conceived, be governed by those at law. Thus a legal tenant for life may cut timber for the purpose of repairs (f), though he may not cut timber to sell it and apply the produce (g), or to repay himself conceived, as against the remainderman, cut timber for necessary repairs, if the tenant for life will consent to an application of income towards repairs in making use of the timber. The repairs by a tenant for life, however substantial and lasting, are his own voluntary act, and do not arise from any obligation, and he cannot claim any charge for them upon the inheritance (a). Nor [before the Settled Land Act, 1882,] would the Court at his instance direct lasting improvements to be made (b); and though it was said by the Court in one case that the rule might not be absolutely without exception, as if there were a settled estate, and a fund directed to be laid out in the purchase to the same uses, it might be more beneficial to the remainderman that part of the trust fund should be applied to prevent buildings on the settled estates from going to destruction, than that the whole should be laid out in the purchase of other lands (c), yet an extraordinary case was requisite to create such exception (d). [But where trustees having monies in their hands directed to be invested in lands to be strictly settled, entered into an agreement for purchase of an estate, and the farm buildings, and cottages on the property were out of repair, the Court sanctioned the application of 1000*l.* out of the monies in their hands in repairing, improving and rebuilding the farm buildings and cottages (e); and money paid into Court under the Lands Clauses Act has been applied in defraying expenditure necessarily incurred for the preservation of the trust estate (f).

Repairs and improvements.

10. Now by the Settled Land Act, 1882, sect. 26, the tenant for life may, with the approval of the trustees of the settlement, or the approval of the Court as the case may require, according as the money to be expended is in the hands of the trustees or in Court, expend any capital money arising under the Act in any of the improvements specified in sect. 25 of the Act (g).

[(g) As to payment out of capital

And as, under sect. 59, an infant entitled in possession to land is for the purposes of the Act to be deemed tenant for life thereof, and by sect. 60, the powers of an infant tenant for life may be exercised on his behalf by the trustees of the settlement, or if there are none by the nominees of the Court, all proper improvements may be effected under the Act, notwithstanding the infancy of the beneficial owner.

Generally.

11. Independently of the powers of the Settled Land Act] a trustee holding an estate for the benefit of a person absolutely entitled, but incapable from infancy or otherwise to give directions, may make necessary repairs, but he must not go beyond the necessity of the case, as by ornamental improvements, or the expense will not be allowed (a). The trustees of a will were to permit the testator's son to have "the use and enjoyment" of a house, and were "empowered" during the son's "occupation" to make "repairs," and Lord Romilly, M.R., held that the trustees were to keep the house in a habitable state, but not to make ornamental repairs (b). Where a mansion house was dilapidated at the date of the testator's will, and he empowered his trustees "to keep all the buildings in good repair, and to make such improvements by draining, walling, building, liming or manuring, as they should think proper," the trustees had no power to rebuild the mansion house (c). But under a power to "improve the estate by erecting farm-houses and out-buildings, or by draining and planting," it was held that the trustees could erect agricultural cottages (d). And where the trustees of a term of 1000 years were specially authorized to keep the premises in good repair and "generally to superintend the management" of the estate, the Court held that the latter words conferred a general power without limit, that is, according to the discretion of the trustees, and allowed the sums expended by them in erecting and repairing farm-houses and buildings, in draining, fencing, sinking wells, putting up pumps, constructing a bridge, and forming, repairing, and altering roads (e). If trustees, without any special power to authorize it, lay out money in improving the estate (as in building a villa upon ground intended to be building ground, and which object they are advised will be promoted by the erection of the villa), they cannot justify the expenditure, but on the other hand, the cestuis que trust cannot take the benefit and repudiate the whole outlay, but the trustees will be liable only for the loss to the estate (a). [And where the mansion house had been burnt down and the trustee applied a large sum, in addition to the insurance monies, in restoring the mansion house, the Court was of opinion that it had no jurisdiction to order a sale or mortgage of the settled estates to raise the amount of the outlay, or to authorize the expenditure, for the restoration, of monies which were subject to a trust for re-investment in land; but it appearing that the estate had been benefited to the full amount of certain funds in Court, which had arisen from the sale of part of the settled estates, Kay, J., sanctioned the application of those funds towards recouping the trustee, on the ground that the trustee having bonâ fide expended money for building on the estate, under a reasonable expectation that the Court would sanction the expenditure, and having improved the estate to the full amount of the funds in Court, might be recouped the amount so expended (b).] If the trust be to make repairs out of the rents, and the trustees borrow money to make the repairs, and then repay themselves out of the rents, they will not be allowed the interest on the money borrowed, for the trust was to apply the rents after they had accrued (c).

[12. Where trustees of a term are authorized to make improvements on the trust property, and to raise the sums required by mortgaging the hereditaments comprised in the term, or out of the rents, issues, and profits, and subject to the term the property is strictly settled, the tenant for life is entitled to have the amount of income applied by the trustees in permanent improvements raised out of the corpus of the estates (d). [Allowances to tenant for life.]

Where there was no power to manage or cultivate the real estate, and a farm was in hand, and no tenant could be found, the Court, on evidence that the outlay would be to the advantage of infant remaindermen, allowed £1,000, part of the personalty which was held on the same trusts as the realty, to be advanced to the tenant for life, who was one of the trustees, on his bond, [Personal estate advanced for benefit of real estate.]

he undertaking to expend it in stocking, taking, and cultivating the farm to the satisfaction of his co-trustee (a).]

Land Improvement Act.

13. By the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (b), trustees in the actual possession or receipt of the rents or profits of land are enabled, by the 24th section, to apply for and make, in conformity with the provisions of the Act, the several improvements mentioned in the 9th section, such as drainage, reclamation of land, erection of farm buildings, planting, &c.

Cutting timber.

14. Where an estate was devised to A. and his heirs upon trust to settle on B. for life, subject to impeachment of waste, remainder to C. for life, without impeachment of waste, remainder to C.'s first and other sons in tail, and before any settlement was executed the trustee, with the concurrence of B. and C., cut down timber which showed symptoms of decay, Sir L. Shadwell said "he considered the timber to have been cut by the authority of the trustee, who had a superintending control over the estate; that it was not a wrongful act; and that the effect of it must be the same as if it had been done with the sanction of the Court" (c). And in a later case (d) the Court seemed to think that a tenant for life, impeachable for waste, would not be chargeable with interest during his own life as to such timber felled by him as the Court would have ordered to be cut, but that the onus would be on the tenant for life to make out that such was the case.

[Settled Land Act.]

[15. Now by the Settled Land Act, 1882, sect. 35, a tenant for life impeachable for waste may, with the consent of the trustees of the settlement or an order of the Court, cut and sell timber ripe and fit for cutting, but three-fourth parts of the net proceeds of the sale are to be set aside as capital money arising under the Act (e).

In Re Dunn's Settled Estate, W. N. 1877, p. 39, it was held that the sum to be charged under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 56, was not confined to two years' rental of the particular estate on which the mansion was to be built, but extended to two years' rental of all the estates comprised in the settlement. Kay, J., considered that sect. 9 of the Act of 1864 was in some respects more extensive than sect. 25 of the Act of 1882, but this view was dissented from by Cotton, L.J.; see Re Newton, W. [Management of land and receipt and application of income during minority.]

16. In the case of instruments coming into operation after the 31st December, 1881, under which an infant, not being a married woman, is beneficially entitled to the possession or receipt of the rents and profits of land or hereditaments corporeal or incorporeal, large powers of management during the minority of the infant have, unless a contrary intention is expressed in the instrument, been provided by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. Sect. 42 of that Act enacts that:—

(1) If and as long as any person who would but for this section be beneficially entitled to the possession of any land is an infant, and being a woman is also unmarried, the trustees appointed for this purpose by the settlement, if any, or if there are none so appointed, then the persons, if any, who are for the time being under the settlement trustees with power of sale of the settled land, or of part thereof, or with power of consent to or approval of the exercise of such a power of sale, or if there are none, then any persons appointed as trustees for this purpose by the Court, on the application of a guardian or next friend of the infant, may enter into and continue in possession of the land; and in every such case the subsequent provisions of this section shall apply.

(2) The trustees shall manage or superintend the management of the land, with full power to fell timber or cut underwood from time to time in the usual course of sale, or for repairs or otherwise, and to erect, pull down, rebuild, and repair houses, and other buildings and erections, and to continue the working of mines, minerals, and quarries which have usually been worked, and to drain or otherwise improve the land or any part thereof, and to insure against loss by fire, and to make allowances to and arrangements with tenants and others, and to determine tenancies, and to accept surrenders of leases and tenancies, and generally to deal with the land in a proper and due course of management; but so that, where the infant is impeachable for waste, the trustees shall not commit waste, and shall cut timber on the same terms only, and subject to the same restrictions, on and subject to which the infant could, if of full age, cut the same (a).

(3) The trustees may from time to time, out of the income of the land, including the produce of the sale of timber and underwood, pay the expenses incurred in the management, or in the exercise of any power conferred by this section, or otherwise in relation to the land, and all outgoings not payable by any tenant or other person, and shall keep down any annual sum, and the interest of any principal sum, charged on the land.

[(a) By the Settled Land Act, 1882, the powers of cutting timber conferred on a tenant for life by that Act, may be exercised on behalf of an infant, tenant for life or absolute owner, by the trustees of the settlement, or if there are none by such person and in such manner as the Court, on the application of a testamentary guardian or other next friend of the infant, orders; see secs. 58–60.]

[Maintenance of infant.] (4) The trustees may apply at discretion any income which, in the exercise of such discretion, they deem proper, according to the infant's age, for his or her maintenance, education, or benefit, or pay thereout any money to the infant's parent or guardian, to be applied for the same purposes.

[Accumulations of income.] (5) The trustees shall lay out the residue of the income of the land in investment on securities on which they are by the settlement, if any, or by law, authorized to invest trust money, with power to vary investments; and shall accumulate the income of the investments so made in the way of compound interest, by from time to time similarly investing such income and the resulting income of investments; and shall stand possessed of the accumulated fund arising from income of the land and from investments of income on the trusts following (namely):

(i.) If the infant attains the age of twenty-one years, then in trust for the infant;

(ii.) If the infant is a woman and marries while an infant, then in trust for her separate use, independently of her husband, and so that her receipt after she marries, and though still an infant, shall be a good discharge; but

(iii.) If the infant dies while an infant, and being a woman without having been married, then, where the infant was, under a settlement, tenant for life, or by purchase tenant in tail or tail male or tail female, on the trusts, if any, declared of the accumulated fund by that settlement; but where no such trusts are declared, or the infant has taken the land from which the accumulated fund is derived by descent, and not by purchase, or the infant is tenant for an estate in fee simple, absolute or determinable, then in trust for the infant's personal representatives, as part of the infant's personal estate; but the accumulations, or any part thereof, may at any time be applied as if the same were income arising in the then current year.

(6) Where the infant's estate or interest is in an undivided share of land, the powers of this section relative to the land may be exercised jointly with persons entitled to possession of, or having power to act in relation to, the other undivided share or shares.]

Trustees are authorized to oppose a bill in Parliament prejudicial to cestuis que trust.

17. Conservators of public works and similar quasi trustees are authorized to apply the funds under their control in opposing a bill in Parliament, the effect of which if passed would be injurious to the interests confided to them. "Every trustee," said Lord Cottenham, "is entitled to be allowed the reasonable and proper expenses incurred in protecting the property committed to his care. But if they have a right to protect the property from immediate and direct injury, they must have the same right where the injury threatened is indirect, but probable" (a).

Applications to Parliament.

18. On the other hand, quasi trustees, such as those before referred to, are not entitled to apply the funds of an existing undertaking in or towards the expense of obtaining other or larger Parliamentary powers (b).

[Settled Land Act.]

[By the Settled Land Act, 1882, it is provided that the Court may approve of any petition to Parliament, parliamentary opposition, or other proceeding to be taken for protection of settled lands, and may direct that any costs, charges, or expenses incurred in relation thereto be paid out of property subject to the settlement (c). Costs of proceedings in the House of Lords whereby a claim to a peerage was established, and which resulted in the recovery of estates settled on corresponding limitations, were allowed under the section (d).

As to insurance.

19. The duty of a trustee in reference to insuring the property was until recently not very clearly defined; it was conceived that] under special circumstances, and in due course of management, he would be justified in insuring (e); but that where there was a tenant for life, he could not be advised to do so out of the income without the tenant for life's consent. [But now by the Trustee Act, 1888 (f), sect. 7, it is enacted that "it shall be lawful for, but not obligatory upon, a trustee (g), other

If an annuity and a policy on the life of the cestui que vie be made the subject of a settlement, it is implied that the trustee is to pay the premiums out of the income (a). A mortgagee is not regarded as a trustee; and if, in the absence of any stipulation on the subject, he effects an insurance, it is on his own account, and he cannot claim to be entitled to the premiums under just allowances. It is the same as if a lessor or lessee insured, in which case the other would have no claim to the benefit of the policy (b).

By mortgagee.

Breaking up the testator's establishment.

20. An executor is allowed a reasonable time for breaking up the testator's establishment, and a period of two months in one case was considered not to be excessive (c). Executors, as a general rule, do not pay legacies until the expiration of one year from the testator's death; but this is a rule of convenience; and, therefore, if the assets be clearly sufficient for payment of debts and legacies, there is nothing to prevent the executors from discharging the legacies before the expiration of the year (d).

[Carrying on trade of testator.]

21. [As it is the duty of the executors to realize their testator's estate to the best advantage, they may carry on his business for such reasonable time as is necessary to enable them to sell it as a going concern (e), and, if they do so, may be entitled even as against the testator's creditors to an indemnity out of the estate in respect of liabilities properly incurred (f); and, as regards beneficiaries under the will, a power in the executors to carry on the business for a reasonable time may be implied from a general power to postpone the sale and conversion of the estate, although the business is not specially referred to (a). But, except for such purpose of realization, executors are not justified in continuing to carry on the testator's business unless there is a distinct and positive direction and authority given by the will to that effect (b), nor can the Court, where infants are interested, authorize an administrator to carry on the trade of the intestate (c).

[Special direction in will.]

Where the testator's business has been properly carried on in accordance with the provisions of the will and with the assent of the creditors, and in their interest as well as in that of the beneficiaries, the executors will be entitled, in priority to creditors, to indemnity out of the general estate, and not merely out of that portion of the assets which has come into existence or changed its form since the testator's death (d).

In a recent case in Ireland (e), it was held that a general bequest in the will of a trader to trustees upon trust to permit his wife to carry on his business so long as she should remain a widow empowered the trustees to allow her to use the property employed by the testator himself in the trade, and that the assets to the extent of such property were liable to pay for goods supplied to the testator's widow for the trade carried on by her; and where a will contained a direction that the testator's business was to be carried on for a specified time, without any actual disposition of his property beyond a direction for the payment by the executors of certain legacies, the executors were held to be entitled, so long as the business was carried on for the purposes of the will, to the free use and occupation of the business premises and the fixed plant and machinery without paying any rent for the same (f). gage by the trustees of the testator's real estate to raise monies which were applied for the purposes of the business was held to be within their powers (a).]

Appropriation of legacy.

22. An executor may appropriate a legacy without the necessity of a suit, where the appropriation is such as the Court itself would have directed (b); [and an administrator may appropriate part of the estate to his own share as one of the next of kin (c).

[Trust legacy.]

Where a legacy is to be held by the executors upon trust, and the will is silent as to the mode of investment, the powers of the Trust Investment Act, 1889 (d), appear to be applicable (e), so that an investment in the securities authorized by the Act will be a proper mode of appropriation (f). Where several legacies are given, the executors may be justified in setting aside one entire amount without dividing it into portions, but the proper course as a general rule is to invest each particular sum in separate investments, and such investments should not be varied without reasonable cause (g). As the question whether an appropriation has been made is necessarily one of fact, and may be one of difficulty, it is obviously desirable that evidence of the appropriation should be preserved, and that distinct notice of it should be given to all the beneficiaries who are sui juris. The wishes and opinions of the tenants for life may properly be taken into consideration, so long as no undue favour is shown to them at the expense of the remaindermen (h).

Where an appropriation has been validly made it will be binding on the beneficiaries, who will alike share in any increment in value, and bear any loss arising from depreciation, of the investments of the severed fund (i), and thereafter there can be no community of loss or gain between appropriated legacies inter se as to either income or capital (a); nor can the trustees claim any right of indemnity for subsequent loss as against the general trust estate (b). But an appropriation by means of an investment on an unauthorized security, as, for instance, on an equitable mortgage effected by the executors, when the will authorized investments on legal mortgages only, cannot stand (c).

The question must necessarily turn upon the construction of the will. On the other hand, where there is a general investment clause containing prohibitory words, the safer course will be for the trustees to keep within the terms of that clause, as well as within the statutory power. See ante, p. 340, note (d).]

Where the testator, instead of bequeathing a particular sum, directs the executors to set apart a sufficient sum on specified securities to answer a particular purpose, there can be no fund to which the powers of the Trust Investment Act, 1889, are applicable until the directions of the will have been observed. Thus where a testator empowered the trustees of his will to set apart and invest on any of the investments thereby authorized, such a sum as would be sufficient at the time of investment to satisfy an annuity, it was held that the trustees would not be justified in making an investment for that purpose in India 3½ per cent. stock, which was not one of the investments authorized by the will (d).] [Bequest of unascertained sum.] [Ex. gr., to provide an annuity.]

23. A trustee may expend sums of money for the protection and safety, or support, of a cestui que trust who is incapable of taking care of himself, but the more prudent course is to apply to the Court (e). Maintenance.

24. If a legacy be left to an infant, and the Court, upon application, would, from the inability of the parent to support his child, order maintenance out of the interest, the trustee, should he make advances for that purpose without suit, would be allowed them in his account (f). That is the undoubted law."]

[Now by the 43rd sect. of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (d), it is provided as follows:—

(1) "Where any property is held by trustees (e) in trust for an infant, either for life, or for any greater interest, and whether absolutely, or contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, or on the occurrence of any event before his attaining that age, the trustees may at their sole discretion pay to the infant's parent or guardian, if any, or otherwise apply for or towards the infant's maintenance, education, or benefit the income of that property, or any part thereof, whether there is any other fund applicable to the same purpose, or any person bound by law to provide for the infant's maintenance or education, or not.

(2) The trustees shall accumulate all the residue of that income in the way of compound interest, by investing the same and the resulting income thereof from time to time on securities on which they are by the settlement, if any, or by law, authorized to invest trust money, and shall hold those accumulations for the benefit of the person who ultimately becomes entitled to the property from which the same arise; but so that the trustees may at any time, if they think fit, apply those accumulations or any part thereof, as if the same were income arising in the then current year.

(3) "This section applies only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the instrument under which the interest of the infant arises, and shall have effect subject to the terms of that instrument and to the provisions therein contained.

25. Upon the construction of the recent enactment, as of that for which it is substituted, various questions of difficulty have arisen. The consideration which first presents itself is as to the circumstances under which trustees can be said to hold property in trust for an infant in the manner indicated in the section. [Construction of Acts attended with difficulty.]

26. The corresponding section in Lord Cranworth's Act, the wording of which was very similar, was held to be confined to cases of absolute and contingent gifts, and not to apply to the case of a gift absolute in the first instance but liable to be defeated in the event of the legatee not attaining twenty-one. In such a case the accumulations of income were held to belong to the infant's estate notwithstanding his death under age (c). It may be doubted whether that case was not intended to be covered by the enactment, but it does not fall within the strict letter of it, and it would seem that no distinction can be drawn in this respect between the language of the corresponding sections in Lord Cranworth's Act and the recent Act. [Income of gift absolute in form but liable to be defeated.]

27. Where the infant was entitled contingently on his attaining twenty-one, or on some event before his attaining that age, to a legacy carrying interest in the meantime, the power of maintenance in Lord Cranworth's Act applied (d), as does also the power under the recent Act; but where a further contingency is involved in the gift, as in addition to attaining twenty-one the contingency of surviving a particular person, the case does not come within either of the enactments, and neither the trustees nor the Court can apply the income for maintenance, and there is no obligation to accumulate (e). [Income of contingent gift.]

28. Another question which arises is, whether, under sect. 43 of the recent Act, an infant is entitled to maintenance out of the income of property to which he is entitled contingently on his attaining twenty-one, where, independently of the section, he could never have become entitled to such income; as for instance in the case of a pecuniary legacy given by a person not the parent or in loco parentis to an infant contingently on his attaining twenty-one. By Lord Cranworth's Act where an infant was contingently entitled to property, the trustees were [Contingent legacy not carrying interest.] empowered to apply towards his maintenance and education "the whole or any part of the income to which such infant might be entitled in respect of such property;" and it was held in Re George (a), that this power did not extend to the case of a contingent pecuniary legacy not carrying interest until the time of payment. In this state of the law, the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, was passed, and sect. 43 omitted the words "to which such infant might be entitled in respect of such property," but notwithstanding the variation in the language of the late Act, it has been held by the Court of Appeal, affirming Kay, J., that the section does not apply to the case of a pecuniary legacy given by a person not a parent or in loco parentis to an infant contingently on his attaining twenty-one, followed by a residuary gift. L. J. Cotton was of opinion that there is in such a case no property held in trust for an infant within the meaning of the section until the time arises for severing the legacy from the residue, i.e., until the infant attains twenty-one; while Fry, L.J., though expressing his assent to this view, preferred to rest his judgment on the ground that the gift of residue which, independently of the section, carries the income accruing during the minority to the residuary legatee is a sufficient expression of a contrary expression within sub-sect. (3), to take the case out of the Act (b).

Where a legacy is given to a class contingently on attaining twenty-one, so that the first member of the class who attains that age becomes entitled to the whole income until another member of the class attains a vested interest (c), it would seem to follow from the case last cited that there can be no scope for the application of the section; and in a recent case where there was a gift of residue to a class contingently on their attaining twenty-one, it was held by North, J., that the section was inapplicable, his lordship being of opinion that the income belonged exclusively to those of the class who had attained twenty-one at the time when it accrued (d). But it seems difficult to reconcile this decision with the authorities which show that a contingent gift of residue carries with it the intermediate income (e).

immediately set apart for the benefit of the objects of the gift when the contingency happened, it was held that, as on the happening of the contingency the intermediate income would be carried to the legatee, the power of maintenance in the Act applied (a).

[Where property held for an infant for life.]

29. The section of the Conveyancing Act gives rise to this further question; the power applies to the case of "property held in trust for an infant for life," but the surplus accumulations are to be held "for the benefit of the person who ultimately becomes entitled to the property from which the same arise" (b). It has been thought to be difficult (c), without construing the word "property" in different senses in the same section, to attach any other meaning to these words than that the accumulations are to be added to and go with the corpus of the property, a construction which would have the effect of depriving an infant, who has an absolute life interest, of the income accrued during his minority, and not required for his maintenance.

However, in a recent case (d) where an infant was tenant for life of a share of residue, North, J., relying on the authority of In re Buckley's Trusts (e), held that on attaining her majority the infant became absolutely entitled to the accumulations of the past income of her share, and observed that he was by no means satisfied that the expression "the property from which" the accumulations arise did not mean the income from which the accumulations had arisen, that it was not necessary to say that "property" meant capital exclusively (f), and that "the object of the Conveyancing Act was to shorten and simplify

[(b) Similar words occur in Lord Cranworth's Act, and their occurrence formed a ground for the decision on Re Buckley's Trusts, 22 Ch. D. 583, where Fry, J., observed that if he were to extend that Act to a defeasible legacy he should deprive a person defeasibly entitled to the principal of the interest he would otherwise be entitled to.]

[(f) The suggested construction seems to be in accordance with the natural import of the words "property" and "income," and to give a clear meaning to the section. Whether the property held in trust for the infant be an absolute interest, a life interest, or an interest defeasible by a gift over, the income or produce of such property belongs from first to last to the infant, and to him therefore the accumulations go. The words "ultimately becomes entitled" are satisfied by referring them to the case of a contingent interest not carrying intermediate income, and a case such as In re Dickson (ante, p. 656) can present no difficulty, since the property held in trust ex necessitate rei produces no income until the time when the section ceases to be applicable.]

conveyances, and it was not intended to alter the devolution of property."

[Past maintenance.]

30. The opinion has been expressed that under the recent enactment trustees have a discretionary power to apply past accumulations of income in payment for past maintenance (a).

[Contrary intention.]

31. A direction to trustees to accumulate the income of the shares of children who are entitled contingently on their attaining twenty-one, or being daughters attaining that age or marrying, and to pay the same to them as and when their presumptive shares become payable, is not the expression of a contrary intention within sub-sect. 3 of sect. 43 (b).

[Concurrent powers under the recent Act.]

32. It is to be observed that cases may easily arise in which the trustees would be in a position to exercise either the powers of sect. 42, or those of sect. 43 of the late Act, as for instance if under an instrument coming into operation since the 31st December, 1881, real estate were vested in them in trust for an infant for life, and the trustees had a power of sale or of consenting to the exercise of a power of sale.

Having regard to the recent decisions, it is not certain that any case can arise in which the ultimate destination of accumulations of income under the two sections would be different, but sect. 42 contains provisions applicable to the case of a female infant who marries while an infant which are not to be found in sect. 43. It is conceived that wherever the infant is beneficially entitled to the possession of land the income of which is received by the trustees they will be treated as having entered into possession under sect. 42, but that other cases, where the trustees merely receive the income as legal owners and are not called upon to exercise any of the powers of sect. 42, must be regarded as governed by sect. 43.]

Maintenance out of principal.

[In Re Howarth, 8 L. R. Ch. App. 415, the Lords Justices held that the Court had jurisdiction to order maintenance, where there were no other means, out of the corpus of an infant's freehold estate; and in De Witte v. Palin, 14 L. R. Eq. 251, V. C. Malins allowed maintenance to be raised by a charge on reversionary property; but the decision in Re Howarth was rested upon the ground that where a judgment can be obtained against an infant for necessaries the therefore, who, under similar circumstances but without the authority of the Court, breaks in upon the capital, would not be liable, on the cestui que trust's coming of age, to account for the expenditure (a). But where payments of this kind, which are not strictly authorized, are made by executors or trustees, and the propriety of them is questioned in a suit, and there is a deficiency of assets, the costs of suit will have priority over the allowances to the executors or trustees (b). Where the legacy was not more than 300*l.*, Sir W. Grant determined that the trustee had exceeded his duty, and said his impression was, that the rule had been never to permit trustees of their own authority to break in upon the capital (c); but the case of Barlow v. Grant, which is clearly to the contrary, must have escaped his Honour's recollection (d). The general rule is, however, not to break into capital for maintenance, and where the legacy is considerable, as 1000*l.*, or the like, as the Court itself would most probably not order the application of part of the principal, the trustee would not be safe in exceeding of his own authority the amount of the interest (e).

Maintenance where father alive.

34. Where the father of an infant is alive, trustees should, in granting maintenance, bear in mind that the Court never allows a father maintenance out of his children's property without a previous inquiry as to his ability to maintain them himself (f). The term ability, however, is relative to the position of the father and children; and maintenance has been allowed to a father who had 6000*l.* a year (g). And an express declaration in the instrument of trust, or a previous contract, as in the case of a marriage settlement to which the father is a party, may confer on the father a right to have maintenance for his children out of the Court can charge his real estate with the amount so recoverable; and in Re Hamilton, 31 Ch. Div. 291, the Court of Appeal held that there was no jurisdiction to charge maintenance on a reversionary estate tail, inasmuch as such an estate could not be delivered in execution, and the principle of Re Howarth did not apply to it; and a similar view was also taken in Cadman v. Cadman, 33 Ch. Div. 397, where it was doubted whether the Court was warranted in making the order which was made in Re Howarth.] settlement funds (a). But the decisions in this respect have gone as far as can be justified upon principle (b).

[In exercising their discretion trustees should consider what is most for the benefit of the infant, and they should not be deterred from doing what is for the infant's benefit, because it is also a benefit to the father, though on the other hand they must not act with a view to the father's benefit apart from that of the infant (c).

Where there was a power of maintenance in the usual form in the discretion of the trustees, and the trustees, without exercising any discretion in the matter, paid the whole income to the father of the infant, it was held that the father's estate must account for the income received by him (d).

[Past maintenance.]

Where the father had borrowed money to enable him to keep his infant children at school and was unable to repay the debt, the Court allowed him to be recouped the amount so borrowed as an allowance for past maintenance (e).]

After death of father.

35. It was formerly much doubted whether after the death of the father maintenance should be granted to the mother so long as she continued a widow without an inquiry as to her ability (f). But it was ruled that where she had married again there should be no inquiry as to ability, the second husband being, it was said, under no liability to maintain his wife's children (g). It has been since settled that no inquiry as to the mother's ability will be directed even during her widowhood (h); and as a widow is undoubtedly liable at law to maintain her children (i), the direction of the inquiry cannot be regarded as depending upon the legal liability. It would seem to follow that the enactment rendering a husband liable to maintain his wife's children by a former marriage (j) ought not to make (and it is believed that it has not in fact made) any alteration in the practice of the Court of granting maintenance where the mother has married again without any inquiry as to ability.

[36. Where a testator left property to the value of 10,000*l.* a year to be accumulated for twenty-one years, and directed that the accumulations should be laid out in the purchase of lands which, after the expiration of the twenty-one years, were to be held for A. for life, and after his death for his sons in strict settlement, and A.'s income was insufficient to enable him to bring up and educate his infant sons in a manner suitable to their prospective positions in life, V. C. Malins allowed him 2,700*l.* a year out of the income of the property, with liberty to apply for an increased allowance if necessary when the children grew older (a); and this decision was followed by Pearson, J. (b). But in a case in Ireland where the circumstances were similar, the Court refused to follow the decision of V. C. Malins, and held that where there is an imperative trust to accumulate, it is the duty of the Court to carry out the testator's intention, and that the Court has no discretion to allow maintenance out of the income (c); and the Irish decision seems to be in accordance with sound principle (d). [Where accumulation directed.]

37. Where an accumulation has been directed by a testator, and the Court allows maintenance out of the accumulations, the order should be framed so as to protect the interests of third parties by directing the interests of the infants in any legacy or share of residue to be held as a security for recouping any diminution in the accumulations (e). [Interests of third parties protected.]

Where an infant was entitled, contingently on her attaining twenty-one or marrying, to a large property, the Court sanctioned a scheme for providing for her past and future maintenance, by effecting a policy of assurance payable on her death before either attaining twenty-one or marrying under that age, and mortgaging the policy and charging the infant's contingent interest to secure the necessary advances and compound interest, but it was expressly provided that the interest of any person other than the infant was not to be affected (f).]

Advancement out of capital.

38. A part of the capital may be sunk by a trustee without the direction of the Court for the advancement of a child, where the same sums if expended for maintenance would not have been allowed (a). [But as an "advancement" is merely a payment before the time fixed for the obtaining of an absolute interest by the beneficiary, a power of advancement will not, in the absence of express words, be construed to authorize an advance out of corpus, where by the terms of the instrument the beneficiary can never become entitled to a share of corpus (b).]

Advancement when there is a limitation over.

39. But a trustee cannot apply part of the principal towards the advancement of the child where the legacy is subject to a limitation over in favour of a stranger, for in such a case the Court itself could not make an order to that effect.

Thus in Lee v. Brown (c), where a testatrix gave 100*l.* to trustees upon trust to apply the produce to the maintenance and education of A. B., and when he should attain twenty-one to transfer to him the capital, but in case he died under that age the testatrix gave the legacy to his brother and sister equally,

Under portions would be ranked the following, viz. sums advanced on marriage (Lloyd v. Cocker, 27 Beav. 643), on setting up a child in business or putting him into a profession (Warr v. Warr, Prec. Ch. 213; Roper-Curzon v. Roper-Curzon, 11 Eq. 452), buying the goodwill of a business and giving stock-in-trade, or supplying further capital for carrying on the business (Gilbert v. Wetherall, 2 S. & St. 254; Taylor v. Taylor, 20 Eq. 155), or paying the entrance fee to an Inn of Court with a view to the Bar (Boyd v. Boyd, 4 Eq. 305), or buying a commission and providing the outfit (Taylor v. Taylor, sup.; Boyd v. Boyd, sup.). So a large sum given to a child in one payment might be presumed in the absence of evidence to be an advancement by way of portion. But the qualities of a portion would not attach to small sums paid by a father to a child whether an infant or adult (Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 403; Pusey v. Desbouverie, 3 P. W. 317, note o; Re Peacock's Estate, 14 Eq. 236; Watson v. Watson, 33 Beav. 574), or to temporary assistance in the discharge of his debts, or to payment of his travelling expenses, as a passage to India, or to the payment of a fee to a special pleader (Taylor v. Taylor, sup.), which would come rather under preliminary education than advancement. [But in the recent case of Re Blockley, 29 Ch. D. 250, Pearson, J., dissented from the view that a sum given by a father to his son to enable him to pay his debts could not be treated as an advancement. And as to advances by way of portion under the Statute of Distributions, see Simpson on Infants, 2nd ed. p. 190.]

Lord Alvanley said, "It certainly was not competent under this trust to the executor, nor could he, if he had applied have obtained permission from this Court, to advance any part of the capital of the legacy in putting the child out in the world; for if it had been such a case that the Court would have authorized the act that was done, I desire to be understood that it would be considered as properly done; for the principle is now established, that if an executor does without application what the Court would have approved, he shall not be called to account, and forced to undo that merely because it was done without application"(a). But where an infant was entitled, on a contingency, and at a certain time which had not arrived there was a power of advancement, and the trustee took upon himself the risk as against the person entitled if the contingency did not happen, and applied part of the capital for the advancement of the infant, he was allowed it in his account as between him and the infant who in the event became entitled (b).

Where there are cross limitations amongst the children.

40. And where legacies were given to children payable at twenty-one or marriage, with a limitation over on the death of any child before attaining twenty-one or marriage, not in favour of a stranger, but for the benefit of such of the children as should attain twenty-one or marry, a trustee, who had paid a premium on the apprenticeship of a child who died under twenty-one, was allowed it by the Court (c). The case turned upon the same principle as where a legacy is given to a class, all or some of whom must take the fund absolutely, when, as all have an equal chance of survivorship, the individuals of the class will be ordered maintenance even before their shares in the fund have become actually vested (d). This power is exercised by the Court, but cannot be exercised by trustees without the authority of the Court, nor can the Court itself make such an order in a summary way without the institution of a suit (e).

on the wording of the power, and the extent of the discretion conferred on the trustees. With this discretion, as in the analogous case of a power of maintenance (a), the Court will not readily interfere (b), though where the trustees fail to exercise the power, an inquiry has been directed as to the proper exercise of it (c). The trustees in exercising the discretion should, of course, regard the benefit of the cestui que trust as the primary consideration (d), but where it is clear that the proposed application will be beneficial to him, considerable latitude as to the mode of application may be permissible (e).

[Consent of tenant for life.]

Where the power is exercisable with the consent of the tenant for life, and the tenant for life becomes a bankrupt, his power of consenting is not extinguished, but can only be exercised with the consent of his trustee in bankruptcy acting under the directions of the Court of Bankruptcy (f).]

General power of advancing tenant for life.

42. Where trustees had a power to apply a moiety of a trust fund in or towards the preferment or advancement of the tenant for life, or otherwise for his benefit, in such a manner as they should in their discretion think fit, it was held that they might apply the moiety in payment of the debts of the tenant for life, the interest of which absorbed nearly the whole of his income and the principal of which he was unable to pay out of his own resources (g). [So a power of applying the capital for the benefit and advancement in the world of the tenant for life, coupled with words showing that the power of advancement was a large one, has been held to justify applications of the trust funds for the benefit of the tenant for life which were not strictly advancements (h).]

which has been barred by the Statute of Limitations; and upon the same principle he may retain his own debt though barred (a). But an executor would not be at liberty to pay such a debt after a decree for the administration of the testator's estate, for from that time any other creditor, or even a legatee, specific, pecuniary, or residuary, may plead the statute in taking the accounts (b), except to the debt of a plaintiff in a creditors' suit, to which debt the defendant, the executor, did not plead the statute by his statement of defence, and on the basis of which the decree has been made (c). If after a decree neither the executor nor the parties beneficially interested before the Court plead the statute, the Court will not set up the statute on behalf of absent parties, but if the executor omits to plead the statute, it is at his own risk (d).

Promise of subscription.

44. It sometimes happens that the deceased made some promise, written or verbal, to subscribe a certain sum for the promotion of some "charitable or public purpose." If nothing has been done in consequence of such promise, the executor or administrator must treat the promise as voluntary, and therefore null. [It has been said, and some authorities have been thought to lend countenance to the view, that if] other persons have acted on the faith of the promise and would suffer loss if it were not observed, the executor or administrator would be justified in giving it effect (e). [But in a recent case where a testator promised to give £20,000 to the Congregational Union in five annual instalments, and having paid three instalments died leaving the remaining instalments unpaid and unprovided for, and the Union had incurred liabilities in consequence of the promise, it was nevertheless held that there was no enforceable contract (f).

the 23rd sect. of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, to exercise the powers conferred by the Act (a).]

Power to release or compound debts.

46. A trustee may, under circumstances, release or compound a debt (b). But if a trustee release or compound a debt without some sufficient ground in justification (c), or if he sell the debt for a grossly inadequate consideration (d), he will clearly be answerable to the cestuis que trust for the amount of the devastavit. Executors under wills executed after the 28th August, 1860, [were by Lord Cranworth's Act] expressly authorized "to accept any composition, or any security, real or personal, for any debts due to the deceased, and to allow any time for payment of any such debts as they should think fit, and also to compromise, compound, or submit to arbitration all debts, accounts, claims and things whatsoever relating to the estate of the deceased, without being responsible for any loss to be occasioned thereby" (e). [But this section has been repealed and its place supplied by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, which as to executorships and trusts constituted or created either before or after the commencement of the Act provides by sect. 37, that (1) "an executor may pay or allow any debt or claim on any evidence that he thinks sufficient;" (2) "an executor, or two or more trustees acting together, or a sole acting trustee where, by the instrument, if any, creating the trust, a sole trustee is authorized to execute the trusts and powers thereof, may, if and as he or they think fit, accept any composition, or any security, real or personal, for any debt, or for any property, real or personal, claimed, and may allow any time for payment of any debt, and may compromise, compound, abandon, submit to arbitration, or otherwise settle, any debt, account, claim, or thing whatever relating to the testator's estate or to the trust," and may execute and do all such releases and things as may seem expedient without being responsible for any loss occasioned by anything done in good faith. But as regards trustees the section is subject to any contrary intention expressed in the instrument creating the trust (f).

(e) 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 30. [This section was held not to be confined to claims in the nature of debts, but to extend to claims of legatees, Re Warren, 53 L. J. N.S. Ch. 1016; 51 L. T. N.S. 561; 32 W. R. 916.]

[(f) 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, ss. 37, 71.]

In exercising the powers of this section in a case where there are several trustees, it is conceived that all the trustees must act together, except in cases in which, independently of the section, a majority of the trustees are by law capable of binding the minority (a). The object of the section was not to enable some of the trustees to act without the concurrence of their co-trustees.

It will be observed that the powers of this section are exercisable by a sole acting trustee only in cases where a sole trustee is by the instrument, if any, creating the trust "authorized to execute the trusts and powers thereof," but by the 38th section, as to trusts created by instruments coming into operation after the 31st December, 1881, any trust or power vested in two or more trustees jointly, in the absence of a contrary intention in the instrument creating the trust or power, may be exercised or performed by the survivor for the time being, and it seems to follow that in the case of trusts falling within this section the powers of sect. 37 may be exercised by a sole surviving trustee.

This section has largely extended the powers of executors and trustees, and it would seem that in future the only question will be whether the executors or trustees have acted in good faith in relation to any of the matters authorized by the section.

[Discretion of executors.]

Independently of the section, executors have a discretion whether they will press a debtor for payment, and will not be held liable for wilful neglect or default if they have exercised their discretion honestly and fairly in giving time to a debtor although loss may result from the delay (b).]

Settlement with one residuary legatee.

47. Executors and trustees of a will when they have discharged the funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies, may come to a final account with one of the residuary legatees separately, and if such residuary legatee be paid only what is his fair share at the time, he will not be made to account to the other residuary legatees, if the undistributed part afterwards become depreciated or lost (c).

Appropriation of residue.

48. Where the residue consists of a great variety of securities, the question arises whether the trustees in the absence of any special power can virtute officii, where infants are concerned, divide the residue by appropriating some securities to one residuary legatee and other securities to another, but so that the distribution is a fair one according to the market price of the day of the funds so appropriated. The Court can make such an apportionment, for in a suit guardians ad litem of the infants are appointed and are heard on their behalf to protect their interests; but out of Court where the voice of the infants cannot be heard, it would be unsafe for trustees to make such an apportionment on their own responsibility. However, where trustees are directed to invest the infants' share on any particular securities, they might accept securities of the nature prescribed at the market price, as the transaction when resolved would be the payment of so much money, and the investment of it by the trustees in the requisite securities. Where there are no special powers, the trustees should turn the whole of the irregular species of property into money and divide the proceeds.

Release of equity of redemption.

49. Trustees of an equity of redemption of lands mortgaged for more than their value, may, it is conceived, release the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, rather than be made defendants to a foreclosure suit, the cost of which, so far as incurred by themselves, would fall upon the trust estate.

Whether trustees mortgagees can release part of the land in mortgage.

50. Where trustees are mortgagees they are often requested to release part of the land from the security, in order to enable the mortgagor to deal with it for his own convenience. Where the value of the land is not excessive as compared with the debt, it would, of course, be a gross breach of trust to deteriorate the security. But suppose the value of the part left in mortgage to be (say) double the amount of the debt, may the trustees release the residue? It is presumed that trustees can never justify the abandonment of any part of the security on the mere ground of consulting the convenience of the mortgagor; and they must be prepared to show that the act was calculated under the circumstances to promote the interest of the cestuis que trust. But if the mortgagor be ready to pay off the mortgage on a transfer of the security, unless the trustees will consent to release, and the existing mortgage, even when confined to the narrower parcels, is a clearly beneficial one and the value still abundantly ample, the trustees would surely incur no responsibility by acceding to the arrangement (a). The prevailing opinion of conveyancers appears to be that where trustees have a power of investing on mortgage and of varying securities the transaction will be considered as tantamount to repayment of the mortgage money, and reinvestment by the trustees on a mortgage of the hereditaments retained as a security, and that the purchaser of the released hereditaments is not bound to see to the sufficiency of the new security, or that the acceptance of the new security does not involve a breach of trust (a).

[Whether bound to consolidate mortgages.]

[51. It is conceived that although trustees holding independent securities from the same mortgagor may have the right to consolidate them, it is not imperative upon them to do so, but that they may deal with the securities independently, or allow one or more of them to be redeemed, without incurring any liability for loss which may arise from the subsequent depreciation in the other securities. They should, however, satisfy themselves before parting with any of the securities, or allowing any of them to be redeemed, that the margin of value on those which are retained is then sufficient to justify a present advance to the amount remaining due to the trustees upon such securities.]

Discharge of a mortgage on a settled estate.

52. Trustees of a settled estate with a power of sale and reinvestment may, it is conceived, sell part of the estate to pay off a mortgage affecting the estate though not mentioned in the settlement, for this in substance is a reinvestment, and à fortiori if the trustees have a power of investing on real securities until a purchase can be found, they can sell part of the estate and apply the proceeds in taking a transfer of the mortgage, provided it be an adequate security (b).

Sale of limited interests.

53. Trustees for sale of a limited interest in an estate (as a remainder), or of an aliquot part of the estate (as an undivided one-fourth), may concur with the other parties in a sale of the whole estate for one entire sum (c), and may agree afterwards as to the apportionment of the purchase money, and if the parties cannot agree the apportionment will be made by the Court (d). But otherwise, if there be not any intelligible principle upon which the apportionment can be made (e).

Reimbursement of expenses on account of the trust.

54. A trustee may reimburse himself a sum of money bonâ fide advanced by him for the benefit of the cestui que trust, or even for his own protection in the execution of his office. For, "As it is a rule," said Lord Chancellor King, "that the cestui que trust ought to save the trustee harmless, so within the reason of that rule, when the trustee has honestly and fairly, without any possibility of being a gainer, laid down money by which the cestui que trust is discharged from being liable for the whole money lent, or from a plain and great hazard of being so, he ought to be repaid" (a).

Power of trustees for sale to clear the estate.

55. A trustee for sale has been held to be justified in applying part of the purchase money in paying off a charge without satisfaction of which the purchaser refused to complete, and which the trustee was professionally advised was still subsisting, though the charge itself was open to doubt (b).

Power to grant leases.

56. A trustee of lands may grant a reasonable husbandry lease (c), in the fair management of the estate (d). But he has no power to demise where it is a simple trust, and the cestui que trust is in possession, except he do it with the cestui que trust's concurrence. And primâ facie a trustee for sale would not be justified in granting a lease (e). And though a trustee may grant a farming lease, it does not follow that he could grant a mining lease, for the latter is pro tanto a destruction of the corpus (f).

[Trustees having power to grant leases to "any person or persons" may lease to a limited company (g).

By sect. 43 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (h), when, by any instrument, a lease of a holding is authorized to be made, provided that the best rent or reservation in the nature of rent is reserved, on a lease to the tenant of the holding, it shall not be necessary, in estimating such rent or reservation, to take into account against the tenant the increase (if any) in the value of such holding arising from improvements made or paid for by him.]

so as to give the lenders a remedy against the company (a). And where, without any special authority being conferred by the deed of settlement, money is borrowed for launching or enlarging the concern, the managers (though made to pay upon their personal liability under the contract) have no remedy over against the other members of the company (b). But every business must be carried on at either a profit or loss, and as the members of the company take the profit, they must also bear the loss, and therefore if the managers incur debts or expenses by employing labour or ordering goods in the ordinary course of business, or borrow money and apply it to these purposes, they must be indemnified in equity by the other members of the company (c).

[Further powers are conferred by the Copyhold Act, 1887 (e), which provides, by sect. 39, that anything by the Copyhold Acts required or authorized to be done by the lord of a manor or the tenant or owner of any land or right may be done by such lord or tenant or owner notwithstanding that he may be a trustee for any person, and by sect. 40 that when either the lords or tenants are trustees, and one or more of such trustees shall be abroad or shall be incapable or refuse to act, any proceedings necessary to be done by such trustees for effecting any enfranchisement under the Acts may be done by the other trustee or trustees as the case may be.]

[60. By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, trustees in receipt of the income in right of a long term, or having the term vested in them in trust for sale, may exercise the powers of the Act for enlargement of the term into a fee simple. The estate in fee simple so acquired is to be subject to all the same trusts, powers, executory limitations over, rights, and equities as the term would have been subject to if it had not been enlarged. But where such long leaseholds have been settled in trust by reference to freeholds so as to go along with them as far as the law permits, and at the time of the enlargement the ultimate beneficial interest in the term has not become absolutely and indefeasibly vested, the estate in fee simple is, without prejudice to any conveyance for value previously made, to be conveyed and settled, and devolve in the same manner as the freeholds (a).

[Compensation for agricultural improvements.]

61. By the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (b), a tenant who has made on his holding certain improvements specified in the schedule to the Act is entitled on quitting his holding at the determination of his tenancy to compensation from the landlord for such improvements to be ascertained as provided by the Act. But by sect. 31, where the landlord is a trustee, the amount of compensation is not to be recoverable from him personally, but is to be charged on and recoverable against the holding only. And by sect. 42, subject to certain provisions as to Crown, duchy, ecclesiastical, and charity lands, a landlord, whatever may be his estate or interest in his holding, may give any consent, make any agreement, or do or have done to him any act in relation to improvements, in respect of which compensation is payable under the Act, as if he were, in the case of an estate of inheritance owner thereof in fee, and in the case of a leasehold possessed of the whole estate in the leasehold. By the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886, a tenant for life of land subject to an extraordinary charge or a rent-charge under the Act may borrow any money required for redemption thereof, or may charge the inheritance with repayment of the money so borrowed with interest (c).]

63. The powers assigned in the preceding pages to trustees must be taken subject to the qualification, that, if a suit has been instituted, and a decree made, for the execution of the trust, the powers of the trustees are henceforth so far paralyzed that the authority of the Court must sanction every subsequent proceeding (c). Thus the trustees cannot commence or defend any action or suit, or interfere in any other legal proceeding, without first consulting the Court as to the propriety of so doing (d): a trustee for sale cannot sell (e): the committee of a lunatic cannot make repairs (f): an executor cannot pay debts (g), or deal with the assets for the purpose of investment (h). But an executor as to a chattel, not the subject of the suit specifically, can after decree give a good title to a bonâ fide purchaser not having actual notice of the lis pendens (i), and it is presumed that he can equally, where there is no receiver appointed, sign a valid receipt for any part of the testator's personal estate (j). [And where an administration action has been heard on further consideration, and no subsequent further consideration has been reserved, but general liberty to apply has been given, trustees may exercise their powers without obtaining the sanction of the Court (k).]

Case of suit and no decree.

64. An action in which a writ merely has been issued is distinguishable from one in which a decree has been made, for until decree the plaintiff may dismiss his action at any moment, and should he do so, the progress of the trust may have been arrested

(d) See Jones v. Powell, 4 Beav. 96. The Court is sometimes reluctant to give leave to institute or defend a suit, but holds out that if the trustee or executor acts bonâ fide the Court will protect him. The reason for this disinclination no doubt is that the application to the Court is ex parte, and is sometimes made a vehicle for multiplying costs. However, the Court frequently gives such leave, and a trustee or executor cannot be advised to commence or defend a suit without, at least, submitting the case to the Court, though no order may be made.

for no purpose (a). However, even in this case the trustees cannot be advised to act without first consulting the Court, and if by acting independently of the Court expenses be incurred which might have been avoided had the trustees applied to the Court, they may be made to bear them personally (b).

Duties of executor after institution of suit.

65. Even after a decree made the trustee is not absolved from the duties imposed by his office. Thus after a decree in an administration suit an executor was held liable for having allowed a policy of insurance to drop without any sufficient reason (c).

SECTION II.

THE SPECIAL POWERS OF TRUSTEES.

Upon this branch of our subject we shall consider, First, The different kinds of powers; Secondly, The construction of powers; Thirdly, The effect of disclaimer, assignment of the estate, and survivorship among the trustees: Fourthly, The control of the Court over the exercise of powers: [and Fifthly, The restrictions on the powers of trustees imposed by the Settled Land Acts.]

I. Of the different kinds of powers.

Powers legal and equitable distinguished.

1. In applying the doctrine of powers to the subject of trusts it may be useful to regard powers as either legal or equitable: the former, such as operate upon the legal estate, and so are matter of cognizance in Courts of common law; the latter, such as affect the equitable interest only, and so fall exclusively under the notice of Courts of equity. Thus, if lands be limited to the use of A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs, and a power operating under the Statute of Uses be given to C., the execution of the power works a conveyance of the legal estate; but if lands be limited to the use of A. and his heirs upon trust for B. for life, and after his death for C. and his heirs, and a power not operating under the Statute of Uses be given either to the trustee or to the cestui que trust, the execution of such a power will have no effect at law, but will merely serve to transfer the beneficial interest in equity, and may therefore be designated by the name of an equitable power.

(b) Attorney-General v. Clack, 1 Beav. 467; and see Cafe v. Bent, 3 Hare, 249.

(c) Garner v. Moore, 3 Drew. 277.

Equitable powers, whether annexed to the estate or simply collateral.

2. An equitable, the same as a legal power, may be either annexed to the estate or be simply collateral; but whether it shall be taken as the one or the other will depend on the question, whether the donee of the power be possessed of the equitable, that is, of the beneficial interest or not. Thus, where a testator devised an estate to his sister and her heirs for ever, upon trust to settle it on such of the descendants of the testator's mother as his sister should think fit, [with a direction whereby in effect the appointment was not to take place until the sister's death or the previous determination of her life interest,] and the devisee having married, the question was raised whether the execution of the power by her, as she was under coverture at the time, was to be considered as valid, Lord Hardwicke held that this was a power without an interest, i.e. without any beneficial interest, and could therefore be executed by the feme covert (a). On the other hand, where the legal estate was devised to trustees in fee upon trust for an infant feme covert for her sole and separate use during her life, and upon trust to permit her by deed or writing executed in the presence of three or more witnesses, notwithstanding her coverture, to dispose of the estate as she should think fit, and the testator died leaving the feme covert his heir-at-law, and she, during the continuance of the coverture and infancy, exercised the power by will, Lord Hardwicke, upon the question whether the power had been duly executed, observed, that this was a power coupled with an interest, which was always considered different from naked powers: it was admitted that if this execution was to operate on the estate of the infant it might not be good: now this was clearly so, for she had the trust in equity for life, with the trust of the inheritance in her in the meantime, so that this was directly a power over her own inheritance, which could not be executed by an infant (b).

[Exercise of powers by infant.]

[3. In the case of personal estate, however, an infant may exercise a power in gross. Thus, where under a marriage settlement an infant feme covert, to whom the income of the settled property was given for her life for her separate use, had, in the events which happened, a general power limited to her of appointing the trust funds, after her death and subject to the interest of her husband, by deed or will, and she exercised the power by deed, and died an infant, it was held by the late M.R. and affirmed by the Court of

(b) Hearle v. Greenbank, 1 Ves. 298; see 306; and see Blithe's case, Freem. 91; Penne v. Peacock, For. 43.

Appeal, dissentiente Cotton, L.J., that the power was well exercised, and the M.R. observed, "If it is clearly settled that the first class of powers—powers simply collateral—can be exercised by an infant, there can be no reason why the second class of powers—powers in gross—should not be so exercised when the exercise cannot affect the infant's interest; I can see no sufficient distinction between the two cases. It can make no difference that the infant has some interest under the settlement, so long as that interest cannot be affected by the exercise of the power" (a).]

Bare powers, and powers coupled with a trust.

4. Again, powers, in the sense in which the term is commonly used, may be distributed into mere powers, and powers coupled with a trust (b). The former are powers in the proper sense of the word; that is, not imperative, but purely arbitrary; powers which the trustee cannot be compelled to execute, and which, on failure of the trustee, cannot be executed vicariously by the Court (c). The latter, on the other hand, are not arbitrary, but imperative, have all the nature and substance of a trust, and ought rather, as Lord Hardwicke observed, to be designated by the name of trusts (d). "It is perfectly clear," said Lord Eldon, "that where there is a mere power, and that power is not executed, the Court cannot execute it. It is equally clear, that wherever a trust is created, and the execution of the trust fails by the death of the trustee or by accident, this Court will execute the trust. But there are not only a mere trust and a mere power, but there is also known to this Court a power which the party by whom it is given is intrusted and required to execute; and with regard to that species of power, the Court considers it as partaking so much of the nature and qualities of a trust, that if the person who has the duty imposed upon him does not discharge it, the Court will, to a certain extent, discharge the duty in his room and place" (e).

Strict powers, and powers directory.

5. Again, powers have been dealt with by the Court as either of a strict or of a directory character: the former such as only arise under the exact circumstances prescribed by the settlement; the latter such as being merely monitory may be taken with a degree of latitude. Thus, where an advowson was vested in trustees upon trust to elect and present a fit person within six months from the incumbent's decease, it was considered that the clause was directory, and that the trustees might equally elect and present, although that period had elapsed (a). So, where six trustees were empowered when reduced to three to substitute others, and all died but one, it was held competent to the sole survivor to fill up the number (b). And where in the case of twenty-five trustees, the direction was, that when reduced to fifteen the survivors should nominate, it was determined by the Court that, although seventeen remained, the survivors were at liberty to exercise their power, but that, when reduced to only fifteen, they were compellable to do so (c).

Charity.

6. These were cases of charitable trusts, in which it seems a greater latitude of construction is allowed. But in another case, where the trusts were not charitable, and estates were devised to trustees upon trust to sell "with all convenient speed, and within five years after the testator's decease," it was held that these words were directory only, and that the trustees could sell and make a good title, although the five years had expired (d).

II. We proceed to consider the construction of powers. As the powers of trustees are regulated by the doctrines applicable to powers in general, and as the admirable treatise of Lord St. Leonards is in every one's hands, we shall advert only to some cases of most frequent occurrence.

Power to "A. and B., and their heirs."

1. If a power be given to "A. and B. and their heirs," it is perfectly clear, that, although the limitation of an estate in such terms would so vest it in the grantees that they might convey it to a stranger, and the survivor devise it, the power is not to be construed as intended in like manner to be assignable and devisable (e).

Chief Justice Wilmot's opinion.

Upon the subject of such a power where it was given personally, and unaccompanied by any estate, to A. and B. and their heirs, Lord Chief Justice Wilmot observed, "It is asked What must become of the power upon the death of one of the trustees? It must be considered as a tenancy in common. Had the words been 'their several and respective heirs,' it would have been clear; and in common parlance, and according to the common apprehension of mankind, when an estate is given to two men and their heirs, no one not illumined with the legal nature of joint-tenancy could ever conceive the estate was to go to the heirs of the survivor. It is equivalent to saying, With consent of both while they live; and when one dies, that consent shall devolve upon his heir; the heir of the dead trustee shall consent as well as the surviving trustee. One may abuse the power; I will supply the loss of one by his heir, and the loss of both by the heirs of both" (a).

Mere power.

But this was where A. and B. had a mere power, for where A. and B. are trustees of an estate limited to them and their heirs, and the power constitutes an essential part of the trust, it will pass with the estate to the survivor (b).

Townsend v. Wilson.

In Townsend v. Wilson (c) a power of sale was given to three trustees to preserve contingent remainders and their heirs; and it was directed that the money to arise from the sale should be paid into the hands of the trustees or the survivors or survivor of them, and the executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, and there was a power of appointment of new trustees, with a direction that such appointment should take place as often as any one or more of the trustees should die, &c. One of the trustees died, and it was determined by the Court of Queen's Bench, that the survivors alone were incapable of exercising the power of sale. Lord Eldon was dissatisfied with this decision, and asked, "Did the Court of Queen's Bench consider that the two surviving trustees and the heir of the deceased trustee, were to act together? for it was one thing to say that the survivors could not act until another was appointed; and a different thing to say, the heir of the deceased trustee could act in the meantime" (d). But his Lordship so far bowed to the authority of the decision, that he refused under similar circumstances to compel a purchaser to accept the title (e). In Townsend v. Wilson the trustees had not the fee, and the power was not to be executed as part of a trusteeship, and it is therefore no authority against the execution of a trust by the surviving trustees. Indeed, where an estate was devised to three trustees and their respective heirs, upon trust that they and their respective heirs should sell, the word "respective" was rejected for surplusage, and it was held that the survivors could make a title (a).

Hewett v. Hewett.

2. In Hewett v. Hewett (b), a testator devised his estate to four persons to uses in strict settlement, with a power to the tenants for life, when in actual possession, to cut such trees as the four devisees to uses, or the survivors or survivor of them (omitting the words "and the heirs of the survivor") should direct; and all the trustees being dead, the question was whether the power was gone. Lord Henley held, that, upon the construction of the will, the testator intended the power to be co-extensive with the life estates, and that the trustees were interposed as supervisors only to prevent destruction; and that the office of the trustees was not personal, but such as might be executed by the Court. He, therefore, considered the power as subsisting, and referred it to the Master to inquire what timber was fit to be cut. The Court, therefore, did not regard the authority to the trustees as a mere power, but as a trust.

Power co-extensive with life estate.

Power to "trustee and his assigns."

3. Where a discretionary legal power is expressly limited to "A. and his assigns," the grantee or devisee of A., and even a claimant under him by operation of law as an heir or executor, may exercise the power (c); but in a trust, if an estate be vested in a trustee upon trust that he, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns shall sell, etc., the introduction of the word assigns will not authorize the trustee to assign the estate to a stranger (d), nor, if the assignment be made, will the stranger be capable of exercising the power (e).

Power given to a mortgagee.

4. In a mortgage, with a power of sale limited to the mortgagee, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, the intention is that the power should go along with, and be annexed to, the security; and therefore, if the mortgage be assigned to a stranger, and the legal estate be conveyed to the stranger or to a trustee for him, the stranger, alone or with the concurrence of the trustee, can give a good legal and equitable title (f); and even if a mortgage be made to A. and B. to secure a joint advance and the power of sale and signing receipts be limited to A. and B., their heirs and assigns, it has been held that as the power and the security were plainly meant to be coupled together, and the security enures to the benefit of the survivor (the advance being a joint one), the survivor may also sell (a).

Power indicating personal confidence to "A. and his executors."

5. If a power indicating personal confidence be given to a "trustee and his executors," and the executor of the trustee dies having appointed an executor, the latter executor, though by law the executor not only of his immediate testator but also of the trustee, will not, it is said, be so considered for the purposes of the power (b); for a matter of personal confidence is not to be extended beyond the express words and clear intention of the settlor; and in this case, the settlor may have meant the power to be exercised exclusively by the executors, whom the trustee had himself named, and not by a person who is executor of the trustee by operation of law only. This, however, is a narrow construction, and the liberality of modern times may not improbably hold that, if a power be given to executors, the settlor must be taken to have contemplated generally every one whom the law invests with that character.

Power to "executors" "trustees."

6. A power limited to "executors" or "sons in law" may be exercised by the survivors so long as the plural number remains (c), and if a power be limited to a number of "trustees," we may reasonably conclude that, whether they have any estate or not—i.e. whether the power be an adjunct to the trust or collateral to it, it may be exercised by the surviving trustees. And a power given to "executors" will, if annexed to the executorship, be continued to the single survivor (d); and so a power given to "trustees" will, as annexed to the estate and office, be exercisable by the single survivor (e); but it cannot be exercised by one trustee in the lifetime of the other who has not effectually disclaimed (f). And it has been said that if a power to vary the rights of parties be communicated to the "trustees for the time being," it cannot be exercised by a single trustee (g). And where there was a trust for sale, but no sale was to be made without the consent of the testator's sons and daughters, and he left seven sons and daughters, and one died, it was held that a sale with the consent of the survivors was too doubtful a title to be specifically enforced (a).

Power to "trustees and survivors."

7. A discretionary power to four trustees "and the survivors of them" cannot, it seems, be executed by the last survivor (b); for though a power to trustees may, in general, be held to survive, an intention to the contrary may be fairly inferred: the settlor may be supposed to have said, "I repose a confidence in any two of the trustees jointly, but in neither one of them individually." But if a power be limited to four trustees "and the survivor of them," it may well be argued that, on the death of one, the power may still be exercised by the survivors; for there can be no valid reason why a person who trusted the four jointly, and each of them individually, should refuse to repose a confidence in the survivors for the time being (c).

To "trustees and survivor."

Trower v. Knightley.

8. In a case before Sir J. Leach, a testator devised an estate to trustees upon trust as to one moiety for A. for life, remainder to her children at twenty-one, and as to the other moiety for B. for life, remainder to her children at twenty-one, and gave the trustees a power of sale "during the continuance of the trust." A. died, and her children attained twenty-one, and the question was whether the trustees could, under the power, sell the whole estate, the children of B. being infants. The Vice-Chancellor held, that if the children of A. could call for a present conveyance of their moiety it would have the effect of depriving B. and her children of the benefit of the power of sale, and also of the leasing power given to the trustees, for that an undivided moiety could not advantageously be sold or leased, and that the testator must have meant to continue the powers of ownership to the trustees until there were owners competent to deal with the whole estate (d).

Power "during the continuance of the trust."

9. But if a power be given to trustees to be exercised "during the continuance of the trust," it cannot be exercised after the time when the trust ought to have been completed, though, from the delay of the trustees, it happens that the trust has not in fact been executed (e).

(e) Wood v. White, 2 Keen, 664. It was determined on appeal that the trusts in this case were still in being, 4 M. & Cr. 460.

Powers cease when settlement is at an end.

10. And though the power be not confined expressly to the continuance of the trust, yet the power is gone when the objects of the trust have been fully exhausted, but not before (a).

[But the mere fact of the beneficial interest in the property having become vested in persons, all of whom are sui juris, will not put an end to the power, if, on the construction of the instrument creating the power, the intention appears that it should still be exercisable, and the power in its creation was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities (b).

[Within what time power must be exercised.]

If a power of sale be given in general terms, the question arises, within what limit of time it must be exercised. This will depend on the nature of the limitations contained in the will or settlement; for when, by reason of the expiration or cesser of the limitations, the absolute interests come into existence, the power is considered to be at an end. And as, for the settlement to be valid, the limitations must become absolute within the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities, a power which is to continue in existence until the interests are absolute will also be valid. And where the settlement contains in the first instance absolute limitations of interest, a power of sale given for the purpose of division among the beneficiaries will not be invalid, but it must be exercised within a reasonable time (c).]

[Power for purpose of division.]

Joint powers.

11. Powers given to trustees must be exercised by them jointly, but an act by one trustee, with the sanction and approval of a co-trustee, will be deemed the act of both (d).

[Contract for lease by tenant for life carried out by trustees.]

[12. Where a power of leasing was given to a legal tenant for life, and after his death to trustees, during the minority of a legal tenant in tail, and the tenant for life entered into a contract to grant a building lease but died before the lease was granted, it was held that the trustees had power to effectuate the contract of the tenant for life by executing a lease (e).]

persons claiming under the settlement, and must not deviate from the terms of the trust from moral considerations, or seek to do what they may think right, if in excess of their trust (a).

III. Of the effect of disclaimer, assignment and survivorship of the estate.

First. Of disclaimer.

Effect of disclaimer upon powers.

1. If a power be given to several trustees, and one of them disclaims [the trust], the power may be exercised by the continuing trustees or trustee (b).

In Hawkins v. Kemp (c), a purchaser at first objected that the accepting trustees could not exercise the power, or not without the appointment of a new trustee in the place of the trustee who had disclaimed, but the point was afterwards abandoned by the purchaser's counsel as untenable. And the late Vice-Chancellor of England, in a subsequent case, observed: "I have always understood, ever since the point was decided in Hawkins v. Kemp, or rather was, as the judges said in that case, properly abandoned by the defendant's counsel as not capable of being contended for, that where two or more persons are appointed trustees, and all of them, except one, renounce, the trust may be executed by that one" (d).

Adams v. Taunton.

Adams v. Taunton (e) is a direct decision by Sir J. Leach to the same effect. A testator had devised his estates to A. and B. upon trust to sell and apply the proceeds amongst his children, and declared that the receipts of the said A. and B. should be sufficient discharges. A. renounced, and Sir J. Leach, after having taken time to consult the authorities, said, "It being now settled that a devise to A., B., and C. upon trust is a good devise to such of the three as accept the trust, it follows by necessary construction that by the receipt of the trustees is to be intended the receipt of those who accept the trust" (f).

Powers to "trustees" or "executors."

2. If the power be not given to the trustees by name, but to the "trustees" or "executors;" it is clear, à fortiori, that if

(f) From his Honour's words, "the receipts of the trustees," it might be thought the power had been given, not to A. and B. by name, but to "the trustees:" the R. L. has been consulted, and it appears, as stated in the report, that the power was given to "the said A. and B."

one disclaim the acting trustees or executors may exercise the power (a).

[Disclaimer of power under Conveyancing Act.]

[3. By the Conveyancing Act, 1882, sect. 6, which applies to powers created by instruments coming into operation either before or after the commencement of the Act, "a person to whom any power, whether coupled with an interest or not, is given, may by deed disclaim the power; and after disclaimer shall not be capable of exercising or joining in the exercise of the power. On such disclaimer the power may be exercised by the other or others, or the survivors or survivor of the others, of the persons to whom the power is given, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument creating the power" (b). But this section does not authorize a trustee to disclaim a particular power so as to vest the exercise of it in his co-trustees while he continues a trustee for other purposes (c).

[Renunciation.]

4. It has been held in Ireland that the renunciation by one executor, by an instrument under seal, of the office of executor operates as a disclaimer under this section of powers annexed to the executorship (d).]

Secondly, Of assignment.

Effect of assignment of the estate.

1. The power is not appendant to the estate, so as to follow along with it in every transfer by the trustee, or devolution by course of law (e). But where the estate is duly transferred to persons regularly appointed trustees under a power in the settlement creating the trust, the transferees take the estate and the office together, and can exercise the power. Where the settlement contains no such power, it seems that the appointment of new trustees by the Court would not, but for recent Acts, communicate arbitrary or special discretionary powers (f), unless they were expressly (a) or in fair construction limited to the trustees for the time being (b). If powers be given to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and the Court appoints new trustees and makes a vesting order, the new trustees are duly constituted assigns, and may therefore be justly considered within the purview of the settlement. But assigns from a trustee mero motu, and without competent authority, would not be so considered.

[2. By a recent enactment every trustee appointed by any Court of competent jurisdiction has as well before as after the trust property becomes by law, or by assurance, or otherwise, vested in him, the same powers, authorities, and discretions, and may in all respects act as if he had been originally nominated a trustee by the instrument creating the trust; and this enactment applies to appointments made either before or after the commencement of the Act (c).] [44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 33.]

Release with intention of disclaiming.

3. We have seen that if one trustee disclaims in the strict sense of the word, the power will not be extinguished, but will survive to the co-trustee; but, according to the old doctrine, if a trustee instead of disclaiming had assigned the estate, that was a virtual acceptance of the trust, and then the conveyance of the retiring trustee did not pass the power into the hands of the continuing trustee (d); but at the present day it seems a release with the intention of disclaimer would have all the operation of a formal and actual disclaimer (e).

Whether the power will remain in the trustee after alienation of the estate.

4. Though an assignment of the estate will not carry the power to the assignee, it does not follow that the power will remain in the assignor, so as to be transmissible to his representative; for where it was the settlor's intention that the estate and power should be coupled together, the trustee, by severing the union through the alienation of the estate, may intercept the execution of the power by the representative. Thus [where, prior to the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, an estate was] limited to A. and his heirs upon a trust to be executed by A. and his heirs, and A. in his lifetime conveyed away the estate, or devised it by his will, it was held that the heir of A. could not execute the power (a); for the heir was no heir quatenus this estate; for it was not allowed to descend, but was aliened or devised away from the person who would have been heir; [and the same principle equally applies to a case falling under the recent Act (b), where if the estate be conveyed away by the trustee in his lifetime, so as not to vest in his personal representative, such representative cannot execute the power.]

Case of real and personal estate coupled together.

5. In Cole v. Wade (c), a testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to Ruddle and Wade (whom he appointed his executors), their executors, administrators, and assigns, and directed his said trustees and executors, after making certain payments thereout, to convey and dispose of the said residue of his real and personal estate unto and amongst such of his relations and kindred in such proportions, manner and form, as his said executors should think proper, his intention being that everything relating to that disposition should be entirely at the discretion of the said trustees and executors, and the heirs, executors and administrators of the survivor of them (d). Wade, the survivor, devised and bequeathed the real and personal estate of the testator to William and Edward Bray, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, upon the trusts of the will, and named them his executors for that specific purpose only, appointing his wife and another person executors as to his own estates. The question was discussed, whether William and Edward Bray could exercise the power of distribution among the relations. Sir W. Grant said, "The original trustees and executors were the same persons; all the real and personal estate was vested equally in them; but the heirs and executors of the surviving trustee might be different persons; yet all the directions about the distribution of the residue proceed upon the supposition that the same persons are to select the objects and settle the proportions in which they are to take; but if the real estate is to go to one, and the personal estate to another, the testator has left it entirely uncertain how the power is to be executed. Whether the Messrs. Bray can in any sense be the executors of Wade, with whose own property they are not to intermeddle, it is not material to determine." His Honour, therefore, decided that the power had become extinguished.

(c) 16 Ves. 27.

(d) The testator used this last form of expression elsewhere in the will.

6. But the existence of a power annexed to a trust and forming an integral part of it does not depend on the continuance of the legal estate per se in the donee of the power, where there is no express declaration to the contrary; as, where a testator gave a sum of money to be invested in the funds in the names of the head of a college at Oxford, the junior bailiff of the city, and the elder churchwarden of a parish, the dividends to be applied to certain purposes as the trustees should approve, and the bailiff and churchwarden being annual officers, the investment as directed by the will would have been accompanied with frequent transfers of the stock, the Court ordered that the money should be invested in the names of two new trustees jointly with the head of the college, but that the objects of the charity should be nominated and approved in the manner pointed out by the will (a). The estate may be severed from the powers.

[7. By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, "a person to whom any power, whether coupled with an interest or not, is given may by deed release, or contract not to exercise the power;" and that, whether the power was created by an instrument coming into operation before or after the commencement of the Act (b). But it has been held that this does not apply to a power coupled with a duty; as to which Kay, J., observed, "a trustee who has a power coupled with a duty is bound, so long as he remains a trustee, to preserve that power, and to exercise his discretion as circumstances arise whether the power shall be used or not, and can no more by his own voluntary act destroy a power of that sort than he can voluntarily put an end to any other trust that may be committed to him" (c).] [Release of powers under recent Act.] [Does not apply to power coupled with a duty.]

Thirdly. As to survivorship.

1. The survivorship of the estate carries with it the survivorship of such powers as are annexed to the trust. If a mere power be given to A., B., and C., and one of them die, it is perfectly clear that the power cannot be exercised by the survivors: but if trustees have an equitable power annexed to the trust, and forming an integral part of it, as if an estate be vested Survivorship of powers.

in three trustees upon trust to sell, then, as the power is coupled with an interest, and the interest survives, the power also survives (a).

Trust powers.

The principle that trust powers survive with the estate appears to be as old as the time of Lord Coke, for he observes, "If a man deviseth land to his executors to be sold, and maketh two executors, and the one dieth, yet the survivor may sell the land, because as the estate, so the trust shall survive; and so note the diversity between a bare trust and a trust coupled with an interest" (b). At the present day a trust, that is, a power imperative, whether a bare power, or a power coupled with an interest, would be equally carried into execution in the forum of a Court of equity; for the maxim now is, The trust or power imperative is the estate. But in the time of Lord Coke, had a bare power been devised to A. and B. to sell an estate, as for payment of debts, the authority was one which A. and B. during their joint lives were compellable by subpœna in Chancery to execute for the benefit of the creditors; but if A. happened to die before the sale was carried into effect, the trust was extinguished, and the heir who had always retained a right to the intermediate rents and profits was then seised of the absolute and indefeasible inheritance. But in case the testator had devised the estate to A. and B. to sell for payment of debts, then, as the trust was not a mere power, but a power coupled with an interest, it received a more liberal construction, and as upon the death of A. the whole estate passed by survivorship to B., the power, being annexed to the estate, was held to survive with it (1).

Before Statute of Uses a power given by will over the legal estate was void.

But over the use was good.

The execution of the power over the use passed the legal estate.

(1) In examining the cases of powers before the Statute of Uses, the following points may be usefully noticed: 1. A person seised of the legal estate of lands could not, before the Statute of Wills, have devised them directly, and therefore he could not have gained his object indirectly by means of a power: had a testator devised that A. and B. should sell his estate, the authority was void. 2. But a use was devisable, and therefore, if cestui que use had devised the lands to a stranger, though the legal estate did not pass (the Statute of Richard the Third, which made mention of feoffments and grants, not extending to wills), the devisee might still have sued his subpœna in Chancery, and have compelled the feoffees to execute a conveyance of the estate. 3. If cestui que use had devised that A. and B. should sell, and A. and B. in pursuance of the authority had made a feoffment or grant, this assurance seems to have operated retrospectively as the assurance of the testator, and so, falling within the words of the Survivorship where the power is given to trustees by name.

2. A distinction may perhaps be thought to exist between cases where the language of the trust is indefinite as to the persons by whom it is to be exercised (for example, where an estate is vested in trustees and their heirs in trust to sell, &c.), and those cases where the estate is limited to persons by name, as upon trust that "the said A. and B.," or that "the said trustees" (which is equivalent to naming them), shall sell; but the Courts have never relied upon any distinction of the kind, and it seems to be now decided that even where the trust is reposed in the trustees by name, the survivor, who takes the estate with a duty annexed to it, can execute the trust (a); and the rule of survivorship applies not only to trusts, or powers imperative which are construed as trusts, but also to such discretionary powers as are annexed to the office of trustee, and are meant to form an integral part of it (b).

Powers not annexed to the trust.

3. But powers which are purely arbitrary, and independent of the trust, and not intended in furtherance of the trust, must, it is conceived, be construed strictly, and be governed by the rules applicable to ordinary powers. If, for instance, the trustees by name have a power of revoking the limitations, and shifting the property into a different channel, this discretion is evidently meant to be personal, and not to be annexed to the estate or office (c).

Statute of Richard, served to pass even the legal estate. 4. And cestui que use might have devised such an authority even to his feoffees, and the power would have been construed in the same manner as if it had been devised to a stranger. Thus where a man enfeoffed A. and B. to his own use, and afterwards devised that the said A. and B. should sell the estate and apply the proceeds, &c., and A. and B., on the decease of the testator, enfeoffed C. and D. to the like uses, it was ruled that A. and B. might still sell under the power, although they had parted with the legal fee. 5. Until the sale was effected, the feoffees were trustees for the testator's heir, and were bound to account to him for the accruing rents and profits; and if the power which, whether given to a stranger or to the feoffees, was construed as a naked authority, became extinguished by any means, as by the death of the donees of the power, the heir was as absolutely entitled to the use in fee, as if no will had been made. 6. So long as the power subsisted, the person who would suffer by the extinguishment of the power might have compelled the donees, by filing a bill in Chancery, to execute the power. 7. But if the proceeds of the sale were to be distributed in pios usus, as no one could plead a personal loss by the non-execution of the power, there was no one to sue a subpœna, and the donees of the power were left to the arbitrary exercise of their own discretion. See case temp. H. 7. Treat. of Powers, Appendix No. 1, 6th ed.

The power might be vested in the feoffees.

Until the power was executed the feoffees were trustees for the heir.

The object of the power could have compelled the execution.

If no specific object of the power, the execution was optional.

[Recent Act.]

[4. Now, as to executorships and trusts constituted after or created by instruments coming into operation after the 31st December, 1881, it is enacted that "where a power or trust is given to or vested in two or more executors or trustees jointly, then, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument, if any, creating the power or trust, the same may be exercised or performed by the survivor or survivors of them for the time being" (a). But it is conceived that this section does not apply to a purely arbitrary and personal power given to trustees nominatim.]

IV. Of the control of the Court over the exercise of powers.

Control of the Court over arbitrary powers.

1. Where a power is given to trustees to do, or not do, a particular thing at their discretion, the Court has no discretion to lay a command or prohibition upon the trustees as to the exercise of that power, provided their conduct be bonâ fide, and their determination is not influenced by improper motives (b).

Pink v. De Thuisey.

Thus, in Pink v. De Thuisey (c), a testatrix gave 1000*l.* to A. upon a condition precedent, but left "her executor at liberty to give the said sum if he found the thing proper" though the condition should not have been performed. A. died without having fulfilled the condition or received the money, and his personal representative filed a bill against the executor of the testatrix to compel payment of the legacy. A. in his lifetime had applied for the money, but the executor had not thought right to comply with the request. Sir T. Plumer, in dismissing the bill, observed, "The executor says he did not think proper to advance the legacy: is the Court to decide upon the propriety of the executor's withholding the legacy? That would be assuming an authority confided by the will to the discretion of the executor: it would be to make a will for the testatrix, instead of expounding it."

[But where a testator bequeathed certain moneys to his executor upon trust for such charitable purposes as he might think right, the Court, in an administration action, while holding that it had no right to interfere with the discretion given to the executor, refused to allow the fund to be paid out of Court without an affidavit by the trustee showing how he proposed to apply it, on the ground that the trustee might possibly consider some application of it as charitable which the Court would not so regard (a).]

Power with a duty.

2. But where the power is accompanied with a duty and meant to be exercised (as a power of leasing), the Court will compel the execution or execute it in the place of the trustees (b). So where the trustees had a power of sale, "if they should consider it advisable, but not otherwise," it was held that the power, though discretionary in form, was given to the trustees for the purposes of the will, and if those purposes could not be effected without the exercise of the power, they were bound to exercise it (c).

Where trustees are required to do an act.

3. The Court will not in general control the discretion of trustees in reference to the adoption of any particular species of investment (d). But where trustees were "authorized and required," with the consent and direction of the tenant for life, to invest in leaseholds, the clause was held to be imperative upon the tenant for life's demand, and the trustees were not even allowed to say that the leaseholds would impose personal liabilities upon themselves, for by being parties to the settlement they had engaged to do it (e). But where the trustees were required to lend money to the husband on his bond, and he took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, it was held that, under such altered circumstances, the trustees were justified in refusing a loan to the husband (f); and where a variation of securities was to be with the consent of the tenant for life, and the fund was in danger, the Court called in the fund, though the consent of the tenant for life was refused (g).

[Maintenance of lunatic.]

[4. Where property was held upon trust to pay the income in such way, at such time, and in such manner, as the trustees should think fit towards the maintenance of a lunatic during her life, with power to invest any surplus not required for the purpose as capital, it was held that the trustees had no such discretion as would oust the jurisdiction of the Court, to apply the income in the lunatic's maintenance in exoneration of her absolute property (a).]

Maintenance of infants.

5. If a fund be applicable to the maintenance of children at the discretion of trustees, the Court will not take upon itself to regulate the maintenance, but will leave it to the trustees (b). [But the discretion must be exercised within the limits of a sound and honest execution of the trust (c): and where the Court was of opinion that the exercise of the discretion had not been proper, it set it aside and regulated the maintenance irrespective of the wishes of the trustees (d). But the Court has no jurisdiction on a summons for maintenance intituled only "in the matter of the infant" to control the discretion of the trustees, which can only be done in an action or on an originating summons to which the trustees are made parties (e).

[Payment by guardian to co-guardian.]

6. Where trustees are guardians of infants, and one guardian pays the income to the other guardian for the maintenance and education of the infants, he will not be discharged by such payment, but must show that the infants have been properly maintained and educated, and that the amount paid to the other guardian was a proper allowance for the purpose (f).]

Mode of execution of trust.

7. Where a fund is bequeathed to executors or trustees upon trust to distribute among the testator's relations, or apply the fund to any other specific purpose in such manner as the executors or trustees may think fit, the executors or trustees, if willing to execute the trust, will not, even on a suit being instituted for carrying the trusts into execution, be deprived of their discretionary power, but may propose a scheme before the judge in chambers for the approbation of the Court (g).

at the discretion of the trustees (as if annual sums be made distributable either to private individuals or public institutions, as the trustees may think fit), the Court will not even order a scheme to be proposed, but will leave the trustees to the free exercise of their power with liberty for all parties to apply (a).

Selection of particular objects.

9. So where trustees had the power of selecting a lad for education from certain parishes, and if there were no suitable candidate, then from any other parish, and the trustees upon consideration rejected the candidate from the specified parishes, and selected a lad from another parish, it was held that the Court could not control the discretion. The trustees had assigned no reason for their choice, but that the Court said was not necessary, and in many cases would not be proper (b).

Reasons for exercise of the power.

10. But though trustees invested with a discretionary power are not bound to assign their reasons for the way in which they exercise it; yet, if they do state their reasons, and it thereby appears that the trustees were labouring under an error, the Court will set aside the conclusion to which they came upon such false premises (c).

Powers not to be exercised nunc pro tunc.

11. Where the trustees have a discretionary power they must exercise their judgment according to the circumstances as they exist at the time, and they cannot, therefore, anticipate the arrival of the proper period by affecting to release it or by pledging themselves beforehand as to the mode in which the power shall be executed in futuro (d).

[Exercise of the power by will.]

[12. Where a trustee had an absolute discretion to apply the trust funds for certain charitable purposes as he might think fit, and he died without exercising the power by act inter vivos, but by his will gave definite directions as to the application of the funds, it was held that the power was duly exercised (e).]

with fraud (a), or misbehaviour (b), or they decline to undertake the duty of exercising the discretion (c); or generally where the discretion is mischievously and ruinously exercised, as if a trustee be authorized to lay out money upon Government, or real or personal security, and the trust fund is outstanding upon any hazardous security (d). [But where the course pursued by the trustees is within the letter of the power, the onus is on the persons challenging their conduct to show that their discretion has been mischievously, or ruinously, or fraudulently exercised (e).]

Powers in case of charity.

14. And where the trustees of a charity were empowered to lease for three lives or thirty-one years, the Court expressed an opinion that the discretion might be controlled, if it appeared for the benefit of the charity that such a power should not be acted upon (f).

The Court will exercise a surveillance where the trustees are before it.

After decree trustee cannot exercise even a special power without the sanction of the Court.

of nominating the person, but the Court must give its sanction to the choice (a); [and if the Court does not approve the nominee of the trustee it will call upon the trustee to make a new nomination, and will not appoint a person not nominated by the trustee merely on the ground that the nominee was not approved. Nor will the Court appoint a person not nominated by the trustee on the mere ground of such person being more eligible than the nominee of the trustee (b).

[Effect of Order 55.]

Where an action was commenced by suit for the general execution of the trusts of a will, and an order was made under Ord. 55, R. 3, directing certain inquiries, including an inquiry whether new trustees had been appointed, and whether any and what steps ought to be taken for the appointment of new trustees, and pending the inquiry the surviving trustee appointed a new trustee under the powers of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, it was held, that by the order the powers of the trustee were not interfered with, except so far as the exercise of them must necessarily clash with the particular inquiries directed; that it was the duty of the trustee not to fill up the vacancies in the trusteeship without the approval of the Court; and that the proper course would have been for the trustee to apply in chambers, stating that he intended to appoint the new trustee, and if it was found that there was no objection to the appointment it would have been approved (c).]

Acts before decree.

17. But if no decree has been made, then, as the plaintiff may abandon his suit at any moment, the trustee must not assume that a decree will be made, but must proceed in all necessary matters with the due execution of the trust (d). It would not be prudent, however, except in formal matters, to act without first consulting the Court. It was held in one case, that the trustees had not exceeded their duty by appointing new trustees after the filing of a bill, as no extra costs had been thereby occasioned (e); but in another case it was said that the trustees ought, under the diffi-

[By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 30 (an enactment which is still in force, though the procedure under it has been practically superseded by the more economical procedure under the Rules of Court, 1883 (b)) trustees are authorized to] apply by petition to any judge of the Court of Chancery (c), or by a summons upon a written statement to any such judge at chambers for the opinion or direction of such judge respecting the management or administration of the trust property.

Amendment Act.

19. By the Amendment Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 9, the petition or statement is required to be signed by counsel, and the judge may require the attendance of counsel either in chambers or in court (d).

Affidavits not allowed.

20. In proceedings under this enactment there is no investigation of the facts, but the correctness of the petition or statement is assumed, and if there be any suggestio falsi or suppressio veri the order of the Court pro tanto is no indemnity to the trustee. No affidavits, therefore, ought to be filed, and the costs of them would be disallowed (e).

Jurisdiction.

21. The Court has jurisdiction in England, though one of the trustees be resident in Ireland (f).

Parties to be served.

22. What parties are to be served is in the discretion of the judge, and V. C. Wood was of opinion that the proper course was not to serve the petition on any one in the first instance, but to apply at chambers for a direction as to the persons to be served (g), and V. C. Malins thought the question of service ought to be dealt with at the hearing of the petition (a). But V.C. Kindersley said he would never allow a petition under the Act to be brought on for the purpose of ascertaining who were to be served; and that the petitioners must serve such persons as they thought proper, and state in the note at the end whom they had served, and that the V. C. and the other judges had agreed upon that course (b). On a petition by the trustees where the beneficiaries were infants absolutely entitled, it was held that the infants need not be served (c). And on a petition by trustees for the opinion of the Court as to the propriety of certain proposed investments, it was held that no one need be served (d). And so the Court dispensed with service on any party, where the question submitted to the Court by trustees was, whether they could make an advancement to a child out of a share to which the child was presumptively entitled (e).

No appeal, &c.

23. As the Act does not give any right of appeal, it was not intended to authorize adjudications upon nice questions of law (f). The object of the Act was to procure for trustees at a small expense the assistance of the Court upon points of minor importance arising in the management of the trust. Thus the Court, upon the petition of the trustees of a fund for the separate use of a married woman, a lunatic not so found by inquisition, has sanctioned the payment of the annual produce to the husband, he undertaking to apply the same for the benefit of his wife and family (g). So the Court can advise trustees as to investment of trust funds, payment of debts or legacies, &c. (h); and whether trustees of a remainder can with propriety concur with the owner of the particular estate in the sale of the fee simple (i); and whether trustees can properly grant a lease upon certain terms (j); exercise a power of sale (k); or a power of maintenance or advancement under the circumstances stated (l); and [Order 55.] [24. It remains to call attention to the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Order 55, Rule 3, under which an originating summons may be taken out in the Chambers of a Judge of the Chancery Division for directing executors, administrators, or trustees, to do or abstain from doing any particular act in their character as such executors, or administrators, or trustees; but this rule applies only to matters within the trust (d), and the Court refused to make an order under it, directing trustees to concur in a sale of property in a partition action (e). Under this Order directions have been given for an advance by the trustees to the tenant for life for the purpose of stocking and taking a farm subject to the trust, for which a tenant could not be found (f), and for an inquiry with a view to the expenditure of settled money in repairing buildings on a farm included in the settlement which were so much out of repair as to make the farm untenantable (g). By Rule 12, the issue of the summons is not to interfere with or control any power or discretion vested in any executor, administrator, or trustee, except so far as such interference or control may necessarily be involved in the particular relief sought; and an order made upon such a summons will not interfere with the powers or discretions, except so far as they necessarily clash with the directions of the order (h).

the section which saves powers of the tenant for life, or trustees under a settlement, which are concurrent with those under the Act, and restricts the exercise by trustees of such powers to the extent to be presently pointed out, the Court may on the application of the trustees of the settlement, or of the tenant for life, or of any other person interested, give its decision, opinion, advice, or direction thereon (a).

The application should be by summons to be served upon the tenant for life, if not the applicant. But unless the judge otherwise direct, no person except the tenant for life need be served in any case (b).]

V. Of the restrictions on the powers of trustees imposed by the Settled Land Acts.

1. The Settled Land Act, 1882, vests in the tenant for life, including any other limited owner to whom under sect. 58 the powers of a tenant for life are given, large powers of dealing with the settled land (c), which powers cannot be released, or defeated, or avoided, either by the tenant for life or the settlor; but sect. 56 enacts as follows: "Nothing in this Act shall take away, abridge, or prejudicially affect any power for the time being subsisting under a settlement, or by statute or otherwise, exercisable by a tenant for life, or by trustees with his consent, or on his request, or by his direction or otherwise; and the powers given by this Act are cumulative." The effect of this enactment is not to take away from the trustees named in any settlement the powers given to them by that settlement, but to leave those powers exercisable concurrently with the powers created by the Act (d). To obviate, however, the difficulty which might arise from the existence of concurrent powers, and in order to give full effect to the powers given by the Act to the tenant for life, the section further enacts: (2) "But, in case of conflict between the provisions of a settlement and the provisions of this Act, relative to any matter in respect whereof the tenant for life exercises or contracts or intends to exercise any power under this Act, the provisions of this Act shall prevail; and, accordingly, notwithstanding anything in the settlement, the consent of the tenant for life shall, by virtue of this Act, be necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the settlement or other person, of any power conferred by the settlement exercisable for any purpose provided for in this Act."

The wording of this clause has given rise to some difficulty, but it has been interpreted by Pearson, J., by treating the first part of the clause as relating to concurrent powers in the tenant for life; in which case, if the powers under the settlement are less beneficial to him than those under the Act, he is entitled to exercise the powers under the Act notwithstanding any restriction in the settlement. The latter part of the clause, however, relates to the case of concurrent powers in the trustees of the settlement, or some other person under the settlement, and in the tenant for life, and requires the consent of the tenant for life to the exercise of the powers in addition to the requirements of the settlement (a); and such concurrence is necessary, although the tenant for life be a lunatic not so found (b). Where the tenant for life is capable of exercising his powers, the Court will not, even though he be a bankrupt, make an order under the Settled Estates Act, giving general powers of sale or of leasing to any other person, but if the tenant for life wrongfully refuse to exercise his powers, so as to prevent obvious and practicable improvements from being effected, and the persons interested come before the Court with a well-considered scheme, and show that it is for the benefit of the estate that some particular lease should be granted, and that the tenant for life without sufficient reason refuses to exercise his power, the Court will make an order under the Settled Estates Act (c).

[Settled Estates Act.]

Powers already given by an order of the Court under the Settled Estates Act are not affected by sect. 56, and the proper course, if it is desired to supersede them, is to apply under the Settled Estates Act for that purpose (d).

The power of a tenant for life under sect. 26 to require capital money to be laid out in improvements, was held to be in conflict with and to prevail over a power given by the settlement to the trustees to apply income in repairs and improvements (e).

2. It may be observed that the powers of the trustees, for the exercise of which the consent of the tenant for life is required, are those conferred by the settlement, and the enactment does not touch general powers exercisable by the trustees virtute officii.

3. The effect of the enactment stated shortly is that any special power given to trustees for any of the purposes for which similar powers are given by the Settled Land Act to the tenant for life cannot be exercised without his concurrence.

[Consent of all tenants for life in possession required by Act of 1882.]

4. By the definition of a tenant for life it is provided that if, in any case, there are two or more persons entitled for life to possession of settled land as tenants in common, or as joint tenants, or for other concurrent estates or interests, they together constitute the tenant for life for the purposes of the Act. And by sect. 58, the limited owners therein specified are to have the powers of a tenant for life, and the provisions of the Act referring to a tenant for life are to extend to each of such limited owners, and reading these provisions with the 56th section, it resulted that where several persons were concurrently entitled as tenants for life, or as such limited owners, in possession to the income of the settled land, the consent of all of them was necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the powers affected by the section (a). This was found in practice to lead to useless delay and expense, and to remedy the evil it was enacted by the Settled Land Act, 1884 (b), that where two or more persons together constitute the tenant for life for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882, then, notwithstanding anything contained in sub-sect. (2) of sect. 56 of that Act, requiring the consent of all those persons, the consent of one only of those persons is by force of that section to be deemed necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the settlement, or by any other person, of any power conferred by the settlement exercisable for any purpose provided for in that Act. And the section applies to dealings as well before as after the passing of the Act.

As the law, therefore, now stands the trustees can exercise their powers if the concurrence of the tenant for life, or limited owner in possession, of any share of the settled property can be procured.

[Case of tru t for sale or direction to sell.]

5. Hitherto we have been considering the case where there is no trust for sale, or imperative direction to the trustees to sell. Where, however, there is such a trust or direction the case falls within sect. 63 of the Act of 1882, and the right of the trustees to exercise their powers for any purpose for which similar powers are conferred by the Act is subject to restrictions of an entirely different nature, which we proceed now to consider.

[Sect. 63.] 6. By sect. 63 of the Act of 1882, sub-sect. (1), it is provided that any land, or any estate or interest in land, which under or by virtue of any deed, will, or agreement, covenant to surrender, copy of court roll, Act of Parliament, or other instrument or any number of instruments, whether made or passed before or after, or partly before and partly after, the commencement of the Act, is subject to a trust or direction for sale (a) of that land, estate, or interest, and for the application or disposal of the money to arise from the sale, or the income of that money, or the income of the land until sale, or any part of that money or income, for the benefit of any person for his life, or any other limited period, or for the benefit of two or more persons concurrently for any limited period, and whether absolutely, or subject to a trust for accumulation of income for payment of debts or other purpose, or to any other restriction, shall be deemed to be settled land, and the instrument or instruments under which the trust arises shall be deemed to be a settlement; and the person for the time being beneficially entitled (b) to the income of the land, estate, or interest aforesaid until sale, whether absolutely or subject as aforesaid, shall be deemed to be tenant for life thereof; or if two or more persons are so entitled concurrently, then those persons shall be deemed to constitute together the tenant for life thereof; and the persons, if any, who are for the time being under the settlement trustees for sale of the settled land, or having power of consent to, or approval of, or control over the sale, or if under the settlement there are no such trustees, then the persons, if any, for the time being, who are by the settlement declared to be trustees thereof for purposes of that Act, are for purposes of the Act trustees of the settlement. And by sub-sect. (2), in every such case the provisions of the Act referring to a tenant for life and to a settlement, and to settled land, are to extend to the person or persons aforesaid, and to the instrument or instruments under which his or their estate or interest arises, and to the land

[(a) As to the meaning of these words, see Re Horne's Settled Estate, 39 Ch. Div. 84, from which case it would seem that the trust or direction to which the property is "subject" must be presently exercisable and not postponed.]

therein comprised, subject to certain exceptions not material to the present purpose.

[Difficulties under the section.]

This obscure section, which cannot but be regarded as a most unfortunate enactment, gave rise to many difficulties, and in many cases added considerably to the costs of administering trust estates by unnecessarily obstructing the free disposition by the trustees of property vested in them upon trust for sale. Thus, the effect of the section was, where the proceeds of sale, or any share of the proceeds of sale, were held in trust for a person or several persons concurrently, any of whom had a life or other limited interest, to render various consents necessary (a); and it was a question of difficulty whether, even where the first trust affecting the proceeds of sale was for payment of debts, and the residue only, or a share of such residue, was held in trust for persons in succession, such consents could be dispensed with, though the better opinion seems to have been that such consents were in that case unnecessary.

[Remedy provided by Settled Land Act, 1884.]

It is not proposed, however, to discuss what consents were required under the section, as the inconveniences which arose from requiring any consents were found to be so serious, that the legislature intervened, and enacted by the Settled Land Act, 1884 (b), sect. 6, sub-sect. (1), that in the case of a settlement within the meaning of sect. 63 of the Act of 1882, any consent not required by the terms of the settlement is not, by force of anything contained in that Act, to be deemed necessary to enable the trustees of the settlement, or any other person, to execute any of the trusts or powers created by the settlement. And by sub-sect. (3), the section applies to dealings before, as well as after, the passing of the Act. But sect. 7 provides that, with respect to the powers conferred by sect. 63 of the Act of 1882, the following provisions are to have effect:—

(1) Those powers are not to be exercised without the leave of the Court.

(2) The Court may by order, in any case in which it thinks fit, give leave to exercise all or any of those powers, and the order is to name the person or persons to whom leave is given.

[(a) In Taylor v. Poncia, 25 Ch. D. 646, a distinction was drawn between the case where there was an absolute trust for sale at a particular time, without any discretion in the trustees as to the time at which the sale should take place, and the ordinary case of a trust for sale with a discretion in the trustees to postpone the sale, and it was held that in the former case the section did not apply, and the trustees could sell without any consent.]

[(b) 47 & 48 Vict. c. 18.]

(3) The Court may from time to time rescind, or vary, any order made under this section, or may make any new or further order.

(4) So long as an order under this section is in force, neither the trustees of the settlement, nor any person other than a person having the leave, shall execute any trust or power created by the settlement, for any purpose for which leave is, by the order, given to exercise a power conferred by the Act of 1882.

(5) An order under this section may be registered and re-registered, as a lis pendens, against the trustees of the settlement named in the order, describing them on the register as "Trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882."

(6) Any person dealing with the trustees from time to time, or with any other person acting under the trusts or powers of the settlement, is not to be affected by an order under this section, unless and until the order is duly registered, and when necessary re-registered, as a lis pendens.

(7) An application to the Court under this section may be made by the tenant for life, or by the persons who together constitute the tenant for life, within the meaning of sect. 63 of the Act of 1882.

(8) An application to rescind or vary an order, or to make any new or further order under this section, may be made also by the trustees of the settlement, or by any person beneficially interested under the settlement.

(9) The person or persons to whom leave is given by an order under this section, shall be deemed the proper person or persons to exercise the powers conferred by sect. 63 of the Act of 1882, and shall have, and may exercise those powers accordingly.

(10) This section is not to affect any dealing which has taken place before the passing of this Act, under any trust or power to which this section applies.

7. The effect of these enactments is, that where property is subject to a trust or direction for sale, as distinguished from a mere power of sale, the trustees may execute the trust, and exercise their powers irrespective of the restrictions arising under the Settled Land Act, 1882, until an order has been made by the Court giving leave to some other person or persons to exercise all or any of the powers conferred by sect. 63 on the tenant for life; and that until such an order has been made no tenant for life or other limited owner is able, under the Act of 1882, to exercise any power conferred by that Act. But when such an order has been made, and so long as the order remains in force, the trustees cannot execute any trust or power created by the settlement for any purpose to which the leave given by the order extends (a). The powers under the settlement and the Act will thus never be concurrent, and as every order to be effectual must be registered and re-registered as a lis pendens, there will never be any difficulty in ascertaining, by a search for lites pendentes, whether the trustees are in a position to execute their trusts and powers. Moreover, as the persons to whom leave is given to exercise the powers "are to be deemed the proper persons to exercise them, and may accordingly exercise them," any person dealing with such persons will acquire a statutory title from them, and will not be under any obligation to ascertain that the leave was properly given.

[Instrument creating the trust.]

8. It has been held that, in determining whether land vested in trustees upon trust for sale is subject to the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the Court must look simply at the instrument which created the trust for sale, and that if at the time when a contract for sale is entered into by the trustees there is no person who, by virtue of the provisions of that instrument, is entitled to the income of the money arising from the sale, or of the land until sale, for his life or any other limited period, sect. 63 does not apply, notwithstanding that, under other instruments subsequent to that creating the trust for sale, there may be tenants for life or persons with other limited interests (b).

[Leave to tenant for life to sell.]

9. Where the tenants for life of the income of the proceeds of sale were two elderly maiden ladies, and in default of their having children the proceeds belonged to persons who were trustees for sale, leave was granted to the tenants for life to sell the land, North, J., observing that it was the simplest possible case, and if he were not to say that these tenants for life were to have leave he could not imagine any case in which leave should be given (c).]

CHAPTER XXIV.

OF ALLOWANCES TO TRUSTEES.

Now that we have discussed the duties of trustees, and the extent of their powers, we may next enter upon subjects very closely interwoven with the execution of the office, viz. First, Allowances to trustees for their time and trouble; and, Secondly, Allowances to trustees for actual expenses.

SECTION I.

ALLOWANCES FOR TIME AND TROUBLE.

General rule.

1. It is an established rule in general, that a trustee shall have no allowance for his trouble and loss of time. One reason given is, that on these pretences, if admitted, the trust estate might be loaded and rendered of little value; besides the great difficulty there would be in settling and adjusting the quantum of such allowance, especially as one man's time may be more valuable than that of another; and there can be no hardship in this respect upon the trustee, for it lies in his own option whether he will accept the trust or not (a). The true ground, however, is, that if the trustee were allowed to perform the duties of the office, and to claim compensation for his services, his interest would be opposed to his duty; and, as a matter of prudence, the Court would not allow a trustee or executor to place himself in such a false position (b).

W. 251, per Lord Talbot; Gould v. Fleetwood, cited Ib. note (A); How v. Godfrey, Rep. t. Finch, 361; Brocksopp v. Barnes, 5 Mad. 90; Ayliffe v. Murray, 2 Atk. 58; Re Ormsby, 1 B. & B. 189, per Lord Manners; Charity Corporation v. Sutton, 2 Atk. 406, per Lord Hardwicke; Bonithon v. Hockmore, 1 Vern. 316, &c.

Executors, mortgagees, receivers, committees of lunatics.

2. And the rule applies not only to trustees in the strict and proper sense of the word, but to all who are virtually invested with a fiduciary character, as executors and administrators (a), mortgagees (b), receivers (c), committees of lunatic's estates (d), a surviving partner (e), &c.

Trustees of West India estates.

3. But trustees for absentees of estates in the West Indies are allowed a commission for their personal care in the management and improvement of the property. However, if, instead of remaining upon the island, they commit the management to the hands of agents, the Court will reject the claim; for it would be a strange construction that one allowed a commission on account of the proprietor's absence should insist upon his reward when he had been absent himself (f). But a manager, though he forfeits his commission during the period of his absence, will be repaid the sums actually disbursed by him for the care of the estate by others, provided the payments he has made be in themselves reasonable and proper (g).

Rate of commission in Jamaica.

The rate of commission in Jamaica has been regulated by several Acts of Assembly; it was originally 10*l.* per cent. upon the receipts, then 8*l.* per cent., and since 6*l.* per cent. (h). But the intention of the Legislature was only that the rate should not exceed 6*l.* per cent., not that under particular circumstances it might not be a great deal less (i).

Mortgagees in possession of West India estates.

Mortgagees in possession of estates in Jamaica are, by the Act referred to, expressly prohibited from charging any commission, except what they may have themselves paid by way of commission to a factor (j); and, without regard to statutory prohibition, mortgagees in possession of West Indian property are under the same disability of charging commission as if the property were situate in this country (k).

Executor in the East Indies.

4. An executor appointed in the East Indies and administering in that country, and then returning to England, is, if called upon in a Court of equity to render an account, allowed a commission of 5 per cent. upon the receipts or payments, [where according to the practice of the Indian Courts a similar allowance would be made in India.] The appointment of an executor in the East Indies is considered the appointment of an agent for the management of the estate. Without such an allowance, where a person dies in India deprived of the presence of his relations, the effects of the testator might often not be collected at all. Besides, the executors in England could scarcely procure a person to undertake the office at any cheaper rate (a). If an Indian executor, after collecting part of the assets, comes over to this country, he is allowed a commission on those assets only that were collected by himself in India, and not on the assets subsequently collected by his agents and transmitted to this country, for the Courts here allow the commission because the Indian Courts allow it, and the Indian Courts allow it on the ground of residence in India (b).

(a) Chetham v. Lord Audley, 4 Ves. 72; Matthews v. Bagshaw, 14 Beav. 123. To the latter case is appended the following note:—

"The custom of allowing a commission to executors and administrators in the presidency of Bengal has been abolished by Act No. VII., of 1849, of the Governor-General in Council. By that Act an Administrator-General has been appointed in place of the Ecclesiastical Registrar, with a reduced commission of 3 per cent. on monies distributed or invested in manner therein provided.

"By Act No. II., of 1850, the provisions of the above Act, with certain restrictions, are extended to the presidencies of Madras and Bombay, but the rate of commission to the public administrator is there to remain 5 per cent. until altered to 3 per cent. by the Governor and Council in each of these presidencies."

[By Act No. II., of 1874, sect. 56, no person other than the Administrator-General acting officially is to receive or retain any commission or agency charges, for anything done by the executor or administrator under any probate or letters of administration or letters ad colligenda bona which have been granted by the Supreme Court, or High Court at Fort William in Bengal, since the passing of the Act No. VII. of 1849, or by either of the Supreme or High Courts at Madras and Bombay, since the passing of the Act No. II. of 1850, or which have been or shall be granted by any Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of sections 187 and 190 of The Indian Succession Act, 1865. But this enactment is not to prevent any executor or other person from having the benefit of any legacy bequeathed to him in his character of executor or by way of commission or otherwise.

By the Indian Trusts Act, 1882 (Act II. of 1882), sect. 50, it is provided that "in the absence of express directions to the contrary, contained in the instrument of trust, or of a contract entered into with the beneficiary or the Court at the time of accepting the trust, a trustee has no right to remuneration for his trouble, skill, and loss of time in executing the trust," but nothing in this section is to apply to any official trustee, Administrator-General, Public Curator, or person holding a certificate of administration.]

(b) Campbell v. Campbell, 13 Sim. 168; and see 2 Y. & C. C. C. 607.

Where he has a legacy for his trouble.

An executor in India is only allowed the commission where the testator himself has not left him a legacy for his trouble (a); but if the amount of the legacy be an inadequate compensation for the duties of the office, it seems the executor, so as he signify his resolution in proper time, may renounce the intended legacy, and take advantage of the commission (b).

Constructive trustees.

5. A person who has carried on a business with another man's money under circumstances which make him liable to account for profits, will be allowed a compensation for his skill and exertions in the management of the concern (c).

Express trustee has no allowance for management of a trade.

6. But a person will not be permitted, except under very special circumstances (d), to charge anything for his management of a trade or business, where he has been clothed in express terms with the character of a trustee or executor (e).

Solicitors.

7. A solicitor who sustains the character of trustee will not be permitted to charge for his time, trouble, or attendance, but only for his actual disbursements (f). Lord Lyndhurst observed, "It would be placing his INTEREST at variance with the duties he has to discharge. It is said, the bill may be taxed, but that would not be a sufficient check; the estate has a right not only to the protection of the taxing officer, but also to the vigilance and guardianship of the executor or trustee: a trustee placed in the situation of a solicitor might, if allowed to perform the duties of a solicitor and to be paid for them, find it very often proper to institute and carry on legal proceedings, which he would not do, if he were to derive no emolument from them himself, and if he were to employ another person" (g).

Settled accounts.

8. If a cestui que trust settle accounts with a trustee, who is a solicitor, and execute a general release, and the accounts contain items of charges for professional services, the cestui que trust, if he had no legal advice, and was not expressly informed that professional services might have been disallowed, may open the accounts as regards the objectionable items (h); but if the cestui que trust had independent legal assistance, he is bound by the release (a).

Purchaser.

9. The doctrine against professional charges by a trustee, who is a solicitor, is so rigidly applied, that where a security has been given for payment of such professional charges, it may be set aside, even as against a purchaser for valuable consideration, if he had notice (b).

Allowance directed by the settlor.

10. The rule against allowances to trustees is merely a general one in the absence of express directions to the contrary; for there is no objection to the settlor himself directing compensation to the trustee for his services, either by the gift of a sum in gross, or by the allowance of a salary (c).

Allowance does not cease on institution of a suit.

11. And if a testator give an executor a salary for his trouble the allowance will not cease on the institution of a suit; for though the management be thenceforward under the direction of the Court, the executor is still called upon to assist the Court in the administration with his care and vigilance (d). If the executor be wholly incapacitated, even by the act of God, from discharging the duties of executor (e), and à fortiori if the executor, being capable, do not act when there is nothing to prevent his acting (f) he cannot claim a legacy given to him for his trouble in the executorship (g), and an annuity, limited to a trustee during the continuance of his office, cannot be claimed when the duties of the office have ceased by the absolute vesting of the property (h).

Amount of allowance not expressed.

12. Where the settlor has directed a remuneration to the trustee, but has not declared the amount, a reference will be directed to settle the quantum meruit, according to the circumstances of the case (i).

Contract for an allowance with the cestui que trust.

13. The trustee may also, at the time of accepting the trust, contract for an allowance or remuneration for his services (j);

but bargains of this kind are watched by the Court with exceeding jealousy (a), and must be freely made and not submitted to from pressure (b); and where the person about to become trustee and bargaining for remuneration is a solicitor, who is acting as such in the preparation of the instrument of trust which purports to confer the right of remuneration, there would seem to be considerable difficulty in upholding the contract unless the client had independent professional advice, or unless, at all events, the solicitor can show that the precise nature of the arrangement was distinctly explained to the client (c).

Terms of the contract must be fulfilled to the letter.

14. Where the contract is valid originally, the conditions of it must be fulfilled to the letter, or the trustee is not entitled to his reward. An executor, who had no legacy, and where the execution of the trust was likely to be attended with trouble, agreed with the residuary legatees, in consideration of 100 guineas, to act in the executorship. He died before the execution of the trust was completed, and his executors brought a bill to be allowed those 100 guineas out of the trust money in their hands; but the Court said all bargains of this kind ought to be discouraged, as tending to eat up the trust, and here the executor had died before he had finished the affairs of the trust; and so the plaintiffs' demand was disallowed (d).

Contract for an allowance with the Court.

15. A trustee dealing with the Court, is at liberty, before accepting the trust, to stipulate for any remuneration which the Court may choose to give him (e). But if he omit to contract with the Court before entering upon his duties, he will have great difficulty in obtaining compensation afterwards, and we may add that in no case will the Court remunerate a trustee for his trouble by permitting him to make professional charges where the settlor has not so directed, but will compensate him for his trouble, if at all, by a regular and fixed salary (f).

Mortgagee.

16. During the continuance of the usury laws a mortgagee could not, as a general rule, have bargained for a compensation exceeding together with the actual interest the legal rate, for an agreement of this kind would have tended to usury (a). But after a long struggle certain special exceptions were established in favour of mortgagees not in possession of West Indian estates (b).

[Effect of repeal of usury laws.]

[It has been said that the rule that the mortgagee should not be allowed to stipulate for any collateral advantage beyond his principal and interest does not depend on the laws against usury (c), and a stipulation by the mortgagee that he should receive a bonus was, under special circumstances, held invalid on this ground (d); but sums actually deducted by a mortgagee for commission and bonus at the times of making the advances, in accordance with the mortgage contract, entered into deliberately and without any unfair dealing on the part of the mortgagee, were allowed, the return thus made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee being regarded as part of the consideration for the accommodation to him (e)].

Employment of agents.

17. As a trustee will not be permitted to charge for his personal care and loss of time, it is but just he should be allowed on proper occasions to call in the assistance of agents at the expense of the estate.

Collector of rents.

18. Thus a trustee, though he may not act as a collector himself with a commission (f), may, if the case require it, appoint a collector of rents (g), [or of book debts (h),] at a commission. [But trustees who under an order of the Court receive rents and are allowed a commission will not be allowed additional charges in respect of a collector of rents (i).]

Bailiff.

19. As a man is not bound to be his own bailiff, if a trustee employ a skilful person in that capacity, the salary must be allowed (j); at least the Court will grant that indulgence where the estate is at such a distance that the trustee must have appointed a bailiff had the estate been his own (a).

Attorney.

20. An executor employed a person who had been his clerk to transact some business for him relative to the testator's affairs, and the Master insisted it was the executor's own duty, and refused to allow the expense. But Lord Hardwicke said, "it was clear that if an executor paid an attorney for his trouble and attendance in the management of the estate, he ought to be repaid the sums he had so disbursed," and ordered a reference to the Master to tax the items of the bill (b).

Accountant.

21. If the accounts be complicated, and the executor or trustee take upon himself to adjust and settle them, although it may occupy a great deal of his time and attention, the principle of equity is that he cannot claim a compensation; but if he choose to save his own trouble by the employment of an accountant, he is entitled to charge the trust estate with it under the head of expenses (c).

Weiss v. Dill.

22. In Weiss v. Dill (d) the executor of a trader had employed an agent to collect debts, which were numerous and only paid after repeated applications, at a commission of 5 per cent. The Master had reduced the commission to $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; and, the executor upon that ground taking an exception to the report, Sir J. Leach said, "Executors, generally speaking, are not allowed to employ an agent to perform those duties which, by accepting the office of executors, they have taken upon themselves; but there may be very special circumstances in which it may be thought fit to allow them the expenses they have incurred in the employment of agents; I have some doubt whether in this case the Master ought to have made any allowance, but with the allowance of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. the executor must be content." The observations of Sir J. Leach might seem at first either to cast doubt upon the general right of a trustee to employ salaried agents in fitting cases, or to establish a distinction between the collection of debts and the collection of rents, but it cannot be supposed that his Honour intended to reverse his previously expressed views on the general principle (e), and there seems no ground for any such distinction

SECTION II.

ALLOWANCES TO TRUSTEES FOR EXPENSES.

General rule.

1. THOUGH a trustee is allowed nothing for his trouble, he is allowed everything for his expenses out of pocket (a). "It flows," said Lord Eldon, "from the nature of the office, whether expressed in the instrument or not, that the trust property shall reimburse him all the charges and expenses incurred in the execution of the trust" (b). Even where trustees had been wrongfully appointed but acted bonâ fide, and believed themselves to have been duly appointed, they were allowed their costs, charges, and expenses, notwithstanding the defect of title (c).

Travelling expenses.

2. A trustee will be entitled to be reimbursed his travelling expenses (d), provided they be properly incurred (e).

Employment of solicitor.

3. Trustees are justified in employing a solicitor for the better conduct of the trust (f). And a trustee is entitled to be paid all costs properly incurred for which he is liable to the solicitor so employed; as where two executors, defendants in an administration suit, gave a joint retainer to a firm of solicitors, and one of the executors became bankrupt and was a debtor to the estate, it was held that the other executor, being liable for the whole costs under the joint retainer, was entitled to the whole costs as against the estate (g). by the late M.R., who held, in a similar case, that the solvent executor should be allowed only his own proportion of the costs up to the bankruptcy out of the estate, the defaulter's proportion being set off against the debt due from him, but that the costs incurred by both subsequently to the bankruptcy should be allowed in full (a). And this view has since been approved (b). The proportion of the common costs which should be allowed to the solvent trustee is a matter for the Taxing Master (c).] And the sums paid will, at the instance of the cestui que trust, though not liable to taxation, be looked over and moderated (d). And trustees, if they employ one of themselves as solicitor, instead of engaging a third person, will be answerable for all the consequences, if they be misled by the professional advice of such trustee solicitor (e).

(e) Alton v. Harrison (a legatee's suit), and Poyser v. Harrison (a residuary legatee's suit), both which were consolidated and heard before V. C. Sir J. Stuart on 6th and 8th June, 1868. The testatrix, who died in 1851, devised her real and personal estate to two trustees, Ingle and Harrison (the former a solicitor, the latter a manufacturer), upon the usual trusts for sale and conversion; and as to the residue after payment of legacies and annuities to invest upon sufficient securities in trust for a class of persons. The trustees lent 500*l*. upon mortgage to one Thornley, and another 500*l*. to one Walker, and in 1853 Ingle died insolvent. It afterwards turned out that both Thornley's security and Walker's security were second mortgages, and the whole money was lost. Ingle had been solicitor of the testatrix, and had made her will and acted as solicitor to the trust. The plaintiffs sought to make Harrison liable for the two sums of 500*l*. each as lent upon insufficient security. Harrison declared on oath that the value of the mortgaged property, free from incumbrance, was personally known to him, and was far in excess of the loan, and that the loss had arisen not from the inadequacy of value, but from the defect of title, viz., in the two mortgages being second mortgages; that when the advances were made he fully believed that in each case the security was a first mortgage, and that he had relied as to the title upon the legal advice of Ingle, who had fraudulently represented the security as a fit and proper one; that the trustees had a right to employ one of themselves as solicitor to the trust (though no professional profits could be allowed), and that Harrison was entitled to the same protection from the legal advice given by Ingle, as if the trustees had employed a third person as solicitor, who had approved the title on their behalf. However, the Vice-Chancellor ruled that two trustees, one of whom was a solicitor, were liable to all the consequences if they employed one of themselves as such solicitor, instead of calling in a third person; and his Honour put the case of a single trustee, a solicitor, and asked whether it could be contended that such trustee was not liable for the consequences if he acted without other professional advice, and his Honour decided that Harrison was made liable for both the sums lent. This point seems to have arisen for the first time,

[If in conveyancing matters regulated by the Solicitors Remuneration Act, 1881, the solicitor of the trustees elects under rule 6 of the General Order of August, 1882, to be remunerated according to the old system, it may be matter for the consideration of the trustees whether they should continue to employ him on those terms (a).]

Fees to counsel.

4. A trustee may give fees to counsel and shall have allowance thereof (b).

[Costs of opposing Bill in Parliament.]

[5. And a trustee will be allowed the costs of opposing a bill in Parliament which affects the trust estate (c).

[Of protecting the estate.]

And the Court will sanction the payment by the trustees of settled estates of costs which have been properly incurred by the tenant for life for the protection of the estates, whether as plaintiff or as defendant (d).

And costs incurred with a view to protect the trust estate in taking proceedings to strike off the rolls a solicitor who is a defaulter to the trust, may be allowed (e).

The Settled Land Act, 1882, expressly authorizes trustees of a settlement to reimburse themselves or pay and discharge out of the trust property all expenses properly incurred by them (f).]

Extra costs.

6. And if a trustee be sued by a stranger concerning the trust, and have his costs paid him as between party and party, and the cestui que trust afterwards institute proceedings for an account, the trustee will be allowed his necessary costs in the former suit, and will not be concluded by the amount of the taxation (g);

and the judgment of the V. C. may be supported on principle; for if two persons be appointed trustees, they ought in matters of title to take professional advice, and for that purpose to employ a competent solicitor; but the selection of a proper legal adviser must be the joint act of the two, and as a man cannot be judge in his own case, they cannot appoint one of themselves to the office. A fortiori if there be a single trustee, a solicitor, he cannot act himself as solicitor and claim the same protection as if he had appointed another. When a settlor appoints a person as trustee, who is also a solicitor, he does not in the absence of any special direction, mean him also to act as solicitor; for a person may be a very good trustee and yet a very bad solicitor. The settlor selects his trustee, not because he is a solicitor or valuer, or fills any other scientific capacity, but because he is a person to be trusted with the property and capable of managing it with the aid of professional advice.

and if a trustee as defendant be ordered to pay the plaintiff's costs, he will, unless he has forfeited his right by some misconduct, be entitled as between him and his cestui que trust to be reimbursed the costs which he has paid, and also those which he has himself incurred (a). The fact of a trustee having been unsuccessful in litigation, either as plaintiff or defendant, will not in the absence of misconduct disentitle him to be reimbursed his costs (b), but a trustee will have no claim to reimbursement out of the trust fund, where the legal proceedings were occasioned by his own negligence in the first instance (c); or were improperly instituted by himself (d); and a trustee will not be allowed, without question, whatever sums by way of costs he may have paid his solicitor; for the bill, as between trustee and cestui que trust, though not submitted to a regular taxation (which is between solicitor and client), will be moderated by the Court by a deduction of such charges as may appear irregular and excessive (e); and the trustee will not be allowed interest on the costs, though at the time he paid them he had no trust monies in his hands (f).

Interest not allowed.

[7. Where a bill was filed to set aside a decree for a compromise on the ground of personal fraud in one of the trustees in obtaining the decree, but the charge of fraud was disproved, and the bill dismissed with costs to be paid by the next friend of the plaintiff, who, however, was unable to pay them, it was held that the trustee was entitled to have his costs discharged out of the trust estate, for the defence was by him not on his own behalf but for the benefit for the trust estate, and his right was not affected by the fact that his character was incidentally cleared in the suit (g). And this decision has recently been referred to as a very strong illustration of the general rule that a trustee is entitled in an ordinary case to recover out of the trust estate, as costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred, all his costs of an action which he has properly defended, and as showing that where a tenant for life has properly defended an action to restrain him from exercising his powers under the Settled Land Act, the difference between solicitor and client and party and party costs may be treated as charges and expenses incidental to the exercise of the power (a).]

Allowance for expenses besides remuneration for trouble.

8. Even a specific remuneration given by the testator to his trustees for their services in the trust is no reason for excluding them from the usual allowance for expenses. A testator bequeathed to his acting trustees for the time being the yearly sum of five guineas apiece for the care and trouble they might have in the execution of the trust. The testator's estates consisted in part of about fifty houses in London, thirty-four of which were let to weekly tenants. The trustees employed a person to collect the rents, and Sir John Leach said, "The annuity was given to them as a recompense for the care and trouble which would attend the due execution of the office; and if it was consistent with the due execution of the office to employ a collector, they were entitled to the annuity. A provident owner might well employ a collector in such a case, and the labour of such a collection could not be imposed on the trustee" (b). [But where annuities were expressly given to trustees for "their services and collecting of rents" it was held that they could not claim the annuities in addition to a commission of greater amount allowed to a collector of rents (c).]

Amount of expenses.

9. A regular account of the expenses should invariably be kept; but where this has not been done the Court has ordered a reasonable allowance to be made in the gross, at the same time taking care that the remissness and negligence of the trustee in not having kept any account should not meet with any encouragement. Thus in Hethersell v. Hales (d) the trustee put in a general claim for 2500*l.*, apparently an average estimate of the expenses he had incurred in the trust. "The Court," says the reporter, "took some time to deliberate what was fit to be allowed in a matter of this nature; and having considered that the trustee was a friend to the family, and undertook the trust at their great importunity, and that he had incurred the charge of surveying the whole estate, selling and letting the same, looking after tenants, adjusting their accounts, calling in their rents, returning monies to creditors, and treating with them and stating their debts, and procuring and agreeing with purchasers, and for law charges, and for keeping servants and horses, and employing others in journeys to London and elsewhere, and his care there lying from home a long time, the Court was of opinion that the trustee might well deserve the whole 2500*l.*, yet would not allow but 2000*l.*, which the trustee was to have."

Extraordinary outlay.

10. As it is a rule that the cestui que trust ought to save the trustee harmless from all damages relating to the trust, so within the reason of the rule, where the trustee has honestly and fairly, without any possibility of being a gainer, laid down money by which the cestui que trust is discharged from a loss, or from a plain and great hazard of it, the trustee ought to be repaid (a). So where a trustee employed a bailiff to fell some trees, and the woodcutter allowed a bough to fall on a passer by, who was injured, and recovered damages from the trustee, it was held that as the trustee had meant well, had acted with due diligence, and had employed a proper agent to do an act which was within the sphere of the trustee's duty, and the agent made a mistake, the trustee was entitled to charge the damages on the trust estate (b).

[Expenses of carrying on a business.]

[11. If a trustee is authorized to carry on a business and to employ certain specific property for that purpose, the creditors of the business have a right to the benefit of indemnity and lien which the trustee has against the property devoted to the business; but this right is subject to any equities subsisting between the trustee and the cestui que trust of the specific property; and where the trustee is in default and is not entitled to indemnity except upon the terms of making good the default, the creditors will have no right to indemnity except upon the same terms (c).

These authorities proceed on this principle, that where a particular part of a trust estate is specifically dedicated to a particular purpose which involves trade debts and liabilities, it is a trust to use it

But where the trustee for sale of a business carries on the business without authority for the benefit of the cestuis que trust, and incurs liabilities to tradesmen in so doing, there is no right in the creditors to come against the trust estate, but they must look to the trustee personally (a).

In a case in Ireland it was held premature for creditors of the business to apply for leave to attend proceedings in an action for the administration of the testator's estate, until on further consideration the executors were proved not to be in default, as in that case alone would the creditors be entitled to stand in the place of the executors in their right to indemnity against the estate (b).

Where the business is carried on in accordance with a general direction empowering the executors to continue it and to employ any part of the general estate therein, and with the assent of the testator's creditors, in their interest as well as in that of the beneficiaries, the executors will be entitled, in priority to the claims of the testator's creditors, to be indemnified out of the general estate against liabilities properly incurred, and the indemnity will not be limited to the portion of the assets which has come into existence or changed its form since the testator's death (c).]

Expenses a lien on the trust estate.

12. The expenses incurred by a trustee in the execution of his office are treated by the Court as a first charge or lien upon the estate, and the cestui que trust or his assign cannot compel a conveyance in equity without a previous satisfaction of the trustee's just demands (d), and in a suit for the administration of the fund in respect of which the expenses have been incurred, the lien of for that particular purpose, and the trustee, though personally liable for the debts which he contracts in the course of the business, has a right to be paid out of the specific assets appropriated for that purpose, and the trade creditors are not to be disappointed of payment so far as the assets so appropriated are concerned, per Selborne, L. W. 780, more fully referred to in the last edition of this work, p. 639, note (c), where it is shown that the case does not justify the erroneous inference which has been drawn from it, that a trustee gives credit for the expenses, not to the estate, but to the person of the cestui que trust, and that the assignee of the latter is not liable for the trustee's expenses incurred in the time of the assignor.

the trustee will be paid even before the costs of suit (a). [And the expenses are a first charge as well upon the income as upon the corpus of the estate, and the trustees have therefore the right to retain their expenses out of the income until provision can be made for raising them out of the corpus (b).] The trustee of a void trust deed cannot charge his expenses as against persons who establish the invalidity of the deed (c); though he will be allowed for improvements (d). [Where, however, a voluntary settlement was set aside, at the instance of the settlor, on the ground of improvidence and having regard to her age, the trustees, in the absence of any evidence of improper motive, were allowed their costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred (e); and where a settlement originally valid, is afterwards avoided under sect. 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the trustees are entitled to their costs of an action unsuccessfully brought to set aside the settlement (f).] There will be no lien for expenses incurred by trustees in respect of an act done in excess of their powers, and therefore in breach of their duty (g). And the Court has refused to give effect to a trustee's lien by a foreclosure decree, or a sale, which would be the destruction of the trust itself; but the Court has gone as far as it could by delivering the deeds into his custody and prohibiting any disposition of the property without previous discharge of the trustee's lien (h).

[13. Where a trustee has a right of indemnity out of the trust estate, he may at any time come to the Court to enforce it, and is under no obligation to wait until the trust estate has been turned into money under the trust (i).] [Enforcing right to indemnity.]

14. If trustees have to raise a certain sum which is properly chargeable on the corpus, and a cestui que trust, at the request of the trustees, advances money for the purpose, the cestui que trust stands in the place of the trustees and has a lien on the corpus for the amount (j). Lien does not extend to the trustees' agents.

15. Although the trustees themselves are creditors upon the trust fund for the amount of their expenses, the persons who are employed by them as solicitors, surveyors, &c., have no such lien, [as they are the solicitors, &c., of the trustees personally, and not of the trust estate (a).] And the law is so settled, notwithstanding an express declaration by the settlor that the trustees shall in the first place pay the expenses of the trust, and though the trustees themselves be charged to be insolvent. In every deed is implied a direction to pay the costs and expenses, and expressio eorum quæ tacite insunt nihil operatur. It would be a mischievous principle to hold, that every person with whom the trustees had incurred a just and fair demand might sue the trustees, and come for an account of the whole administration (b).

Secus if there be a positive direction to employ a particular agent.

16. But a solicitor in accounting for his receipts to the trustees may set off his costs (c). And a positive direction to the trustees to employ a particular person as auditor or receiver, and allow him a proper salary, will constitute a trust in his favour, and, of course, give him a claim against the trust fund (d). But if a testator merely recommend or express a desire that his trustees should employ him as receiver, the question is, whether the words used amount to a trust, or only to an expression of opinion and advice: and to discover the meaning, the Court examines the provisions of the will, and if it finds that, to consider the words as a trust would be inconsistent with the general character of the will, which assumes that the administration of the estate is to be unfettered by such a trust, the Court comes to the conclusion that the words were meant only by way of suggestion (e). [And where a will contained a direction that "the testator's solicitor should be the solicitor to his estate and to his trustees in the management and carrying out the provisions of his will," it was held that no trust or duty was imposed on the trustees, to continue the testator's solicitor as their solicitor (f).

Where after the death of an administratrix her solicitor, acting upon the instruction of a relative of the deceased person whose estate was being administered, continued to do work for the benefit of the estate, and the person who afterwards took out administration declined to pay the costs incurred during the period while there was no legal personal representative, it was held that there was no obligation upon him to do so (a).] [Costs incurred while there was no personal representative.]

18. Vice versâ, the agent of a trustee is accountable to the employer only, the trustee, and not to the cestui que trust (b); and an action by cestui que trust against the trustee and his solicitor, alleging improper payments out of the trust fund by the trustee to the solicitor, [cannot be maintained as against] the solicitor (c). But under the special provisions of the Solicitors Act (d), cestuis que trust may, at the discretion of the Court, obtain an order to tax the bill of the solicitor employed by the trustee (e), and generally cestuis que trust may proceed against an agent where he has not confined himself to the duties of an agent, but by accepting a delegation of the whole trust (f), or by fraudulently mixing himself up with a breach of trust (g), has himself become a trustee by construction of law. presumed that he may apply to their discharge any money which has come to his hands from any other of the estates (a); but he would not be justified in mixing up claims under one instrument of trust with those under another (b). [In a recent case, where the plaintiff was holding, as a trustee for the defendant, shares in a company in liquidation, which were not fully paid up, but on which no call had been actually made, Fry, J., refused relief by way of indemnity, and observed that the action was a mere action quia timet, and that if it could be maintained it would follow that every person who had undertaken any position of responsibility for another which entitled him to indemnity might sue before the right to indemnity accrued, and before the damage had accrued which gave rise to the right to indemnity (a). But where the right to indemnity was denied, it was held that the executor of the sole trustee of shares in a bank which was being wound up, who had received notice from the liquidator that he would be placed on the list of contributories, was entitled to a declaration of indemnity before he was actually placed on the list or any call was made against him (b). Where the trustee acts at the instance of the maker of the trust, at any rate where the maker of the trust is not also beneficially interested under the trust instrument, the trustee has no right to personal indemnity from him, but must look exclusively to the trust funds to make good his expenses or losses (c).]

[Where trustee has acted in breach of duty.]

22. But the trustee can establish no claim to reimbursement either against the cestuis que trust personally, or against the trust estate, where he has incurred the outlay not in the strict line of his duty, and without either the request or the implied assent of the cestuis que trust (d).

Funds out of which expenses payable.

23. Questions occasionally arise respecting the proper fund for payment of expenses. In one case (e), Sir John Leach decided that a provision made in a will for payment of debts and funeral and testamentary expenses out of a particular fund, did not make that fund primarily liable for costs of administration. In a subsequent case, Lord Langdale arrived at a different conclusion (f); [and after considerable variation of judicial opinion, the later cases seem to have established the rule that the words testamentary expenses include the costs of administration (g).

Exoneration of personalty.

24. Where a testator bequeathed "a leasehold house and all other his personal property" to his wife, and then devised his real estate to be sold, the proceeds to be applied in "payment of funeral and testamentary expenses and debts," and the "residue" to be invested, it was held that the funeral and testamentary expenses and debts were thrown upon the real estate in exoneration of the personal estate, but that the costs of the special case for taking the opinion of the Court were not "testamentary expenses," and therefore fell upon the personalty (c); [but having regard to the present rule, it is conceived that this case would not now be followed on the question of costs.]

Trust to pay costs of trust.

25. A trust in a will of real and personal estate to pay out of a fund of personal estate directed to be set apart, the expenses of probate and "the execution of the trusts of the will," was held not to authorize the trustees to apply the fund in payment of any other expenses than those which would be payable by the executors in that character, and therefore not to authorize the application of the personal estate in payment of the expenses incurred in the execution of trusts declared of the testator's real estate (d).

CHAPTER XXV.

HOW A TRUSTEE MAY OBTAIN HIS DISCHARGE FROM THE OFFICE.

We shall conclude the subject of the Office of Trustee by considering in what manner he may divest himself of that character.

How the trust may be relinquished.

The only modes by which he can accomplish this object are the following: First, He may have the universal consent of all the parties interested; Secondly, He may retire by virtue of a special power contained in the instrument creating the trust, [or a statutory power applicable to the trust;] or, Thirdly, He may obtain his release by application to the Court.

First. By consent.

Trustee may retire with consent of cestuis que trust.

1. As no cestui que trust who concurs in a breach of trust by the trustee can afterwards call him to account for the mischievous consequences of the act, it follows, that where all the cestuis que trust, being sui juris, lend their joint sanction to the trustee's dismissal, they are precluded from ever holding him responsible on the ground of delegation of his office (a).

All must concur.

2. But the trustee must first satisfy himself that all the cestuis que trust are parties, for even in the case of a numerous body of creditors the consent of the majority is no estoppel as against the rest (b).

Cestuis que trust not sui juris.

3. And the cestuis que trust who join must be sui juris, not femes covert or infants, who have no legal capacity to consent. But a feme covert is considered to be sui juris as to her separate estate where there is no restraint against anticipation (c); and as to real estate she can, with the consent of her husband, bind her interest by an assurance under the Fines and Recoveries Act.

Not in existence.

4. If the parties interested in the trust fund be not all in existence, as where the limitation of the property is to children unborn, it is clear, that as the trustee cannot have the sanction of all the parties interested, he cannot with safety be discharged from the trust.

(a) Wilkinson v. Parry, 4 Russ. 276, per Sir J. Leach.

(b) See supra, p. 549, note (e).

Secondly. A trustee may retire by virtue of a special power contained in the original instrument, [or a statutory power applicable to the trust.]

Trustee may retire under a power.

1. The person who creates the trust may mould it in whatever form he pleases, and may therefore provide, that on the occurrence of certain events and the fulfilment of certain conditions, the original trustee may retire, and a new trustee be substituted (1).

Usual form of the power.

2. The form of power most commonly in use has been, that in case the trustees appointed by the instrument of trust, or to be appointed under the power (a), or any of them, shall "die or be abroad for twelve calendar months, or be desirous of being discharged from, or refuse, decline, or become incapable (b) to act in the trusts," it shall be lawful for the cestui que trust to whom the power may be given, or (as the proviso is frequently worded) for the surviving or continuing trustee (c), or the executors (d) or administrators of the survivor, by deed or writing, to nominate

(a) The best modern forms contained the additional words, "or by the Court of Chancery or other competent authority," in order to obviate the break in the chain of trusteeship which would otherwise have been occasioned by a resort to the Court, but the addition is now unnecessary [for that purpose; see 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 33; but see Cecil v. Langdon, 28 Ch. Div. 1, where the power authorized the appointment of new trustees in the place of those originally appointed or to be appointed under the power, and the Court held that the power came to an end when new trustees were appointed by the Court, so that thenceforth the statutory power was alone available, and that a fetter imposed on the exercise of the former power did not affect the latter.]

(b) "Unfit" may be usefully added; see p. 741 infra.

(c) The best forms provide that a refusing or retiring trustee shall, if willing to execute the power, be deemed to be a continuing trustee. As to the object of this addition, see p. 746, infra. But it is attended with this inconvenience, that if the refusing or retiring trustee do not join, evidence may be called for that he was not willing. Sometimes the power is given to the surviving, continuing, or other trustee, an addition which has been found useful in practice. See Lord Camoys v. Best, 19 Beav. 414.

(d) Better to say "acting executors or executor or administrators or administrator," as otherwise if several executors be appointed, and one only proves, it may be objected (though the objection may be untenable) that the

(1) Every instrument where there is a continuing trust of an active character, should, of course, until the modern Acts, have contained a power of appointment of new trustees, but, singularly enough, Lord Thurlow omitted to insert one in his own will, of which Lord Eldon and two others were named trustees. The defect was supplied by a private Act of Parliament, 15th June, 1809 (49 G. 3. cap. clxxv.), by which power was given to the Court of Chancery, in case any of the three trustees "should die, or be desirous of being discharged from, or should refuse, or decline, or become incapable to act in the trusts," to appoint a new trustee in a summary way upon petition.

some other person to be a trustee; and the power then proceeds to declare that the trust estate shall forthwith be vested jointly in the persons who are in future to compose the body of trustees; and that the new or substituted trustee shall, either before or after the trust estate shall have been so vested, be capable of exercising all the same powers as if he had been originally named in the settlement.

Several sets of trustees.

3. It often happens that in a settlement there are several sets of trustees—a term of 99 years for instance is vested in A. and B., and a term of 500 years in C. and D., and there is a limitation to E. and F. for the life of a person, with powers of sale and exchange, &c., and then a power of appointment of new trustees is given to "the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee." If A. die who can appoint in his place? Is the power in B. as the survivor in that particular trust, or in B., C., D., E. and F. jointly as the survivors of the trustees en masse? This doubt has occasionally in practice led to expense, which might easily have been avoided by a few words in the power declaratory of the intention, as by limiting the power to "the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee of the class in which any such vacancy or disqualification shall occur."

Lord Cranworth's Act.

4. Lord Cranworth's Act provided against the omission of a power of appointment of new trustees in any instrument of trust, and also against defects in the power, by enacting generally, by the 27th section, that "whenever any trustee, either original or substituted, and whether appointed by the Court of Chancery or otherwise, should die or desire to be discharged from, or refuse or become unfit or incapable to act in the trusts," it should be lawful for the person nominated for that purpose by the instrument creating the trust, or if there should be no such person, or he should be unable or unwilling to act, then "for the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being, or the acting executor or administrator of the last surviving and continuing trustee, or for the last retiring trustee, by writing, to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees," and the Act gave the usual directions for vesting the trust estate (a); and the following section made the Act apply to the case of a trustee dying in the testator's lifetime. But it will be observed that other executors must actually renounce before the acting executor can exercise the power, see White v. M'Dermott, 7 Ir. R. C. L. 1; Worthington v. Evans, 1 S. & S. 165; Clarke v. Parker, 19 Ves. 1; see post, p. 739, note (e).

(a) 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 27.

the Act did not provide for the case of a trustee going abroad, and it cannot be safely assumed, until a decision, that the word "refuse" was meant to include a disclaimer (for a disclaiming trustee never was a trustee (a)); and its operation was, by the 34th section of the Act, restricted to instruments inter vivos executed after the passing of the Act (28th August, 1860), and to wills and codicils made, confirmed, or revived after that date.

Two trustees in place of one.

It has been held that the donee of the power under this Act could appoint two trustees in the place of an only trustee appointed by the settlor's will (b).

[Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 31.]

[5. The above provisions of Lord Cranworth's Act have, however, been repealed by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (c), and their place supplied by sect. 31, which enacts, that "where a trustee, either original or substituted, and whether appointed by a Court or otherwise, is dead, or remains out of the United Kingdom for more than twelve months, or desires to be discharged from the trusts or powers reposed in or conferred on him, or refuses, or is unfit to act therein, or is incapable of acting therein, then the person or persons nominated for that purpose by the instrument, if any, creating the trust, or if there is no such person, or no such person able and willing to act (d), then the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being, or the personal representatives of the last surviving or continuing trustee, may, by writing, appoint another person or other persons to be a trustee or trustees." And the Act authorizes an increase or reduction in the number of trustees, so that "except where only one trustee was originally appointed, a trustee shall not be discharged under this section from his trust, unless there will be at least two trustees to perform the trust;" and provides for the vesting of the trust property; and makes the provisions of the section relative to a trustee who is dead include the case of a person nominated trustee of a will but dying in the testator's

(a) In Viscountess D'Adhemar v. Bertrand, 35 Beav. 19, it was assumed that a disclaiming trustee was within the Act, and it was held that an appointment of a new trustee by the continuing trustee under the Act did not take away the general jurisdiction of the Court to appoint in proper cases an additional trustee; and see Re Jackson's Trusts, 16 W. R. 572; 18 L. T. N.S. 80; and post, p. 738.

lifetime, and those relative to a continuing trustee include a refusing or retiring trustee; and the section applies to trusts created either before or after the commencement of the Act.

It would seem, however, that the section only authorizes an increase in the number of trustees when an appointment is being made to supply a vacancy in the trusteeship, and that if a mere addition of a trustee is required recourse must be had to the Trustee Act (a).

[Contrary intention.]

The section applies only so far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the instrument, if any, creating the trust; but where a power of appointing new trustees had been given by a settlement, made in 1849, to "the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee," which they or he were required to exercise with the consent of the tenant or tenants for life or in tail for the time being entitled in possession, it was held that the fetter imposed by the settlement did not apply to an appointment under the powers of the Act, and that the continuing trustee could appoint new trustees under the Act; the power in the settlement having in the events which had happened ceased to be exercisable (b).

[Section when applicable.]

It would seem that an appointment under this section may be made by the personal representative of a sole trustee (c), but it appears to be doubtful whether the section applies where the sole trustee or all the trustees of a will have predeceased the testator (d).

Where an appointment is made under the Act in the place of a trustee who has been out of the United Kingdom for more than twelve months, the concurrence of such trustee in the appointment is not necessary unless he is willing and competent to concur, and the onus of showing that he was willing and competent is upon the person disputing the validity of the appointment (e).

[Events not contemplated by settlement.]

A settlement made in 1878 contained a declaration that the husband and wife during their joint lives should have power to appoint new trustees of the settlement. After the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, came into operation, the husband and wife executed a deed appointing a new trustee in the place of one of the trustees who had remained out of the United Kingdom for more than twelve months, and it was held that the appointment was valid under sect. 31 of the Act; and North, J., observed, "the intention of sect. 31 is that, whenever a person has been nominated by the instrument creating the power as the person to appoint new trustees, he has the power of filling up any vacancy occurring under the provisions of the section" (a).

It will be observed, however, that the husband and wife were in this case nominated to fill up vacancies in the trusteeship generally, and not only in certain specified events, and the observations of the learned judge must be read by the light of the existing circumstances, and the decision is no authority that where the settlement has given the power of appointing new trustees in certain special events to A., he is by the Act empowered to appoint new trustees in any other event not mentioned in the settlement, but falling within sect. 31. The proper construction of the Act would seem to be that in such a case the power of appointing new trustees is in the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or the personal representatives of the last surviving or continuing trustee.

[Settled Land Act, 1890.]

6. It was open to doubt whether the section applied to trustees appointed for the purposes of the Settled Land Act (b), but now by the Settled Land Act, 1890 (c), it is provided that all the powers and provisions contained in the Conveyancing Act with reference to the appointment of new trustees, and the discharge and retirement of trustees, are to apply to and include trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, whether appointed by the Court or by the settlement, or under provisions contained in the settlement.

[Costs of application under Act.]

Whether a new trustee is actually such until transfer of the estate to him.

8. The words contained in the ordinary form which expressly confer all powers on the new trustee before the estate has been conveyed, show that a doubt has been felt by the profession, whether in the absence of these words the powers could be exercised until after conveyance, and the late Vice-Chancellor of England, in a case where the words referred to did not occur, but there was simply a power of nomination and no direction for a conveyance, expressed his opinion to be that the person to be appointed was not invested with the character of trustee until he had both been nominated to the office by the donee of the power, and the trust property had also been duly conveyed or assigned (a). But in a more recent case before Sir John Romilly, M.R. (b), where A. and B. were appointed trustees of a settlement, and after a lapse of 18 years A. disclaimed, and B. was desirous of retiring, and the donee of the power nominated C. in the place of A., and D. in the place of B., and B. professed to assign the trust fund (consisting of a share of 3,000*l.* in the hands of trustees of another settlement) to C. and D., who filed their bill without their cestuis que trust to have the trust fund paid to them, it was objected against the validity of the appointment that A. had acted, and that consequently B. could not alone pass the trust fund, and that therefore the appointment of trustees was incomplete; but the Master of the Rolls held that, whether A. had acted or not, his disclaimer was a wish to retire, and that C. and D. were duly appointed, and were entitled to call for payment of the trust fund: that the appointment of new trustees and the conveyance of the trust property to them were two distinct and separate matters, and that the transfer could only take place when the appointment was complete; and that various difficulties would arise from holding that the transfer of the trust fund was necessary to perfect the appointment. And in a subsequent case before the same judge, where there was the usual power of appointment of new trustees, with a direction for the conveyance of the trust estate, and the donee of the power appointed a new trustee in the place of a deceased trustee, but the trust estate was not conveyed, and the surviving trustee and new trustee then sold the estate and signed a receipt for the purchase-money, it was held that the purchaser acquired a good title (c). It would appear, therefore, that at the present day an actual conveyance of the legal estate, unless the power be specially worded, is not essential to the valid appointment of new trustees.

testator's property made to four persons by the direction of the donee of the power of appointing new trustees of the will, coupled with a statement in the lease that the four lessees were "the present trustees" of the will, operated as an exercise of the power of appointing new trustees (a).]

Mode of vesting trust estate.

9. Should the trust estate consist of Bank Annuities, or other property transferable in the books of any company, then by one and the same deed the donee of the power may nominate the new trustee, and the old and new trustee may execute a declaration of trust of the stock or other property intended to be transferred, and after the execution of the deed the stock may be transferred into their joint names accordingly. If the trust estate consisted of chattels real, or other personal estate legally assignable, two deeds, until a modern Act, were necessary. By the first, the old trustee assigned the chattel interest to A., and then A. by indorsement re-assigned it to the old and new trustees as joint tenants. But now, by Lord St. Leonards' Act (b), a person may assign personal property by law assignable, including chattels real, directly to himself and another person or other persons or corporation, by the like means as he might assign the same to another, so that in such cases one deed will now be sufficient (1); [and the power has, by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (c), been extended to things in action.] If the trust estate be of a freehold nature, and by the terms of the instrument of trust the whole legal estate is to be vested in the trustees, there needs, in general, no other machinery than a simple conveyance under the Statute of Uses; for the old trustee may convey the lands to the joint use of himself and the new trustee, and the statute will operate to transfer the possession. In settlements which invested the trustees with powers, the established form of the proviso [was] thought to occasion the necessity of resorting to the use of two deeds (a); but the prevalent and better opinion is, that a simple conveyance from the old trustee to the use of the old and new trustees will be sufficient (b).

(1) The Act does not authorize an assignment by a person to himself (as by an executor to himself as legatee), nor by himself and another or others to himself, as by two co-executors to one of them as trustee, for in the first case he has the legal estate already and a declaration will shift the equitable interest, and in the second case so far as he has not the legal estate in himself the other or others can assign it or release it independently of the Act. The operation of the Act is limited to property assignable at law, for mere equitable interests shift according to the intention, and no legislative interference was required as to them.

[New mode of vesting the trust property in new or continuing trustees.]

[10. By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, sect. 34, a new and simple method of transferring trust property without conveyance or assignment has been introduced, which is now generally adopted where applicable. That section provides that, where a deed by which a new trustee is appointed to perform any trust contains a declaration by the appointor to the effect that any estate or interest in any land subject to the trust, or in any chattel so subject, or the right to recover and receive any debt or other thing in action so subject, shall vest in the persons who by virtue of the deed become and are the trustees for performing the trust, that declaration shall, without any conveyance or assignment, operate to vest in those persons, as joint tenants, and for the purposes of the trust, that estate, interest, or right.

But the section does not extend to any legal estate or interest in copyhold or customary land, or to land conveyed by way of mortgage for securing money subject to the trust, or to any such share, stock, annuity, or property as is only transferable in books kept by a company or other body, or in manner prescribed by or under Act of Parliament.

It is to be observed that the declaration of vesting can only be made by the deed by which a new trustee is appointed, and the section will not apply in cases where the appointment is made otherwise than by deed. The expression "the persons who by virtue of the deed become and are the trustees for performing the trust," is not happily worded, but the intention of the legislature doubtless was to vest the trust property in the persons who immediately upon the execution of the deed of appointment are the trustees for performing the trust, and it is conceived that this intention is sufficiently expressed.]

Stamps on appointment of new trustees.

11. By [54 & 55 Vict. c. 39], the appointment of a new trustee requires a 10*s. stamp*, and by s. 62 "every instrument and every decree or order of any Court, or of any commissioners, whereby any property on any occasion, except a sale or mortgage, is transferred to or vested in any person, is to be charged with duty as a conveyance or transfer of property. Provided that a conveyance or transfer made for effectuating the appointment of a new trustee, is not to be charged with any higher duty than 10s." By sect. 4 "An instrument containing or relating to several distinct matters is to be separately and distinctly charged, as if it were a separate instrument, with duty in respect of each matter." [Where by an order of the Charity Commissioners new trustees were appointed of a charity, and a vesting order was also made, it was held, under the corresponding provisions in the Stamp Act, 1870 (a), that two duties of 10s. each were payable, one in respect of the appointment, and the other in respect of that part of the order which vested the trust estate in the new trustees (b). And on the same principle it would seem that a double duty is payable in the ordinary case of an appointment of new trustees by deed with a consequent transfer of the estate.

[(a) For the reasoning on which this view was grounded, see the last edition of this work, pp. 651, 652.]

[Trustee retiring under recent Act without appointing a new trustee.]

12. Prior to the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, a trustee could not retire from the trust without seeing that a new trustee was appointed in his place, unless the settlement contained a special power authorizing him to do so, a circumstance which seldom occurred; but by sect. 32 of that Act it is enacted that—

(1) Where there are more than two trustees, if one of them by deed declares that he is desirous of being discharged from the trust, and if his co-trustees, and such other person, if any, as is empowered to appoint trustees, by deed consent to the discharge of the trustee, and to the vesting in the co-trustees alone of the trust property, then the trustee desirous of being discharged shall be deemed to have retired from the trust, and shall, by the deed, be discharged therefrom under this Act, without any new trustee being appointed in his place.

(2) Any assurance or thing requisite for vesting the trust property in the continuing trustees alone shall be executed or done.

The section applies only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the instrument, if any, creating the trust; but it applies to trusts created either before or after the commencement of the Act.

By sect. 34, Where a deed by which a retiring trustee is discharged contains a declaration by the retiring and continuing trustees, and by the other person, if any, empowered to appoint trustees, to the effect that any estate or interest in any land subject to the trust, or in any chattel so subject, or the right to recover and receive any debt or other thing in action so subject, shall vest in the persons who by virtue of the deed become and are the trustees for performing the trust, that declaration shall, without any conveyance or assignment, operate to vest in the continuing trustees alone, as joint tenants, and for the purposes of the trust, the estate, interest, or right to which the declaration relates. But the section does not extend to any legal estate or interest in copyhold or customary land, or to land conveyed by way of mortgage for securing money subject to the trust, or to any such share, stock, annuity, or property as is only transferable in books kept by a company or other body, or in manner prescribed by or under Act of Parliament.]

Trustee must see that the power contemplated the precise case.

13. It must be carefully ascertained by the trustee that the circumstances under which he retires from the trust are precisely those which are contemplated in the terms of the proviso; for if the case be not warranted by the power, the trustee who resigns will be made responsible for all the mischievous consequences, just as if he had delegated the office.

Retiring trustee must see to completion of the appointment.

14. And a trustee on retiring must [if a new trustee is to be substituted in his place] be careful not to part with the control of the fund before the new trustee has been actually appointed, for if he transfer it into the name of the intended new trustee and by some accident the appointment fails to be completed, he still remains a trustee, and will be answerable for the trust fund (a).

If the old trustee obstinately and perversely, without any sufficient reason, refuse to transfer the fund to new trustees duly appointed, he will be visited with the costs occasioned by his wilfulness (b).

15. It is somewhat surprising, considering the frequency of this power, how few questions until recent times arose upon its construction.

Sharp v. Sharp.

In Sharp v. Sharp (c), heard in the Court of Queen's Bench, the terms in which the power was expressed were as follows:— "In case either of the trustees, the said A. and B., shall happen to die, or desire to be discharged from, or neglect, or refuse, or become incapable to act in the trusts, it shall be lawful for the survivors or survivor of the trustees so acting in the trusts, or the executors or administrators of the last surviving trustee, by any writing, &c., to nominate a new trustee." Neither of the trustees being willing to act in the trust, they executed a conveyance to two other persons intended to be new trustees; and the question was raised, whether the power of appointment had, under the circumstances, been effectually exercised, and it was determined in the negative. Lord Tenterden said that by the word "survivor" he understood merely the trustee "continuing to act;" for it was throughout the intention of the testator, that, in case of the death, or incapacity, or refusal of some one of the trustees, the remaining trustee who had been named by him and was the object of his confidence, should have the power of associating with himself some other person: but it would be giving a much larger construction to the words than they fairly imported, if the trustees, in the event of the whole class declining to act, were to nominate such other persons as they might think fit. Mr. Justice Bayley observed, that the word "either" was not uselessly introduced: that it was in effect a proviso that if either of the trustees named in the will should refuse to act, still the testator should have the benefit of the judgment of the other: that the testator might have had good reason for confining the power to the care of one trustee, for he might have had special confidence in the trustees named by himself, and so long as either of those persons acted in the trust he might think his property safe. But if the words were to be read as if they were "both or either," the case would be different; for if both the persons should decline to act, the testator might naturally object to their delegating their trust to other persons, and might then have thought it better that his property should be left to the care of a Court of equity: that under the words of the power the testator meant by the word "acting" to designate those who had taken upon themselves to perform some of the trusts mentioned in the will, and that he did not contemplate one who in limine refused to act: that the word "survivor" must therefore mean the "continuing" trustee, as contradistinguished both from those who might refuse to act, and those who might be desirous to discontinue acting.

"Refusing or declining" includes "disclaiming."

16. If one trustee disclaims, may the continuing trustee appoint another, or do the words of the power, "if any trustee shall refuse or decline" apply, not to the case of a disclaimer, but only to a refusal after having acted? Although the point decided in Sharp v. Sharp was as stated above, yet from the language of the judges it appears that, had only one trustee disclaimed, the other might have exercised the power; and such, it is presumed, is clearly the rule where there is nothing to narrow the meaning of the words "refusing or declining." There generally follows in the power a direction that the estate "vested in the trustee so refusing or declining" shall be transferred to the new trustee; and hence it has been argued, that as no estate vests in a disclaiming trustee, the power did not contemplate such a case. However, there seems to be but little weight in the argument; for when it is said that the words "if any trustee shall refuse or decline" apply to disclaimer, it is not meant that they do not also apply to a subsequent refusal. At all events, therefore, the direction for the transfer of the estate is not nugatory (a).

"Refusing" or "declining" means also after having acted.

17. On the other hand, it has been doubted whether the words "refusing" or "declining" may not refer exclusively to disclaimer, and have no application to the case of a trustee who, after having accepted the trust, refuses to act any longer in it. This proposition is also thought to be untenable (b), though some recent cases have an opposite tendency (c).

Payment into Court is "declining."

18. It has been held that a payment of the trust money into Court, under the Trustee Relief Act, stamps the trustee with the character of a "refusing or declining trustee" (d)

Power to executors and administrators.

19. If a power of appointing new trustees be given to a person, his executors and administrators, and the donee of the power dies, having appointed three executors, one of whom renounces, the acting executors can exercise the power (e).

[Limited administration for purpose of appointing new trustees.]

[20. In a case in Ireland, where the power of appointing new trustees was given to the acting executors or administrators of the last surviving trustee, and the last surviving trustee was dead, but there was no legal personal representative of his estate, and the persons entitled to take out letters would not do so, the Court of Probate granted administration to the guardian of the infant cestuis que trust, limited to the purpose of appointing himself and A. B. new trustees of the settlement, and to the purpose of transferring to, and vesting in, such new trustees the trust funds (a).]

Death of the trustee in the testator's lifetime.

21. Suppose a testator to appoint two trustees with the usual power of appointment of new trustees, and a trustee dies in the testator's lifetime, can the surviving trustee appoint a new trustee? The late Vice-Chancellor of England in one case expressed a doubt upon it (b), and in a subsequent case decided in the negative (c); but this was a narrow construction of the power, and it has since been ruled that a trustee who has survived the testator may appoint a new trustee in the place of one who predeceased the testator (d).

Morris v. Preston.

22. In Morris v. Preston (e), the proviso was, that "in case of the death of any or either of the two trustees during the lives of the husband and wife or the life of the survivor, the husband and wife or the survivor should, with the consent of the surviving co-trustee or co-trustees, nominate and appoint a new trustee or trustees, and that upon such nomination or appointment the surviving co-trustee should convey and assign the trust estates in such manner as that the surviving trustee and trustees, and such person or persons so to be nominated and appointed, should be jointly interested in the said trusts in the same manner as such surviving trustee and the person so dying would have been in case he were living." Both the trustees died, and the wife, who survived her husband, executed an appointment of two new trustees in the place of the deceased trustees. A purchaser took the objection, that, as the proviso clearly contemplated the case of one trustee surviving, an appointment of new trustees after the decease of both the original trustees was not warranted by the power. The purchaser abandoned the objection at the hearing without argument—a circumstance much to be regretted, as a judgment from Lord Eldon would have thrown great light upon the subject. However, the case as it stands has been said by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland to be of great authority—viz. in favour of the validity of the appointment (f).

Power to tenant for life with the surviving or continuing trustee.

23. In another case, where two trustees had been appointed by the settlement, and the power was, "that if either of the trustees should die, or reside beyond the seas, or become incapable or unfit to act in the trusts, it should be lawful for the tenants for life, together with the surviving or continuing or acting trustee for the time being, to nominate a new trustee, and that the trust estate should thereupon be vested in the newly appointed trustee, jointly with the surviving or continuing trustee," upon the trusts of the settlement; and one trustee died and the other became bankrupt; on the suggestion by counsel that there was no surviving or continuing trustee, and therefore the power was gone, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland observed, "That happens in many cases without the power being affected. The construction is not so straitlaced as all that" (a).

Bankrupt trustee is "unfit."

24. It was ruled in the same case, that a trustee who became bankrupt was "unfit" within the words of the power. But if the power be worded "in case the trustee shall become incapable to act," without the addition of the words "or unfit," a bankrupt trustee is not within the description, for by "incapable" is meant personal incapacity and not pecuniary embarrassment (b). And a bankrupt, who has obtained a first-class certificate, [and has since the bankruptcy made a fresh start in life and has ceased to be impecunious,] cannot be regarded as unfit to be a trustee (c). [But the mere fact that the bankruptcy arose from misfortune, and not from any fault on the part of the bankrupt, does not remove his unfitness unless it can also be shown that since his bankruptcy he has become a person of means (d).]

Trustee resident abroad.

25. The Court held in one case that a trustee who went to reside permanently abroad, came within the description of a trustee "incapable to act" (e), but this seems scarcely in harmony with correct principle (residence abroad being rather a question of unfitness than incapacity), and cannot be reconciled with other authorities (f). And the Court has since intimated an opinion that incapacity means personal incapacity (g).

"Unable" to act.

26. If the power provide that if any one of three trustees become "unable" to act, "the trustees or trustee for the time being, whether continuing or declining to act," may appoint a new trustee, the two trustees who remain capable can appoint a new trustee in the place of a lunatic trustee (a).

Temporary absence.

27. If the settlement provide that a trustee shall cease to be such "on departing the United Kingdom from whatever cause or motive or under whatever circumstances," the clause nevertheless does not apply to a mere temporary absence with the intention of returning (b).

[Appointment of person to be trustee when he returns to England.]

[But where a person resident abroad is appointed by a testator to be trustee "if and when he shall return to England," and eight years after the testator's death he comes to England for his health, remains for six months, and then returns to his home abroad, he has fulfilled the condition, and, in the absence of evidence that he had dissented from or disclaimed the trusteeship, the trust estate vests in him (c).]

Two trustees retiring, and appointing a single successor.

28. If there be two trustees of a settlement, and both be anxious to retire from the trust at one and the same time, they would not be justified in putting the property under the control of a single trustee appointed in their joint places (d).

Single trustee retiring and appointing two to succeed.

29. And, vice versâ, [until the recent Act, a single trustee, had he wished to retire, could not have appointed] more than a single trustee in his place; for though, in the substitution of more trustees than one, he would be chargeable rather with too much than too little caution, yet he ought not to clog the estate with unnecessary machinery. The idea of the settlor may have been, that by increasing the number of the trustees the vigilance of each, individually, would be diminished. "A great number," observed Lord Mansfield, "may not do business better than a smaller, and it would be attended with more expense" (e). [But now by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, unless a contrary intention is expressed in the instrument creating the trust, the number of trustees may, on the appointment of a new trustee, be increased, and the section applies to trusts created either before or after the commencement of the Act (f).

specially worded as to authorize the substitution of several trustees in the place of one or of one in the place of several. Thus, where a testator appointed two trustees, and directed "that if the trustees thereby appointed, or to be appointed as thereinafter mentioned, should die, &c., it should be lawful for the surviving or continuing trustee or trustees for the time being, or the executors or administrators of the last surviving or continuing trustee, to appoint one or more person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the room of the trustee or trustees so dying, &c., and thereupon the trust estates should be vested in the new trustee or trustees, jointly with the surviving or continuing trustee or trustees, or solely, as occasion should require," and the surviving trustee appointed two trustees in the room of the deceased trustee, the late Vice-Chancellor of England held that such a case was immediately contemplated by the proviso (a).

[31. So where a testator appointed four trustees and declared that "as often as his first or future trustees or any of them should die, &c., he empowered the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or if there should be no such trustee, then the retiring or renouncing trustees or trustee, and if there should be no such last mentioned trustee then the executors or administrators of the last deceased trustee, by any deed to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying, &c.; and upon the appointment of every such new trustee all the trust estates, monies and premises should be thereupon vested in such new trustee or trustees either solely or jointly with the surviving or continuing trustee or trustees, as occasion should require;" and two of the trustees died and one renounced, and the surviving trustee appointed a single co-trustee, the M. R. said "he was not aware of any rule making it compulsory on the donees of a power appointing new trustees to keep up the full number of trustees except in the case of a charity. If the testator wished the number to be kept up, he must expressly say so. In that case it was clear from [Reduction in number of trustees authorized.]

(a) D'Almaine v. Anderson, V. C. Feb. 1, 1841, MS.; in Meinertzhagen v. Davis, 1 Coll. 335, the special form of the power was held to authorize the appointment of three trustees in the place of two; in Emmet v. Clarke, 3 Giff. 32, three trustees were held to have been well appointed in the place of four; and in Hillman v. Westwood, 3 Eq. Rep. 142, the Court thought that two trustees could be appointed in the place of one; and see Corrie v. Byrom, V. C. Wigram, 26 April, 1845, M.S.; [the facts of which case are stated in the last edition of this work, p. 660, note (a);] and Re Breary, W. N. 1873, p. 48.

the words of the will that the testator contemplated the possibility of a single trustee acting alone." And he held that the appointment was valid (a). So where one trustee disclaimed, and the other retired, the appointment of a single trustee under the power in Lord Cranworth's Act was supported (b).

Court does not limit itself to original number.

32. And where the Court itself is appointing new trustees, it does not at the present day, though doubts appear to have been formerly felt on the point (c), consider itself bound to fill up the precise number only mentioned in the instrument of trust. It has added two new trustees to the two original trustees (d), appointed four where the testator originally appointed three (e), three where the testator originally appointed two (f), and two where the testator originally appointed one (g). In these cases the number has been increased, but if the original number was excessive the Court may also reduce it (h). If, however, two were originally appointed, the Court for security will not, at least where money is concerned, substitute one only (i).

Trustee should be within the jurisdiction.

33. In general the new trustees appointed under a power should be persons amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court, but where the personal property of a lady was settled on her marriage with a foreigner, whose domicile was in America at the time of the marriage, the subsequent appointment of three Americans to be trustees was decided to be justifiable (j). But though the parties who have a power of appointment may exercise it in this way, the Court in substituting trustees by its own jurisdiction has refused to appoint new trustees who are out of the jurisdiction (k). [However, in a recent case where all the parties interested were of age, and they were all resident either in Australia or New Zealand, the Court appointed two persons resident in Australia new trustees of a settlement (l), and the same course has been adopted in other cases where some of the cestuis que trust have been infants (a). But it is only in very exceptional circumstances that such an appointment will be made, and in a recent case where three trustees were appointed, two of whom were out of the jurisdiction, the Court required the two to undertake, in case the power of appointing new trustees should become exercisable by them or either of them, not to appoint any new trustee resident out of the jurisdiction without the consent of the Court (b); and the Court refused to authorize money arising under the Settled Land Act to be sent out to executors in America for investment (c).]

One of two trustees retiring and appointment of the co-trustee.

34. Should one of two trustees be desirous of retiring, of course he cannot do so without the substitution of another in his place (d), and the power of appointment of new trustees would not authorize the appointment of the continuing trustee as sole administrator of the trust (e); for this would, in effect, amount to a relinquishment of the trust without the appointment of any successor (f).

Appointment of one trustee in the place of several.

35. [Independently of the power conferred by the recent Act (g),] a surviving trustee cannot be advised (though it has been sometimes done), to vest the trust estate in himself, and a new trustee appointed in the place of one of several deceased trustees, but should refuse to part with the property unless the original number of trustees be restored. Still less could the representative of the last surviving trustee be advised to vest the property in a single new trustee nominated in the place of one only of the several deceased trustees. And where a settlement constitutes three trustees with a power of appointment of new trustees in the usual form, and two die, the survivor should refuse to retire in favour of a single new trustee appointed in his place, for, as the original settlement provided three trustees to execute the trust, the donee of the power should not execute the power partially, but should restore the original number (h). In a trust for sale, if this precaution were not observed, a purchaser on a sale by the new trustee might give trouble by objecting to the title (i). The strongest ground for supporting the sale would be, that probably many titles depend on the validity of such an execution of the power, and in recent cases the appointment has been supported (a). Fieri non debuit, factum valet. Where the power in the will was "to appoint one or more new trustee or trustees in the room of the trustee or trustees so dying," and both trustees died, and the donee of the power appointed a single trustee in the place of both, the appointment was established (b).

[36. Now, by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (c), sect. 31, sub-sect. (3), on an appointment of a new trustee, it shall not be obligatory to appoint more than one new trustee, where only one trustee was originally appointed, or to fill up the original number of trustees, where more than two trustees were originally appointed; but, except where only one trustee was originally appointed, a trustee shall not be discharged under this section from his trust unless there will be at least two trustees to perform the trust.]

Rectification of bad appointment.

37. If A. and B. be trustees, with a power of appointment of new trustees limited to "the acting trustees or trustee, or the executors or administrators of the surviving trustee," and then A. dies, and B. retires and appoints C. a trustee in his own place, and afterwards dies and appoints an executor, who as the donee of the power for the time being appoints C. and D. in the place of A. and B., the two new trustees are properly appointed, and can sign receipts; for either the original appointment of C. was good, and the subsequent appointment of D. [having been made with the concurrence of C.] filled up the number, or the original appointment of C. was invalid, and then the appointment of both C. and D. by the donee of the power was effectual (d).

[Concurrence of retiring trustee not necessary.]

[38. Where the power of appointing new trustees is given to the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, and a trustee retires, his concurrence is not necessary in the appointment of a new trustee in his place, but such appointment rests with the other trustees or trustee who do not retire (e).]

that one trustee dies, and then the other wishing to retire proposes to appoint two new trustees at the same time in the place of himself and the deceased trustee. A doubt has, however, been suggested whether the word surviving must not be read as applicable only to an appointment in the room of a deceased trustee; and, as the word continuing cannot include retiring, the safer course is for the surviving trustee first to appoint a person in the room of the deceased trustee, and then the person so substituted may, as the continuing trustee, appoint a new trustee in the place of the trustee desirous of retiring (a).

Case of both trustees wishing to retire.

40. And if there be two trustees, and a power of appointing new trustees be given to "the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee," it has been held that they cannot both retire at the same time, but that there must be two successive appointments, as in the case last mentioned (b); and if there be three trustees with the like power and two die, and the surviving trustee wishes to retire, then he is not a continuing trustee, and therefore he cannot retire and appoint two others in the place of himself and a deceased trustee (c).

[But under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, the provisions of the Act relative to the appointment of new trustees by a continuing trustee include a refusing or retiring trustee, if willing to act in the execution of those provisions (d); and a retiring trustee can, accordingly, under the Act appoint new trustees in the place of himself and a deceased trustee, or in the place of himself alone if he was originally the sole trustee.]

Power to "other trustee."

It is, however, to be observed that the power in that case contained special words, showing that the words "continuing trustees" were not used in their strict sense, but as including trustees who were being discharged, and on the general question the argument of the V. C. does not seem to be so well founded as that of V. C. Kindersley in Travis v. Illingworth, and has since been disapproved of, Re Norris, and Re Coates to Parsons, 34 Ch. D. 370.]

"other trustee," appoint four new trustees in the place of himself and three others (a).

Power to donees to appoint "other" persons.]

42. Where the power was to the husband and wife or the survivor, and after the decease of such survivor, the continuing trustees or trustee, or if no continuing trustee, the retiring or refusing trustees or trustee, or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee, to appoint any "other" person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of a trustee or trustees dying, or going to reside abroad, or desiring to retire, or refusing or becoming incapable to act, it was held that the terms of the power required that the trustee or trustees to be appointed should be some person or persons "other" than the person or persons making the appointment (b).

Power to "acting trustees."

43. Where persons are nominated trustees in a will, and a power of appointing new trustees is given to the "acting" trustees, should all the trustees disclaim, the power of appointment is gone, and the hiatus in the trust can only be filled up by the Court. It has, occasionally, been suggested that the trustees, instead of disclaiming, should accept the trust to the extent of exercising the power only, and should, by virtue of it, appoint new trustees (c); but it is conceived that trustees who availed themselves of the office for the purpose only of introducing other parties into the trust would be rather "refusing" than "acting" trustees, and that the exercise of the power, under such circumstances, would be nugatory, and might involve the outgoing trustees in serious liabilities.

Power to the "said trustees."

44. The power of appointment is sometimes given "to the said trustees," and then the question arises whether a sole survivor can appoint. It is conceived that "the said trustees" means the persons or person representing the trust for the time being under the settlement, and that the survivor can therefore exercise the power.

Appointment of a cestui que trust or near relative of cestui que trust as trustee.

45. On a change of trustees it is not uncommonly proposed to appoint one of the cestuis que trust to that office, but such an arrangement is evidently irregular, as each cestui que trust has a right to insist that the administration of the property should be confided to the care of some third person whose interest would not tend to bias him from the line of his duty. Should proceedings be instituted for the removal of the cestui que trust, and the substitution of some indifferent person as trustee, the costs might be thrown upon the parties who had improperly filled up the trust (a). But it is presumed that this rule affects the parties to the trust only, and that if a cestui que trust who has been appointed a trustee sell real estate under a power of sale, he may sign a receipt, and that the purchaser is not bound to look to the proper exercise of the discretion in such a case (b). Cestuis que trust are not absolutely incapacitated from being trustees, as the Court itself under special circumstances appoints a cestui que trust a trustee (c). The question is merely one of relative fitness. A fortiori, the circumstance of near relationship to the cestui que trust creates no absolute disqualification for the office of trustee, though Sir John Romilly, M.R., objected, where it could be avoided, to appoint relatives as trustees (d).

[46. The Court will not appoint the tenant for life (e), or the solicitor of the tenant for life (f), to be a trustee for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882; and has even refused to appoint two brothers trustees, and required two independent persons to be appointed (g).] [Appointment of tenant for life.]

47. The question has often been asked, whether the donee of the power can appoint himself a trustee, and, as no one can be judge in his own case, such an appointment has been regarded as open to objection (h); [and it has recently been decided, in a case where property was settled on trusts in favour of a married woman, and she and her husband were empowered to appoint new trustees, that such power being fiduciary the husband and wife could not validly exercise it by appointing the husband and another person to be trustees (i).] Should, however, the execution of the trust have been committed to trustees and the survivor of them, his executors and administrators, and the trustees die, and the power of appointment is in the executor of the survivor, here it may be said that as by the terms of the trust the executor was declared to be a proper person to execute the trust, the executor has the settlor's warrant for the appointment of himself and Whether donee of power can appoint himself trustee.

another. It may still, however, be observed, that the exercise of every power should be regulated by the circumstances as they stand at the time, and that the limitation to executors à priori cannot dispense with the discretion to be applied afterwards.

Of severing a trusteeship.

48. Where estates of a different description, or held under a different title, or limited upon different trusts, have been vested in the same trustees by the settlor, and there is a single power of appointment of new trustees in the usual form, it [was at one time thought] that there was no authority for afterwards dividing the trust by the appointment of one set of new trustees to execute the trusts of the one estate, and a distinct set of new trustees to execute the trusts of the other (a); and it [was even held in one case] upon a petition under the Trustee Acts, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make such an order (b). [But where there was no opposition to the order, the Court in several subsequent cases appointed new trustees under the Trustee Acts of one of several trusts held under the same instrument without dealing with the other funds (c); and in an administration action it was held by Fry, J., that the Court had jurisdiction to appoint separate sets of trustees (d). Now, by the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (e), it is enacted, that on an appointment of new trustees, a separate set of trustees may be appointed for any part of the trust property held on trusts distinct from those relating to any other part or parts of the trust property; or, if only one trustee was originally appointed, then one separate trustee may be so appointed for the first-mentioned part; and this section applies to trusts created either before or after the commencement of the Act. And the appointment may be made even although in certain events the trusts of the several properties may become identical (f).

In a recent case it was held that under this section an appointment of a separate set of trustees can only be made when an appointment of new trustees of the whole property is being made, and that the section does not enable the existing trustees of the whole property to retire from the trusts as to part, by means of an appointment of new trustees of that part (g). But such an Directory powers.

49. The proviso is sometimes of such a directory character as to authorize the appointment of new trustees upon one event, without the intention of confining the exercise of the power to the occurrence of that event exclusively. Thus, where six trustees were empowered, when reduced to three, to fill up the number, and all died but one, it was held competent to the survivor to execute the appointment (b). So, where the original number of trustees was twenty-five, and they were directed, when reduced to fifteen, to proceed to nominate others, it was determined that, when seventeen remained, the survivors might elect, but when reduced to only fifteen they were compellable to elect (c). It should be observed that these were cases of charitable trusts, in which a greater latitude of construction is allowed than in ordinary trusts (d).

Tenant for life disposing of his life estate.

50. If a tenant for life has a power of appointing new trustees and sells his life interest, the power [is not thereby destroyed, but is still exercisable with the consent of the person to whom the beneficial interest has been aliened (e). So if the tenant for life] has only mortgaged his life interest, he may not be able to appoint a trustee behind the back of the mortgagee, but there can be no objection to such an exercise of the power, if it be done with the consent of the mortgagee.

[It has recently been held (f) that the power is exercisable by the tenant for life, even without the consent of the alienee, but it is submitted that this must be subject to the implied condition that there is nothing in the appointment prejudicial to the interest of the alienee. This condition has been expressly recognized in several of the earlier cases (g), and is in accordance with sound principle; and it is conceived that, notwithstanding the recent case of Hardaker v. Moorhouse, it will be the wiser course to procure the consent of the alienee to the appointment.]

Trustee cannot retire in consideration of a premium, or in favour of another who intends to commit a breach of trust.

51. Advantage cannot be taken of the power for the purposes of profit; and therefore if the donee of the power appoint a person a trustee in consideration of a sum of money paid by him for the office, the appointment cannot stand (a). And if a trustee refuse, when solicited, to commit a breach of trust himself, but declares his willingness to resign in favour of some other person less scrupulous, the Court, acting upon the principle of qui facit per alium facit per se, will hold the trustee who retires responsible for the misbehaviour of the trustee he has substituted (b). And upon principle it would seem that a bond of indemnity given to the retiring trustee would be a very doubtful security against the consequences of the act, for the bond itself if found to be infected with fraud could afford no just ground for action (c). However, in a recent case, it was held by the Court of Exchequer that the common law Courts have no such cognizance of breaches of trust as to treat a bond of indemnity against an act amounting in equity to a breach of trust as necessarily containing anything illegal (d).

Improper appointment by donee of power.

52. If a tenant for life, with a power of appointment of new trustees, appoint improper persons to the trust, he will be personally liable for the costs of a suit for removing the objectionable trustees (e).

Result where a new trustee is ineffectually appointed.

53. If a new trustee be ineffectually appointed, the old trustees may exercise the powers given to them by the instrument of trust, notwithstanding the ineffectual attempt (f). But if a trustee retire upon the appointment of a new trustee, and from want of the proper formalities being observed the appointment is not legal, the old trustee cannot lie by for a long interval and then exercise a power by mere concurrence in the deed, without bonâ fide exercising his own judgment and discretion (g).

Lis pendens.

54. If the administration of the trust be in the hands of the Court, the donee of the power cannot exercise it without having first obtained the Court's approbation of the person proposed (h).

However, if the old trustees do appoint without the leave of the Court, the act is not to be considered as altogether void in itself, but it puts the burthen upon them of proving, and that by the strictest evidence, that what was done was perfectly right; and also saddles them with the costs of that proof. If the act was not proper, of course the appointment will be cancelled (a).

How the costs are to be borne.

55. On the appointment of a new trustee under a power, the costs, [including those of the donee of the power (b),] fall on the corpus of the trust estate. In strictness the costs of appointing new trustees should be governed by the same principles as the payment of fines on admission to copyholds (c). But on the appointment of new trustees by the Court the costs are always thrown upon the estate, and the practice in Court regulates the practice out of Court (d). Where there is no fund readily available the costs are often paid by the tenant for life.

Inrolment in case of charity.

56. On the appointment of new trustees of a charity, the conveyance of real estate which is already in mortmain need not be inrolled (e).

Power of new trustees.

57. Where new trustees are appointed under a power, it is presumed that they can exercise all the powers given to the original trustees in that character; but in penning a power of appointment of new trustees, all questions should be obviated by an express direction that the new trustees shall have the same powers as if originally appointed (f).

Attested copies.

58. A trustee upon transferring the trust estate to a newly appointed trustee is not allowed to charge it with the expense of an attested copy of the settlement where he has already an ordinary copy, or with the expense of a duplicate of the deed of new appointment, though he is entitled to an examined copy of it. The extra evidence is considered as incurred for the satisfaction of the trustee from an excess of caution, and, if required, must be paid for by himself (g).

Inquiries to be made by incoming trustee.

59. If newly appointed trustees omit to inquire of a retiring trustee whether he has notice of any charge, and then having no notice, they distribute the fund to the prejudice of the incumbrancer, they will not be liable to him on the ground that it was their duty to have made inquiry of the retiring trustee, in which case they would have known of the incumbrance (a). [But new trustees are bound to look into the documents relating to the trust to ascertain of what incumbrances their predecessors have had notice (b).]

60. Under sect. 5 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, the Court has jurisdiction where a final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage has been made to extinguish or vary the power of appointing new trustees of the settlements made by the parties to the marriage (c).

Thirdly. Of the discharge of the trustee by the authority of the Court.

Suit to be discharged from the trust.

1. The trustee may, in every proper case, although the contrary appears to have been at one time supposed (d), get himself discharged from the office on application to the Court. A power of appointment of new trustees is very frequently omitted in settlements, or the donee of the power either cannot or will not exercise it, and were there no means by which a trustee could ever denude himself of that character, it would operate as a great discouragement to mankind to undertake so arduous a task.

Where no new trustee can be found.

2. Where no new trustee can be found willing to act, the trustee's right to be discharged must depend upon the circumstances of the case. "It is a mistake," observed Lord St. Leonards, "to suppose that a trustee who is entitled to be discharged is bound to show to the Court that another person is ready to accept the office; the Court will at once refer it to the Master to appoint a new trustee. But if no one can be found who will accept the trust, the Court may find itself obliged to keep the old trustee before the Court, but will take care to protect him in the meantime" (e). This was said in a case where the trustee, from the conduct of the cestui que trust, could claim to be discharged; but if a trustee wish to retire from mere caprice, it is not clear that the Court can or will discharge him, unless another trustee can be found in substitution (f). It is certain that the Court cannot divest him of the estate before some one can be found to take it, and even as to the office it is not unreasonable, that if a man once engages to undertake it, he shall not retire from it without any reason, and so leave the estate without a trustee. But a trustee may, in a proper case, relieve himself from the liabilities of the office by submitting the administration of the trusts to the jurisdiction of the Court (a). In a case where there was a power of appointing new trustees, with a direction that the number might be augmented or reduced, and one of the three trustees wished to retire, but no new trustee could be found, the Court, under the Trustee Acts, appointed the two continuing trustees to be the sole trustees (b); [but in similar cases the Court now refuses to make the order, and requires a new trustee to be appointed, unless the whole of the fund is immediately divisible (c); or the trustees undertake to bring the trust funds immediately into Court (d).]

How application to be discharged from the trust should be made.

3. Formerly the application to the Court to be discharged from the trust was in general made by bill, in order to give the Court an opportunity of examining into the merits of the case (e); but if a suit were already pending, the trustee might then solicit his dismissal by petition or motion (f). It was formerly not the custom of the Court to look through the proceedings, but a reference was ordered to the Master (g). Under the present practice the Court, except in cases of special difficulty, usually appoints a trustee without a reference to chambers, and without a suit, under the provisions of the Trustee Acts.

Part of the trust estate lost.

4. If part of the original trust estate is supposed to be lost, or is not forthcoming, the Court will not appoint new trustees of the residue, so as to make them partial trustees only, but will appoint them trustees generally; and, if required, will at the same time, for the protection of the trustees, direct an inquiry whether any part of the trust fund has been lost, and what steps should be taken for its recovery (a).

Costs.

5. The costs where the trustee retires from caprice or without sufficient reason must be borne by himself (b); but where he retires from necessity, or on good and sufficient ground, they will be thrown upon the trust estate (c). Where the trust was originally a simple one, but has become embarrassing from its complications, the trustee may commence an action to be relieved, and will be allowed his costs, for although he might have paid the trust fund into Court under the Trustee Relief Act, this would not have saved him from being sued, except as to the particular sum paid into Court (d).

Application by representative of deceased trustee.

6. A distinction was taken by Lord Langdale between the case where the same person who accepted the trust comes to be relieved from it, in whom it would be caprice to relinquish the trust without any sufficient reason, and the case where on that person's death, the trust devolves on his representative by operation of law, and the representative applies to the Court (e). And where the executor of a trustee declined to act as trustee, and a bill was filed against him to have new trustees appointed, and that the executor might pay the costs, the Court said the executor had a perfect right to decline acting in the trusts, and allowed him his costs (f).

Complication of the trust by the acts of the tenant for life.

7. Where the settlement contained a power of appointment of new trustees, and the tenant for life having incumbered his life-estate with annuities and other charges, the original trustees were desirous of relieving themselves from the difficulties of their situation by retiring from the trust, and the tenant for life who was the donee of the power could not find any person to undertake the trust, the costs of the suit which the trustees had instituted for their discharge were thrown exclusively upon the fund of the tenant for life (g).

Executor cannot be discharged.

8. An executor is regarded in some sense as a trustee, but he cannot, like a trustee, be discharged, even by the Court, from his executorship. When the funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies have been satisfied, and the surplus has been invested upon the trusts of the will, the executor then drops that character and becomes a trustee in the proper sense, and may then be discharged from the office like any other trustee.

PART III.

THE CESTUI QUE TRUST.

CHAPTER XXVI.

IN WHAT THE ESTATE OF THE CESTUI QUE TRUST PRIMARILY CONSISTS.

HAVING concluded the subject of the estate and office of the trustee, it follows next that we investigate the nature and properties of the Estate of the cestui que trust; and in the present chapter we shall inquire in what the estate of the cestui que trust primarily consists, First, In the simple trust; and Secondly, In the special trust.

SECTION I.

OF THE CESTUI QUE TRUST'S ESTATE IN THE SIMPLE TRUST.

IN the simple trust the equitable ownership is compounded of the Pernancy of the profits and the Disposition of the estate—the jus habendi and jus disponendi (a).

First. The equitable owner is entitled to the pernancy of the profits.

Cestui que trust entitled to possession of lands.

1. In a trust of lands the cestui que trust may compel the trustee to put him in possession of the estate (b); and if the cestui que trust be ejected from the possession by the trustee, the cestui que trust may compel the trustee to account not only for the rents actually received, but for the whole rents legally demandable from the tenants (c).

(c) Kaye v. Powel, 1 Ves. jun. 408.

Rule applicable only to simple trust.

2. The rule which gives the cestui que trust the possession is applicable only to the simple trust in the strict sense, for where the cestui que trust is not exclusively interested, but other parties have also a claim, it rests in the discretion of the Court whether the actual possession shall remain with the cestui que trust or the trustee, and if possession be given to the cestui que trust, whether he shall not hold it under certain conditions and restrictions (a).

Blake v. Bunbury.

Thus a testator devised all his real estate to trustees in fee, upon trust to convey the same for a term of 500 years (the trusts of which were to raise certain annuities and sums in gross), and subject thereto to the use of A. for life with remainders over. A. filed a bill, praying to be let into possession. At the hearing of the cause a general account was directed of the testator's estates and of the charges upon them, and the plaintiff further desired that he might be let into immediate possession; but Lord Thurlow said, "It is impossible for me to let him into possession till I have the accounts before me, and even till the trusts are executed, unless, as he now offers, he pays into Court a sum sufficient to answer all the purposes of the trust. The Court, perhaps, has let a tenant for life into possession, where it has seen that the best way of performing the trusts would be by letting him into possession, as where an annuity of 100*l.* a year is charged upon an estate of 5000*l.* a year; but till the account is taken I do not know but the purposes of the trust may take up the whole, and if I was to do it now, perhaps I should only have to resume the estate" (b). The accounts were afterwards taken, and the plaintiff was let into possession on giving security to the amount of 10,000*l.* to abide the order of the Court as to the annuities and other incumbrances (c).

Tidd v. Lister.

In another case (d), a testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay his funeral expenses and debts, to keep the buildings upon the estate insured against fire, to satisfy the premiums upon two policies of insurance on the lives of his two sons, to allow his said sons an annuity of sixty guineas each, and subject thereto upon trust for his daughter for life with remainders over; and the personal estate having sufficed to discharge the funeral expenses, debts and annuities, the daughter, who was then a feme covert, filed a bill praying to be let into possession upon securing the amount of the premiums of the policies: but Sir J. Leach said that if a testator, who gave in the first instance a beneficial interest for life only, thought fit to place the direction of the property in other hands, which was an obvious means of securing the provident management of that property for the advantage of those who were to take in succession, a Court of equity ought not to disappoint that intention by delivering over the estate to the cestui que trust for life, unprotected against that bias which he must naturally have to prefer his own interest to the fair right of those who were to take in remainder. There might be cases in which it was plain from the expressions in the will, that the testator did not intend the property should remain under the personal management of the trustees; there might be cases in which it was plain from the nature of the property, that the testator could not mean to exclude the cestui que trust for life from the personal possession of the property, as in the case of a family residence. There might be very special cases in which the Court would deliver the possession of the property to the cestui que trust for life, although the testator's intention appeared to be that it should remain with the trustees; as, where the personal occupation of the trust property was beneficial to the cestui que trust; in which case the Court, by taking means to secure the due protection of the property for the benefit of those in remainder, would in substance be performing the trust according to the intention of the testator. And his Honour, considering that there was no such ground of exception in the case before him, refused the application (a).

[Accumulation directed for payment of mortgages.]

[In a recent case a testator directed an accumulation of rents for the purpose of paying off mortgages, and that the tenant for life under the will should not receive any part of the rents until the mortgages were paid off; the mortgagees sold the estates comprised in their mortgages, and the proceeds being insufficient to pay them in full, the balance was paid out of the accumulations; and it was held that the tenant for life was entitled to be let into possession of the estates remaining unsold, and to receive the surplus accumulations (b).]

[(a) And see Re Bentley, 54 L. J. N.S. Ch. 782; 33 W. R. 610.]

[(b) Norton v. Johnstone, 30 Ch. D.

Cestui que trust for her separate use.

3. In one case a feme covert was entitled to her separate use for her life, and it was not thought incompatible with the nature of such an estate that she should be put into possession, though the claim was opposed by the trustees (a). A tenant for life cannot claim possession as a right, but only at the discretion and by the sufferance of the Court; and therefore, where trustees were directed as managers of the estate to pay insurances and repairs and other necessary outlays, and apply the net annual income to the separate use of a person for life, it was held that such tenant for life was not a person "entitled to possession or receipt of the rents and profits" for life within the meaning of the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, and could not therefore grant leases under the Act. Such a power would in fact pro tanto neutralize the powers of management vested in the trustees (b).

Cestui que trust cannot recover the possession at law.

4. Until a recent Act, to be noticed presently, the cestui que trust's right to the possession was recognized, we must remember, in a Court of equity only; for in a Court of law the cestui que trust was merely tenant at will (c), and this tenancy was determinable at any time on demand of possession by the trustee, though not before such demand (d). The doctrines advanced by Lord Mansfield in the last century were long ago over-ruled. It was maintained in his day, that a cestui que trust, a plaintiff in ejectment, could not be nonsuited by a term outstanding in his trustee (e); and that a trustee, a plaintiff in ejectment, could not recover against his own cestui que trust (f). It was even decided that, where a term had been created for securing an annuity, and subject thereto upon trust to attend the inheritance, the tenant of the freehold was entitled to recover the possession (provided he claimed subject to the charge), notwithstanding the legal term was outstanding in a trustee upon trusts that were still unsatisfied (a). Such at least were the doctrines in cases of clear trusts: for where the equity was at all doubtful, the rights of the parties were even then referred to the proper tribunal (b). "Lord Mansfield," as Lord Redesdale observed, "had on his mind prejudices derived from his familiarity with the Scotch law, where law and equity are administered in the same Courts" (c). From the time of Lord Mansfield, and until the recent Act, it was established:—First, that a cestui que trust could not recover in ejectment (d), unless a surrender to him of the legal estate could be reasonably presumed (e), (which, of course, could not be where the circumstance of the outstanding legal estate appeared on the declaration or special case (f),) and the cestui que trust had no alternative but to bring his action in the name of the trustee, who was to be indemnified against the costs (g): Secondly, that the trustee, as the tenant of the legal estate, might recover in ejectment from his own cestui que trust (h); and the cestui que trust had no defence to the action at law, but must have had recourse to an injunction in equity (i), and the clause in the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, which authorized an equitable defence at law, did not apply to ejectment (j). However, a lessee under a feme covert entitled to her separate use might protect himself by equitable plea against trespass by the husband, in whom the legal estate was vested (k).

defences are to be recognized in all the Courts, so that for the time to come the full merits, both at law and in equity, will be administered in the same action.

Leases by a cestui que trust.

6. As a tenant is not allowed to dispute his landlord's title, if a cestui que trust, having only an equitable estate, grant a lease, then, as between lessor and lessee, the lessor may distrain and exercise the other rights of a landlord in the same way as if at the date of the demise he had been the legal owner (a). The title of the lessor might be such, that on his death the person claiming under him could not prove the devolution of the estate without showing upon the pleadings that at the date of the lease the lessor's interest was equitable, and in such a case it is presumed the estoppel would not apply, and the remedy would be in equity (b). But if there be no difficulty upon the pleadings, the persons claiming under the lessor, as, for instance, his trustee in bankruptcy, had always the same benefit of the rule as the lessor had (c).

Notice to quit.

7. If the trustees put the cestui que trust in possession, and the cestui que trust grants a lease and afterwards serves a notice on the lessee to quit, the cestui que trust is the agent of the trustees for the purposes of the notice, and an ejectment by the trustees can be sustained as if the notice had been given by themselves (d).

Injunction between tenants in common.

8. If there be two cestuis que trust tenants in common, and one of them be put into possession, and cuts timber, and becomes insolvent, the other cestui que trust can obtain an injunction (e).

Possession of the title deeds.

9. The title deeds of an estate form no part of the usufructuary enjoyment; and therefore if a person vests an estate in trustees upon particular trusts, one of which is to receive the rents and pay them over to the settlor for life, and the deeds are delivered into their possession, they have a right to the custody of them for the benefit of all parties interested (f), and should the settlor obtain them from the trustees, and thereby be enabled to deal with the estate as absolute owner, the trustees, if it appeared they had acted fraudulently, or under such gross negligence as amounted to constructive fraud, would be held personally responsible for the consequences (a). However, a tenant for life, if the estate be legal, is entitled to the custody of the deeds (b), and may bring an action of detinue (c), or, unless he has shown that he cannot be safely trusted with the deeds (d), may take proceedings in equity for the recovery of them (e); and as equity follows law, the Court, in the absence of special trusts requiring the possession of the deeds by the trustees, will not take the deeds from the tenant for life who has got possession of them (f); and where the tenant for life in equity is not the settlor, and therefore cannot by suppressing the settlement make a title to the fee simple, has ordered the deeds to be delivered to the tenant for life in equity (g), subject of course to the remainderman's right to production and inspection to a reasonable extent (h), [and has required him to undertake not to part with them without the consent of the trustees, and to produce them to the trustees upon all reasonable occasions (i)]. Where the legal estate, whether of freeholds, copyholds, or leaseholds, is vested in a trustee or executor in trust, not for certain persons entitled in succession, but for cestuis que trust entitled absolutely in possession, the cestuis que trust, or if they are infants, their guardians, may institute proceedings to have the deeds delivered up to them. But as to leaseholds, an executor may hold the deeds until all debts have been paid and the personal estate cleared (j).

[The trustee in bankruptcy of the husband of a legal tenant for life (not entitled to the property as separate estate), has not an absolute right to the custody of the title deeds during the coverture; but where the circumstances require it, they will be ordered to be brought into Court for safe custody (a).]

Cestuis que trust entitled to inspect documents.

10. Cestuis que trust have a right at all seasonable times to inspect the documents relating to the trust (b), and at their own expense to be furnished with copies of them, and the rule extends to cases submitted and opinions of counsel taken by the trustees for their guidance in the discharge of their duty, for as the expense falls upon the trust estate, it stands to reason that the cestuis que trust may see the opinions and cases for which they pay. But the right does not arise until the relation of trustee and cestui que trust has been established to the satisfaction of the Court (c).

Custody of deeds may be committed to one of the trustees.

11. As the deeds and documents relating to the trust cannot be held by all the trustees (unless they be deposited with bankers with a direction not to part with them except on the authority of the whole number), co-trustees have been held to be justified in committing the custody of the deeds to one of themselves; and where the deeds are a security for money, the possession by the one is no implied authority from the co-trustee to him who holds them to receive the principal money secured (d).

Privileges of cestui que trust.

12. Upon the principle that the cestui que trust is in foro conscientiæ entitled to the pernancy of the profits, he has been invested by the express language of some statutes, and by the equitable construction of others, with the various privileges conferred by the legislature upon the legal tenants of real estate.

Qualification of cestui que trust to be a juror.

13. By 6th Geo. 4. c. 50, s. 1, Every man between the ages of 21 and 60, residing in any county in England, who shall have in his own name or in trust for him within the same county 10*l.* by the year, above reprises, in real estate, &c., &c., is qualified to serve as a juror (e).

Wade and Pavier took possession of the title deeds on the testator's death, and held them during the life of Joel Smith. On his death the infant children by their next friend, with two other persons as co-plaintiffs (being their guardians appointed by the Court) filed their bill against Pavier the surviving executor for delivery of the deeds, and their being no allegation of unpaid debts, the delivery of the deeds to the two guardians was ordered.

As to right of cestui que trust to vote for a coroner.

14. The right of election of coroner was formerly vested in the freeholders of the county; and the privilege of voting must, it is conceived, have belonged originally to the legal freeholder. Under 58th Geo. 3. c. 95, s. 2, the right to vote was confined to trustees or mortgagees in actual possession or receipt of the rents and profits, and a cestui que trust or mortgagor in possession was entitled to vote; but upon the repeal of 58 Geo. 3. c. 95, by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, this provision was not re-enacted, and the equitable owner had no right to vote (a). [But now under the Local Government Act, 1888 (b), coroners are no longer elected by the county freeholders, but are appointed by the county council.]

Right of cestui que trust to sport under the old law.

15. By the Game Act, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25, s. 3, persons were disqualified from sporting unless they had lands and tenements, &c., of the clear value of 100*l. per annum*; and it was decided that a cestui que trust of lands to that amount was within the intention of the Act; Lord Mansfield observing, that "the privilege was given to property, and the cestui que trust was substantially the owner and the trustee only nominally" (c). By the provisions of the late Game Act no qualification is now necessary (d).

Right of cestui que trust to vote at election for members of Parliament.

16. By 6th Vict. c. 18, s. 74, "no trustee of lands or tenements shall in any case have a right to vote in any such election, (i.e. for a Member of Parliament) for or by reason of any trust estate therein, but the cestui que trust in actual possession, or in the receipt of the rents and profits thereof, though he may receive the same through the hands of the trustee, shall and may vote for the same notwithstanding such trust" (e).

[Protector of the settlement.]

[17. The person entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the rents and profits of the settled property, under a settlement made since the Fines and Recoveries Act, is the protector of the settlement under section 22 of the Act, as owner of the prior estate, and not the trustees in whom the legal estate is vested; and in a settlement made before the Act, if the estates are equitable the beneficial owner is also protector (f).]

also in determining the relative rights of tenants for life and remaindermen, what is income and what is corpus, and it has been held that the tenant for life of a manor is entitled to the fines payable on all customary grants (a), or on admissions (b), and where leaseholds are annually renewable, the tenant for life of the reversion is entitled to the annual fines for renewal (c); [and where leaseholds for lives are perpetually renewable on the dropping of the lives, the tenant for life of the reversion is entitled to the heriots and fines for renewal, as they are of the nature of casual profits accruing during his tenancy for life (d).] So a tenant for life is entitled to underwood and thinnings of plantations in ordinary course (e), and to rents and royalties payable under the lease of an open mine (f), or of a brickfield, whether the lease was granted by the testator or by the trustee of his will under a power in the will (g), and to the produce of gravel, loam, peat, or bog-earth got annually according to the usual custom (h). But a tenant for life is not entitled to trees in woodlands not cut periodically according to custom, though cut for the sake of improving the growth of the rest (i).

[Mines and timber.]

[19. Under the Settled Land Act, 1882, a tenant for life, whether impeachable for waste or not, can now grant mining leases of mines either opened or unopened, and is entitled if impeachable for waste to one-fourth part of the rents, and if not impeachable for waste to three-fourth parts of the rents (j). And as a tenant for life although impeachable for waste, has a right to continue the working of open mines, he will be entitled, if a lease is granted of such mines under the powers of the Act, to three-fourths of the rents. Under the same Act a tenant for life impeachable for waste, may on obtaining the consent of the trustees of the settlement or an order of the Court, cut and sell timber, ripe and fit for cutting, and is entitled to one-fourth part of the net proceeds, but the remaining three-fourths are to go as capital (k).

was held that the loss must be made good out of the profits earned during the life of the next tenant for life and not out of the corpus (a); but the adjustment of the relative rights of tenant for life and remainderman in such a case necessarily depends on the construction of the particular will (b).

[Bonus.] 21. Where a bonus dividend is declared by a company out of accumulated profits it is a question of fact (which it is often very difficult to determine) whether such bonus is to be regarded as capital or income, and where in such a case it appeared that the company had not paid or intended to pay any sum as dividend, but intended to appropriate the undivided profits as an increase of their capital, it was held that the tenant for life was not entitled to the bonus, but that it must be treated as capital (c). But the mere fact that the profit is carried to a reserve fund is not sufficient to show that it has been appropriated as capital (d).]

Succession duty. 22. The tenant for life of an estate must bear the expense of accounts necessary to be taken for the discharge of the succession duty payable by the tenant for life as successor (e), and must discharge the rates and taxes payable during his life (f).

Fencing. 23. The expenses of fencing newly acquired enclosures will fall upon the corpus (g).

Cestui que trust's possession of chattels. 24. Hitherto we have spoken of the cestui que trust's right to the pernancy of the profits in respect of lands. In trusts of chattels personal, as where heirlooms are vested in a trustee upon trust for the persons successively entitled under the limitations of a strict settlement, the cestui que trust for the time being is equally entitled to the use and possession of the goods during the continuance of his interest; and upon the ground of this right the goods are not forfeited on the bankruptcy of the tenant for life, though left in the possession of the bankrupt by permission of the legal owner, for they are left with him according to the title (a); [and possession by the cestui que trust in accordance with the trust instrument is in law the possession of the trustee, who can maintain an action against a wrongdoer for the conversion of the chattels (b).]

Household goods.

25. In a bequest to a person of the use of household goods, it seems the legatee may use them in his own or in any other person's house, and either alone or promiscuously with other goods, or, it is said, may let them out to hire (c); but, where the chattels are heirlooms annexed to a house, and their continuance in the mansion is evidently a constituent part of the trust, they cannot be let to hire except together with the house itself (d). Of course the use of the chattels by the tenant for life does not enable him to pawn them beyond the extent of his own interest (e).

[Heirlooms.]

[26. By the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 37, a tenant for life may sell personal chattels settled as heirlooms, and the money arising by the sale is to be capital money under the Act, and to be dealt with accordingly, or it may be invested in the purchase of other chattels to be settled and held on the same trusts. But no sale or purchase of chattels under the section is to be made without an order of the Court (f).]

Stock in the funds.

27. Where the trust fund consists of stock, the cestui que trust is usually put in possession of the dividends by a power of attorney from the trustee to the cestui que trust's bankers, with a written authority from the trustee to the bankers to credit the cestui que trust with the dividends as and when received, by which arrangement the trustee is spared the trouble of repeated personal attendances at the Bank of England, and the entries in the books of the private bankers are sufficient evidence of the receipt. In cases where the cestui que trust is tenant for life, this course seems free from objection; but where his interest is one which may determine in his lifetime, some risk is incurred of the power of attorney and authority being acted upon by the bankers after the determination of the cestui que trust's estate; and it is conceived that the trustee would be liable to the other cestuis que trust for any misappropriation thus taking place. The trustee must be careful to see that the power of attorney extends only to the receipts of the dividends, and not to the sale of the stock itself; otherwise, if the bankers sell out the stock and the proceeds are misapplied, the trustee will be answerable (a).

Cestui que trust's right of disposition of the legal estate.

1. The cestui que trust may call upon the trustee to execute conveyances of the legal estate as the cestui que trust directs (b). If the trustee refuse to comply, and the cestui que trust institutes proceedings to compel him, the trustee will be visited with the costs (c), unless there was some reasonable ground for his refusal (d), or he acted bonâ fide under the advice of counsel (e); and the trustee has been made to pay costs, though the cestui que trust, instead of filing a bill, might have enforced a conveyance by a summary process of a petition (f). But a trustee has a right to be satisfied by the fullest evidence that the party requiring the conveyance is the exclusive cestui que trust (g); and a cestui que trust cannot call for the conveyance of a larger legal estate than he has equitable: an equitable tenant in tail, for instance, cannot call for a conveyance of the legal fee-simple (h). And Lord Eldon was of opinion that a cestui que trust could not require the trustee to divest himself from time to time of different parcels of the trust estate; for the trustee had a right to say, "If you mean to divest me of my trust, divest me of it altogether, and then make your conveyances as you think proper" (i). And a trustee, like a mortgagee, cannot be called upon to convey the estate by any other words or description than that by which the (h) Saunders v. Neville, 2 Vern. 428. But though this point may have been mooted in the case and ruled as reported, yet the principal question in the cause was a different one, viz. whether under the circumstances the plaintiff was entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal estate even to him, and "the heirs of his body." See note by Raithby, correcting the text from the Reg. Book.

(i) Goodson v. Ellisson, 3 Russ. 594. But if the cestuis que trust of a fund, as tenant for life and remainderman, assign part of the fund, it is conceived that the trustee cannot refuse to transfer that part to the assignee. The owner of an aliquot share has a separate claim in respect of it: Smith v. Snow, 3 Mad. 10.

conveyance was made to himself (a). And a trustee cannot be compelled to execute a conveyance containing inaccurate recitals; but where all the cestuis que trust are parties, he cannot insist on the insertion of recitals against the wishes of his cestuis que trust (b); and a trustee in whom any property is vested which is liable to succession duty, must see that the duty is satisfied or he becomes personally liable (c). Succession duty.

[2. Where property is disposed of by the beneficial owner under the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882, as by the 20th section he is empowered to convey the property for the estate, or interest the subject of the settlement, and can therefore pass the legal estate (d), if comprised in the settlement, without the concurrence of the trustees, it is conceived that the trustees would not be compelled to join in the assurance.] [Under the Settled Land Act.]

3. A trustee for the separate use of a married woman with restraint of anticipation, holds upon a special trust during the coverture; but if the husband die, the trust for the separate use is suspended and the feme has an absolute power of disposition, though on a future coverture the separate use and non-anticipation clause, if not prevented by previous disposition, would revive. The trustee, therefore, after the death of the husband, holds upon a simple trust for the feme, and is bound at her direction to convey the legal estate to her (e). Trustee for separate use.

4. It not unfrequently happens that when property is held upon trust for a tenant for life, with a power of appointment among his children, and in default of appointment for the children, the trustee is called upon to make a conveyance by the joint direction of the parent and such of the children as are the appointees, and the trustee has a shrewd suspicion that undue influence has been used, or that there is an underhand bargain in derogation of the rights of the other children, who take nothing by the appointment. In these cases, if the nature of the transaction be such as to show on the face of it that there is good ground for suspicion, the trustee will, on refusing to convey, be protected by the Court, and be entitled to his costs (f). But, although it may be the duty of the trustee to make enquiry as Fraudulent appointments.

to the bonâ fides of the transaction, yet, if he cannot prove any mala fides, the mere possibility of fraud or undue influence will not be sufficient, and if a trustee decline to convey without any better reason, he will have to bear the costs of a suit for compelling him, though he will still be entitled to his charges and expenses properly incurred not being costs in the cause (a).

Enquiry into a collateral trust.

5. Trustees who are bound to make a conveyance of their trust estate, cannot justify their refusal to convey by alleging a duty to enquire into another trust recited in their trust deed, but which is wholly distinct from the trust in question (b).

Delivery of possession to remainderman.

6. Where the legal estate is vested in trustees for A. for life, with remainder to B., and on the death of A. application for a conveyance is made by B., the trustees sometimes object that they cannot convey until they have recovered all the arrears of rent that accrued in the lifetime of A. (c). In such a case the trustees are, at all events, bound to use due diligence, and must not from their laches postpone the rights of the remainderman. But the better course would be to give the trustees an indemnity on delivery of possession, or an undertaking to receive the arrears and account for them to the tenant for life's estate.

Trustee's conveyance.

7. The 4th section of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, enacts that the word "grant" shall not imply any covenant in law except so far as the same may, by force of any Act of Parliament, imply a covenant; and therefore, whatever may have been the case formerly, a conveying trustee cannot now draw any liability upon himself by the use of the word grant alone. But, as to lands in Yorkshire, it must be remembered that the Yorkshire Registry Acts (d) gave the force of covenants for title to the combined words "grant, bargain, and sell." And by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, the word "grant" in conveyances by companies within the provision of the Act is made to carry with it the ordinary covenants for title (e).

[By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, the use of the word "grant" is rendered unnecessary for the conveyance of hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, whether in instruments before or after the commencement of the Act (a).]

Trustee to bar dower.

8. Before the abolition of tortious conveyances, a trustee to bar dower was or was not called upon to join in a conveyance, according to the circumstances of the case. Where a power of appointment was exercised besides the ordinary conveyance, his joining was dispensed with; but where, no power being exercised, the whole fee could not be passed without his concurrence, he was made a party (b). Where the deed creating the uses to bar dower was dated before 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 4, so that a forfeiture might by possibility have occurred, it was held by V. C. Stuart that a purchaser was still entitled to call for the concurrence of the trustee to bar dower. The Vice-Chancellor, however, considered that the objection taken by the purchaser to the title, which was founded on the non-concurrence of the dower trustee, who was absent in Australia, was frivolous and vexatious, and had an extremely slight foundation, and on that account refused to give the purchaser any costs (c). On appeal, the Lord Chancellor and L. J. Knight Bruce seem to have considered the objection altogether untenable, though they did not distinctly decide the point (d). The practical result is, that for the future a purchaser cannot be advised to require the concurrence of the trustee to bar dower.

A series of equitable interests.

9. In general there are no intermediate steps of the equitable interest, so that if A. be trustee for B., who is trustee for C., A. holds in trust for C., and must convey the estate as C. directs (e). But if any special confidence or discretionary power be reposed in B., which requires him to have the legal estate, he may then call upon the original trustee to execute a transfer to himself (f). And if a fund be vested in trustees in trust for a feme covert for life for her separate use, with remainder upon such trusts as she may by will appoint, and she by will gives legacies, and disposes of the residue and appoints executors, the original trustees are bound to transfer the fund to the executors to be administered by them (g); [and where the original trustees, instead of transferring the fund to the executors, paid it into Court under the Trustee Relief Act, they were made to pay the costs of the petition for getting the fund out of Court (a). But if the donee of a special power of appointment appoint the fund to trustees in trust for the objects of the power, the trustees so nominated cannot call for a transfer of the fund (b).]

Trustees for appointees.

10. Where trustees hold a fund upon such trusts as a person by an instrument to be executed in a particular manner may appoint, they must of course be careful in transferring it to the appointees to see that all the formalities attending the power have been duly observed, for if the execution of it be not regular, the trustees (except in those cases where Courts of equity aid a defective execution) will be personally liable for the fund to the parties claiming in default of the execution of the power (c).

Costs.

11. The costs incurred by the trustee in relation to the conveyance must be paid by the cestui que trust, or, which is the same thing, must be discharged out of the trust estate.

SECTION II.

OF THE CESTUI QUE TRUST'S ESTATE IN THE SPECIAL TRUST.

Cestui que trust's estate in special trust.

1. THIS may be said to be, The right to enforce in equity the specific execution of the settlor's intention to the extent of that cestui que trust's particular interest. The other parties entitled may express a desire that the trust should be differently administered; but if such a divergence from the donor's will would prejudice or injuriously affect the rights of any one cestui que trust, that cestui que trust may compel the trustees to adhere strictly and literally to the line of duty prescribed to them (d).

Special trust may be converted into a simple trust.

2. If there be only one cestui que trust, or there be several cestuis que trust, and all of one mind (in each case sui juris), the specific execution may be stayed, and the special trust will then acquire the character of a simple trust; for whatever modifications of the estate the settlor may have contemplated, through whatever channel he may have originally intended his bounty to flow, the cestuis que trust, as the persons to be eventually benefited, are in equity, from the creation of the trust, and before the trustees have acted in the execution of it, the absolute beneficial proprietors. Thus if a fund be given to trustees upon trust to accumulate until A. attains twenty-four, and then to transfer the gross amount to him, A., on attaining twenty-one, may, as the person exclusively interested, call for the immediate payment (a). So if real estate be devised with a direction that the devisees are not to have the enjoyment until they attain the age of twenty-five years, unless there be a clear indication of an intention on the part of the testator, not only that his devisees are not to have the enjoyment of the property until the age mentioned, but that some other person is to have the enjoyment—or unless the property is so clearly taken away from the devisees up to the time of their attaining twenty-five as to induce the Court to hold that, as to the previous rents and profits, there has been an intestacy—the Court does not hesitate to strike out of the will the direction as to non-enjoyment, and gives the property at once to the devisees as the absolute owners (b). So if a legacy be bequeathed to trustees upon trust to purchase an annuity, the intended annuitant, if sui juris, may claim the legacy without going through the form of investment (c); and if a fund be vested in trustees in trust for the personal support, clothing, and maintenance of A., an adult, A. is exclusively entitled to the benefit of the fund, and if he become bankrupt, it passes to his trustee in bankruptcy (d), [and even an express contract by the cestuis que trust with the settlor and the trustees not to put an end to the special trust will not prevent their subsequently determining the trust, if there is no other person interested in or entitled to insist on the enforcement of the contract (e).]

to purchase other lands to be settled on the daughters of W. J. as tenants in common in tail, with remainder to them in fee, and the daughters levied a fine of the lands to be sold to the uses and upon the trusts of their respective marriage settlements, the question was, whether the entail had been effectually barred; and Sir W. Grant said, "In the lands to be sold they (the daughters) had no interest, legal or equitable, expressly limited to them: but the equitable interest in those lands must have resided somewhere: the trustees themselves could not be the beneficial owners; and if they were mere trustees, there must have been some cestuis que trust. In order to ascertain who they are, a Court of equity enquires for whose benefit the trust was created, and determines that those who are the objects of the trust have the interest in the thing which is the subject of it. Where money is given to be laid out in land, to be conveyed to A., though there is no gift of the money to him, yet in equity it is his, and he may elect not to have it laid out: so, on the other hand, where land is given upon trust to sell, and pay the produce to A., though no interest in the land is expressly given to him, in equity he is the owner, and the trustee must convey as he shall direct: if there are also other purposes for which it is sold, still he is entitled to the surplus of the price, as the equitable owner subject to those purposes; and if he provide for them he may keep the estate unsold. The daughters by electing to keep this estate have acquired the fee, and it was discharged of every trust to which it had been subject" (a).

Special trust proceeds till countermanded by the cestui que trust.

4. But until the cestui que trust or the joint cestuis que trust countermand the specific execution, the special trust will proceed; as if lands be devised to trustees upon trust to sell, and pay the proceeds to A., the property will remain personal estate in A. until he discharge the character impressed upon it by electing to take it as land (b).

Accounts.

5. As an incident to the beneficial enjoyment by the cestui que trust of his interest, he has a right to call upon the trustee for accurate information as to the state of the trust (c). Thus, in a trust for sale and payment of debts, the party entitled subject to the trust may say to the trustee, What estates have you sold? What is the amount of the monies raised? What debts have been

It is the first duty, observed Sir T. Plumer, of an accounting party, whether an agent, a trustee, a receiver, or an executor (for in this respect they all stand in the same situation), to be constantly ready with his accounts (c).

Sanction of co-trustee's accounts.

6. Not only is a trustee bound to render accurate accounts, but if he stand by and sanction the rendering of improper accounts by a defaulting trustee, he becomes liable himself for the misrepresentation (d).

Legatee.

7. A legatee, as being a quasi cestui que trust, is entitled to have a satisfactory explanation of the state of the testator's assets and an inspection of the accounts, but not to require a copy of the accounts at the expense of the estate (e).

CHAPTER XXVII.

PROPERTIES OF THE CESTUI QUE TRUST'S ESTATE.

We shall next enter upon the properties of the cestui que trust's estate as affected by the acts of the cestui que trust, or by operation of law.

SECTION I.

OF ASSIGNMENT.

Under this head we shall treat: First. Of the assignable quality of an equitable interest; Secondly. Of the rule that the assignee of an equity is bound by all the equities affecting it; Thirdly. Of Notice to the trustee; and, Fourthly. Of the rule Qui prior est tempore potior est jure.

First. Of the assignable quality of an equitable interest.

General rule.

1. It may be laid down as a general rule that an equitable interest may be assigned, though it be a mere possibility (a), and that either with or without the intervention of the trustee (b). And the assignee of the cestui que trust may call upon the trustee to clothe the equitable interest with the legal estate, and on his refusal may by suit compel a conveyance without making the assignor a party (c). But a mere right to sue a trustee for an alleged breach of trust, and which right is not annexed to any transfer of the trust estate, or any part thereof, is not assignable, or at least will not pass by a deed for 5s. consideration so as to enable the nominal purchaser to sue in respect of it (d).

N. 1874, pp. 78, 120.

Restraint of alienation.

2. A restriction against alienation (except in the case of a married woman) will have no more effect in equitable than in legal interests, but will be rejected as contravening the policy of the law (a), but in a limitation to the separate use of a feme covert, in order to give full effect to the estate itself, a clause against anticipation during the coverture is allowed (b).

Equitable interest in land.

3. As to lands, the transfer of an equitable interest might before the Statute of Frauds have been made by parol, but now by the 9th section of the Act all grants and assignments of any trust or confidence are required to be in writing signed by the party granting or assigning the same, or else are utterly void. A writing, therefore, is all that is necessary, but it is the practice to employ the same species of instrument, and the same form of words in the transfer of equitable as of legal estates.

8 & 9 Vict. c. 106.

4. By the Act to amend the Law of Real Property (c) it is enacted that an assignment of a chattel interest in lands not being copyhold shall be void at law unless made by deed, but it is conceived that this enactment affects legal interests only, and that the legislature cannot have intended to require a more solemn instrument for the assignment of an equitable chattel interest than for the conveyance of the equitable fee.

Equitable entail.

5. The power of an equitable tenant in tail to dispose of the equitable fee simple has been differently viewed at different periods. At common law all inheritable estates were in fee simple, and it was the statute de donis (d) that first gave rise to entails and expectant remainders. As this statute was long prior to the introduction of uses, had equity followed the analogy of the common law only, a trust limited to A. and the heirs of his body, and in default of issue to B. would have been construed a fee simple conditional and the remainder over would have been void; but the known legal estates of the day, whether parcel of the common law or ingrafted by statute, were copied without distinction into the system of trusts, and, equitable entails indisputably existing, the question in constant dispute was, by what process they were to be barred. After much fluctuation (e), it was finally established by Lord Hardwicke, that as entails with expectant remainders had gained a footing in trusts by analogy to the statute de donis, a Court of equity was bound to follow the analogy throughout, and therefore that a tenant in tail of a trust could not bar his issue, or the remainderman, except by an assurance analogous to one which would have been a bar had the entail been of the legal estate.

Summary of the law before the Fines and Recoveries Act.

6. The doctrines of equity, as finally settled upon this principle, were as follows:—

a. For a good equitable recovery there must have been an equitable tenant to the præcipe, that is the beneficial owner (a) of the first equitable freehold must necessarily have concurred (b).

β. An equitable recovery was a bar to equitable only and not to legal remainders (c).

γ. An equitable recovery was not vitiated by the circumstance that the equitable tenant to the præcipe had also the legal freehold (d).

δ. An equitable remainder was well barred, though it was vested in a person who had also the legal fee (e).

Fines and Recoveries Act.

7. At the present day, by the operation of the Fines and Recoveries Act (f), the equitable tenant in tail may dispose of (g) the equitable fee by the same modes of assurance and with the same formalities as if he were tenant in tail of the legal estate.

Inrolment of disentailing deed of copyholds.

8. A deed to bar the entail of an equitable interest in copyholds must, though not so expressly enacted, be entered on the court rolls within six calendar months from the date thereof (h).

Estates pur autre vie.

9. An estate pur autre vie was not even at law within the statute de donis; but a quasi entail (an estate of a most anomalous character) was introduced into legal estates, and was thence imported into trusts. The present doctrine of the Court appears to be this.

a. If quasi tenant in tail in equity, with remainder over, be in possession, he may at any time, by a simple conveyance, dispose of the absolute interest, as against the issue, and the remainderman, and may even bind them in equity by his contract.

(f) 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74.

[(g) A mere declaration of trust is not a disposition within the meaning of the Act, Semble: Green v. Paterson, 32 Ch. Div. 95.]

(h) Honywood v. Foster, 30 Beav. (No. 1), 1; [Green v. Paterson, 32 Ch. Div. 95; Gibbons v. Snape, 1 De G. & Sm. 621.]

β. But if quasi tenant in tail be in remainder after a prior estate under the same settlement, he must have the consent of the tenant for life or other precedent freeholder, as otherwise, though he may bind his issue, he cannot destroy the remainder.

γ. If lands held pur autre vie be limited to or in trust for A. and the heirs of his body with remainder over, the entirety of the estate is vested in A., and the issue and the remainderman stand in the light of mere special occupants, that is, they have no title jure suo to any present interest, but merely take the estate by devolution where the owner has made no disposition.

δ. A limitation in quasi entail of an estate pur autre vie has been commonly assimilated to an estate in fee-conditional; but the natures of the two estates are not to be confounded. The tenant of a fee-conditional can only aliene after issue born, but tenant in quasi entail pur autre vie may dispose absolutely as above without reference to the fact of there being issue or not (a).

Assignee bound by all equities.

Secondly. The assignee of an equity is bound by all the equities affecting it (b).

1. In order to understand the limits of the rule, it will be necessary before entering upon the cases to make a few preliminary remarks.

Application of rule to choses en action.

If A. be possessed of a legal chose in action (c), as if he be obligee of a bond, and assign it in equity for valuable consideration, here at the time of the assignment no equity existed in A.; and yet, as this case is confessedly within the operation of the rule, the maxim might be more accurately expressed by saying that the owner of an equity by assignment is bound by all the equities affecting what is assigned.

Exception as to conflicting equities of persons claiming under assignor.

Again, if A., having a debt due to him, or being entitled to an equitable interest, charges it in favour of B., the equity which remains in A. is the debt or equitable interest subject to the charge. If, therefore, A. afterwards assign the same subject matter to C., it might be thought that C. could take nothing more than the interest of A. subject to the charge. This, however, is not the case, for the priorities of B. and C. will be regulated by the better or inferior equities of the respective parties. The rule does not mean that the assignee of an equity shall be bound by all the equities affecting the assignor as between him and previous purchasers or incumbrancers under the assignor, but only by such as affect the assignor as between himself or his debtor and any persons not claiming under himself. The assignor can indisputably only give what he himself has, but as between two persons claiming through him a conflict of right may well arise. This will be better understood by the instances, exemplifying the rule, to which we now proceed.

(a) See the law upon this subject collected by Lord St. Leonards in Allen v. Allen, 1 Conn. & Laws. 427, 2 Dru. & War. 307; and see Edwards v. Champion, 1 Eq. Rep. 419; Betty v. Humphreys, 9 I. R. Eq. 332; Batteste v. Maunsell, 10 I. R. Eq. 97, 314; [Re Barber's Settled Estates, 18 Ch. D. 624; Blackhall v. Gibson, 2 L. R. Ir. 49.]

[(b) A right of set-off subsisting between the assignor and the person against whom the equity is enforceable, being a right not attaching to the equity, but personal to the parties, will not affect the assignee, Beresford v. Chambers, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 482; Burrough v. Moss, 10 B. & C. 558; Re Dublin and Rathcoole Railway Company, 1 L. R. Ir. 98.]

(c) Choses in action are now made assignable if notice in writing be given to the debtor or trustee, [but they are expressly made subject in the hands of the assignee to the subsisting equities.] See 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25, sub-s. 6.

Transfer of equitable mortgage.

2. A person taking an equitable mortgage, with notice of a prior charge, transfers his mortgage to another who has no notice of the prior charge. The assignee is bound by the equity with which the assignor was affected (a).

Transfer of equitable interest obtained by fraud.

3. A. mortgages or sells an equitable interest to B., which mortgage or sale is fraudulently obtained, and then B. transfers to C. Here C., whether he has notice of the fraud or not, takes subject to A.'s equity to have the mortgage or sale set aside (b).

Trustee or cestui que trust debtor to trust estate.

4. A trustee or executor has a beneficial interest, but is a debtor to the trust or executorship, and then assigns his beneficial interest to a stranger. The assignee cannot claim the beneficial interest without discharging the debt (c). And a similar equity attaches upon an assignee from a cestui que trust who is a debtor to the estate (d). [And where at the time of the assignment of a legacy, a suit by the legatee was pending to recall the probate, and the suit failed with costs to be paid by the legatee, the executor was allowed to set off the costs against the legacy, notwithstanding the assignment (e). But where assets have been set apart and appropriated by executors to meet a trust legacy, no part of the appropriated assets can be retained or impounded to satisfy a debt from the legatee to the general estate of the testator, for the right of the legatee or his assignee is against the holders of the appropriated assets in their character of trustees, while the liability of the legatee is to them in their capacity of executors (a).] And where the assignor is a trustee or executor it is immaterial whether the debt to the trust or executorship was contracted before or after the assignment of the beneficial interest (b), [or whether the beneficial interest of the trustee devolved on him directly under the trust instrument or was derived subsequently by purchase or otherwise (c).] But if the assignor did not become trustee or executor until after the date of the assignment there is no equity against the assignee in respect of a subsequently incurred debt (d). If the assignor be a cestui que trust, the trustee after notice cannot create any new charge or right of set-off, as between him and the assignor, so as to bind the assignee (e).

The right to consolidate mortgages being an equitable right, the assignee of a mortgage can have no better right to consolidate than his assignor (f).

Debtor and creditor.

5. A creditor transfers his debt to a person who has no notice that part of it has been discharged. The assignee is nevertheless bound by the state of the accounts at the time of the assignment (g); and when the assignee does not give notice to the debtor of the assignment so as to dissolve the relation of debtor and creditor between the original parties, the assignee is compelled to allow the payments to the creditor subsequent to the assignment (h).

Set-off as affecting assignee.

Cavendish v. Geaves.

6. It was decided in the case of Cavendish v. Geaves (a) that the assignee is liable to the same equities as his assignor, not merely in respect of the actual payments, but in regard to the right of set-off. In that case Sir John Romilly, M.R., laid down the following canons:—

a. If a customer borrow money from his bankers, and give a bond to secure it, and afterwards on the balance of his general banking account a balance is due to the customer from the same bankers, who are obligees of the bond, a right to set-off the balance against the money due on the bond will exist both at law and in equity.

β. If the firm be altered and the bond be assigned by the original obligees to the new firm, and notice of that assignment be given to the debtor (b), and if, after this, a balance be due to him from the new firm (the assignees of the bond), then no right of set-off exists at law, because the assignment of the chose in action would be inoperative at law, and the obligees of the bond and the debtors on the general account are different persons; but as, in equity, the persons entitled to the bond, and the debtors on the general account are the same persons, a right of set-off exists in equity, and the customer is entitled to set-off the balance due to him against the bond debt due from him.

γ. If the bond be assigned to strangers, and no notice of that assignment be given to the original debtor (the obligor of the bond), then his rights remain the same. Thus, if the assignment be made to the stranger before any alteration of the firm, then the right of set-off still remains at law, where the obligees of the bond and the debtors on the general account are the same persons, and in equity also, if the matter of account be brought into Chancery, as the assignees of the chose in action would be bound by the equities affecting their assignors.

δ. If notice of the assignment be given to the original debtor, no right of set-off exists in equity for the balance subsequently due by the bankers to the obligor; because the persons entitled to the bond are, as the obligor knew, different persons from the debtors to him on the general account, with whom he had continued to deal.

ε. If the assignment of the bond be made to the new firm, with notice to the obligor, the new firm would, if debtors on the general account, be liable to the same rights of set-off in equity as if they had been the obligees.

ζ. If after the alteration of the firm and after the assignment of the bond to the new firm, with notice to the debtor or obligor, the bond be assigned by the new firm to strangers, and no notice of that second assignment given to the obligor, then the rights of set-off still remain to him in equity as against the first assignees, of whose assignment he had notice, and the second assignees would in equity be bound by it; because the assignees of the bond take it subject to all the equities which affect the assignors.

Set-off recognized in equity previously to statutes of set-off.

7. It may be observed that the right of set-off, though unknown to the common law, was recognized in equity previously to the statutory enactments on the subject. Thus where A. and B. were mutually indebted by simple contract dealings, and B. died also indebted to others by simple contract and to one by specialty, in such a case, though it was contended that if A. could set-off his own debt, he was to that extent paid in full, in preference to the other simple contract creditors, and at the expense of the specialty creditor, yet a Court of equity presumed an agreement between A. and B. that such set-off should be had, and as B. in his lifetime could not have recovered from A. without the set-off, it held that the personal representative of B. was bound by the same equity (a).

Autre droit.

8. Recently the equity jurisdiction in respect of set-off has been chiefly, if not entirely, confined to cases where one or both of the cross demands is or are of an equitable kind (b). And it seems to be established that set-off will not be allowed even in equity where the mutual demands are between the parties in different rights; as if A. give a legacy to B., and appoint C. his executor, or executor and residuary legatee, B. may sue C. for the legacy, and C. cannot set-off a debt owing by B. to C. not as executor but in C.'s own right (c). [So where an executorship account was kept with bankers in the joint names of two executors, one of whom was the residuary legatee under the will, but the executorship account had never been wound up so as to make the executors mere trustees for the residuary legatee, on the failure of the bankers it was held that the residuary legatee was not entitled to have another account of his own with the bankers, which was overdrawn, set-off against the executorship account; for "the case could not be brought within the rules of equitable set-off or mutual credit, unless the residuary legatee was so much the person beneficially interested that a Court of equity without any terms or further inquiry would have obliged the other executor to transfer the account into the name of the residuary legatee alone" (a). But where, at the time of the failure of a bank, two accounts were standing in the name of a customer, one his private account, which was overdrawn, and the other an executorship account, and the executor, who was also residuary legatee, had assets in his hand independently of the balance at the bank more than sufficient to satisfy the pecuniary legacies and all other claims against the estate, it was held that he was entitled to set-off the one account against the other, on the ground that there was a clear legal right of set-off, and that there were no such equities affecting the monies standing to the executorship account as to prevent the customer from treating the balance as a fund to which he was beneficially as well as legally entitled (b). And an executor or administrator] may make such admissions in an action as to preclude himself from objecting to the set-off at the hearing (c).

ficate, so that his liability remained, and thus the legacy was owing to one set of persons, viz. the assignees, and the debt from another, viz. T. Boultbee. In Bell v. Bell, 17 Sim. 127, it does not appear whether the creditor had or not proved under the insolvency. If he had, the case could not be supported on the authority of Cherry v. Boultbee, but if he had not it must stand or fall with that case. It is believed that in a subsequent stage of the suit, V. C. Kindersley decided the other way. See also Stammers v. Elliott, 3 L. R. Ch. App. 195; Taylor v. Taylor, 20 L. R. (c) Jones v. Mossop, 9 Hare, 568, 576.

And an admission of assets for payment of the legacy will not be material, for the right of set-off exists independently of the amount of the assets (a). A legacy to one of the members of a firm may be set-off against a debt owing by the firm (b). But a legacy to a married woman, and assigned by her under Malins' Act, cannot be retained by the executor as against the assignee in discharge of a debt by the husband to the testator's estate (c).

[Debt statute-barred.]

[And although the remedy for the debt is barred by the statute of limitations, yet as the debt itself still subsists, the executor may deduct the amount of it from the legacy (d), as he is entitled to say that the legatee has so much of the assets already in his hands, and consequently is satisfied pro tanto (e); and in a recent case where residuary real and personal estate was given to trustees and executors upon trusts for conversion, payment of debts, and distribution of the proceeds, it was held that beneficiaries, from whom debts, statute-barred, were owing to the testator, were bound to bring the debts into account as against their shares of the proceeds of sale of the residuary real estate, as well as of the personal estate, and it was said that the principle to be deduced from the authorities was that a person who owes an estate money, that is, who is bound to increase the general mass of the estate by a contribution of his own, cannot claim an aliquot share given to him out of that mass without making the contribution which completes it (f). But the principle was held inapplicable as to freehold and leasehold properties specifically given to the beneficiaries (g).

[Debt due by testator and debt due to executor.]

A mortgagee who had a surplus in his hands after paying himself the mortgage debt was held not to be entitled, as against the executor of the mortgagor, to retain such surplus in satisfaction of an unsecured debt owing to him by the mortgagor (h); and North, J., in deciding so, said that there was ample authority

N. 1891, p. 132, per Kekewich, J.; but this decision is perhaps open to question, for it may be thought that as the executor is the only person who can sue for a debt not statute barred, so must he be the only person who can deduct money in respect of a debt which is statute barred; and that the fund to which the debtors were bound to contribute was the residuary personal estate of the testator, and not the proceeds of sale of the residuary real estate.]

for the proposition, that "there can be no set-off between a debt due by a testator and a debt accruing to his executor."

A right to damages against an assignor which does not ripen into a debt until after his assignment of a debt due to him, cannot be set-off against the debt due to the assignor and assigned by him (a); and a debt due from a liquidating debtor who has not obtained his discharge, cannot, during three years from the close of the liquidation, be set-off against a legacy bequeathed to him (b).

[Bankruptcy of debtor or creditor.]

A person who owes a debt to a bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy and has no right of set-off, cannot acquire such a right by taking an assignment of another debt due to another creditor of the bankrupt (c); nor can a creditor who has at the time of the debtor's bankruptcy no right to set-off, acquire such a right by any subsequent transaction (d). And where there are mutual dealings between a debtor and his creditors, the line as to set-off must, as a general rule and in the absence of special circumstances, be drawn at the date of the commencement of the bankruptcy (e).

[Purchaser completing bankrupt's contract without notice of bankruptcy.]

9. Where a bankrupt before adjudication contracted to sell leasehold property, and received a deposit in respect of the purchase-money, and after the adjudication but before the purchaser had any notice of any act of bankruptcy received the balance of the purchase-money from the purchaser, it was held that the trustee in bankruptcy could not be compelled to assign the lease to the purchaser except upon the terms of his paying him the purchase-money. The equity of the purchaser under the contract was to have the property conveyed to him upon payment of the purchase-money to the person to whom the property belonged; and it was the purchaser's misfortune if he paid the money to a person who had ceased to be the owner of the property (f).

[Trustees holding on separate trusts.]

10. Where a policy of assurance on the life of H. was taken in the names of trustees, and a settlement was executed binding the policy in the hands of the trustees, but it was expressly provided that nothing in the settlement should vest in the trustees any bonus, and H. obtained possession of and misappropriated part of the trust funds, it was held, in an action by the executrix of H. to recover bonuses, that the trustees held the bonuses under a resulting trust independently of the settlement, and could not retain them against the losses incurred in respect of the funds misappropriated by H., and that as the claim of the executrix was in respect of money which was never payable to H. personally, but only after his death, while the claim of the trustees was for money due from him in his lifetime, there was no right of set-off on the footing of mutual debts (a).

[Shares in companies.]

11. Shares in joint stock and other companies, being by various statutes made transferable at law, rest upon a different footing from ordinary choses in action (b), and a bonâ fide transferee for value of such shares who has completed his legal title to them by registration or otherwise, or, semble, who has fulfilled all necessary conditions to give him as between himself and the company "a present, absolute, unconditional right to have the transfer registered, before the company is informed of the existence of a better title" (c), will not be bound by the equities which affected the transferor (d), but until the transferee has thus acquired the full status of a shareholder (or, semble, its equivalent as above indicated), a prior equitable title will prevail against him; and of course even the full legal title will not avail if it is acquired with notice of a prior equitable title (e).

[Securities issued by companies.]

In the case of securities issued by companies the following rules seem to apply—

[(a) Hallett v. Hallett, 13 Ch. D. 232; and see Rees v. Watts, 11 Exch. 410; Newell v. National Provincial Bank of England, 1 C. P. D. 496.]

[(c) Société Générale de Paris v. Walker, 11 App. Cas. 20, 29, per Lord Selborne. In applying this principle the difficulty would seem to be to ascertain the point of time at which the transferee acquires the right indicated. By the Companies Act, 1862, s. 22, shares are "capable of being transferred in manner provided by the regulations of the company," so that in many cases the solution of the question will turn upon the construction of the company's articles of association, see Moore v. North Western Bank, (1891) 2 Ch. 599, 603, and cases there cited.]

(1) Where a company has power to issue securities, an irregularity in the issue cannot be set up against even the original holder if he has a right to presume omnia rite acta.

(2) If the security be legally transferable, such an irregularity and à fortiori any equity against the original holder cannot be asserted by the company against a bonâ fide transferee for value without notice.

(3) Nor can such an equity be set up against an equitable transferee, whether the security was transferable at law or not, if by the original conduct of the company in issuing the security, or by their subsequent dealing with the transferee he has a superior equity.

(4) Nor can such an equity be set up against an equitable transferee of a security, purporting on the face of it to be legally transferable, who has taken an equitable transfer bonâ fide and without notice from a transferor who by reason of notice of the irregularity could not have enforced the security. But in this case the transferee can only recover the amount actually advanced or given by him upon the transfer (a)]

Thirdly. Of Notice to the Trustee.

Notice.

1. As between assignor and assignee notice to the trustee is not necessary for the completion of an assignment (b), even though the assignment be voluntary (c). Nor is notice necessary for the purpose of making the assignment effectual as against subsequent volunteers (d), or as against persons claiming only a general equity under the assignor, such as a judgment creditor who obtains a charging order (e), or a garnishee order under Order xlv. (f), or equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver subject to existing incumbrances (a). But the omission of notice may be followed by very dangerous consequences by the operation of the reputed ownership clause under the bankrupt laws (b), or the acquisition of priority by subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers. And if the title be a derivative one, and not one that appears upon the face of the instrument creating the settlement, the trustee may, having neither express nor constructive notice, pay upon the footing of the original title, and in that case he cannot be made to pay over again to the assignee under the derivative title (c).

Priority of charge from priority of notice.

2. If the owner of an equitable interest in money or stock, or generally of any chose in action, assign it to A., who gives no notice of the transfer to the trustee or debtor, and then for valuable consideration assigns it over again to B., who having had no notice of the prior assignment when he advanced his money, gives notice of his own assignment to the trustee or debtor, in this case B. has priority over A. That a purchaser's notice will secure to him this advantage of priority, has been only settled in modern times. In Cooper v. Fynmore (d), Sir T. Plumer, V.C., decided that mere neglect to give notice would not postpone an incumbrancer, but that such laches ought to be shown as, in a Court of equity, would amount to fraud; but in Dearle v. Hall (e), and Loveridge v. Cooper (f), nine years after, his Honour, when Master of the Rolls, came to a contrary conclusion, and delivered a very elaborate argument that notice would gain priority. His Honour's judgments were affirmed on appeal (g), and the doctrine has been recognized in numerous subsequent cases (h). [And the same principle applies where the owner of the equitable interest has died after making an assignment, and his legal personal representative has made a subsequent assignment of the interest to a purchaser for value without notice of the prior assignment (a).] But the priority is only gained so far as regards the particular fund as to which notice is given, and if the assignment deals with two distinct funds, and the notice relates only to one of them, the priority gained by the notice will be confined to such fund (b).

As against trustees in bankruptcy.

3. This rule as to gaining priority by notice has been held to prevail not only as between two purchasers for value, but also as between a purchaser for value, and the assignees of a bankrupt neglecting to give notice; as, if A. being entitled to an equitable interest become bankrupt, and then assign it to a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of the bankruptcy, who serves notice on the trustee, the purchaser gains priority over the assignees who gave no notice (c). In a case, however, arising under the Bankruptcy Act of 1849, it was held that an assignment, after bankruptcy, to an assignee who gave notice to the trustee before the assignees in bankruptcy, could not prevail against the title of the latter (d); [and in a subsequent case (e) where the same view was adopted by the Court of Appeal, L. J. Baggallay held that the 141st section of the Act of 1849, which governed the case, applied equally to all bankruptcies under the Act of 1861.] The judgment of the Court was grounded on the strong negative words in the Act (f); but similar words occur in the original Bankrupt Act of James I. (g), and the principle of the former decisions was that, as regards equitable interests, the Act can pass nothing more than the fullest assignment which the bankrupt could have made, and that assignees by operation of law cannot in a Court of equity be viewed as under less obligation to give notice than a particular assignee, who, generally speaking, is more favoured. It would seem that the rule as to notice cannot be applied as against assignees in bankruptcy where the subject matter of assignment is a debt which was recoverable at law by the bankrupt, since in that case the legal title vests in the assignees.

[4. A solicitor having a lien for costs on a policy of insurance in his possession is under no obligation to give any notice of his lien to the insurance company, for the fact of his having possession of the document is notice to all the world of the only fact (viz. possession) necessary to raise the lien, and he has no right to convert the insurance office into trustees for him, but merely the negative right of retention of the document. A subsequent assignee of the policy who has given notice will accordingly not gain priority (a). [Solicitor's lien.]

5. As respects the shares of companies registered under the Companies Act, 1862, it is provided by the 30th section of that Act that no notice of any trust expressed, implied, or constructive shall be entered on the register, and accordingly it has been held that the principle of Dearle v. Hall (b), does not apply to such shares as between the company and a person having an equitable title (c). The course which the assignee of an equitable interest in such shares should adopt for his protection is to serve a notice in lieu of distringas on the company under 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 5, and Order xlvi. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, which will prevent any legal transfer being made of the shares without notice to the equitable assignee, and will give him an opportunity to obtain an order restraining the transfer (d). [Shares in companies.]

It must not, however, be assumed that the directors of a company may safely ignore a notice given to them, and allow shares, which are to their knowledge affected by equitable rights, to be fraudulently transferred so as to destroy such rights. For if knowledge of the fraud can be brought home to the directors they would be liable as parties to the fraud; and in the opinion of Cotton, L.J., "where directors are asked to register a transfer, which from circumstances in fact known to them at the time would be in violation of the rights of others, they cannot either safely to themselves or without disregard of their duty register the transfer without allowing time for inquiry and for the assertion of the equitable rights, if any, inconsistent with the claim to register the transfer;" and in the opinion of Lindley, L.J., "a refusal by directors or an omission on their part to pay attention to a notice given to them by a person having an equitable interest in shares, and requiring the directors not to register a transfer for such time as might be necessary to allow him to apply for a proper restraining order, would be primâ facie improper. Such conduct on the part of directors would be strong evidence of fraud" (a).

Thus where a shareholder deposited his share certificates as a security, and the depositees gave notice to the company, the notice was effectual to prevent the company from asserting a right of lien under their articles in respect of money which subsequently became due to them, as the depositees by giving the notice did not seek to affect the company with notice of a trust, but only in their capacity of traders with notice of the interest of the depositees (b); and where the directors had by the articles of the company powers in reference to the approval of transfers, and notice of an equitable title was given to them after a transfer was sent in, but before its approval, it was held that they were justified in refusing to proceed further with the transfer until the claimants should obtain the direction of the Court in an action which they at once instituted (c).]

Purchase by a trustee without notice of prior charge by the cestui que trust.

6. If a cestui que trust charge his interest, but gives no notice to the trustee, or gives notice to the trustee who dies so that the notice falls to the ground, and then a trustee subsequently appointed and having no notice of the charge, purchases from the cestui que trust, or takes a mortgage of his interest, such trustee stands in the position of an assignee, who, having no notice of the prior charge and giving notice of his own charge, gains a priority (d).

Cautions in assignment of equitable interests.

7. The purchaser of an equitable interest in choses in action should, for his security, never dispense with the two following precautions: First, he should make inquiries of the trustee or debtor whether the equity or claim of the vendor has been made the subject of any prior incumbrance.

[Trustee not bound to answer inquiries.]

[As regards the trustee, however, it is to be noted that he is under no equitable obligation to answer inquiries made by a person about to deal with his cestui que trust. Such a person can have no greater rights than the cestui que trust himself, and though it is the duty of a trustee to give his cestui que trust on demand information with respect to the mode in which the fund has been dealt with, and where it is, yet it is no part of his duty to tell his cestui que trust what incumbrancers he has created, nor which of his incumbrancers have given notice of their respective rights. If the trustee thinks fit to answer the inquiry, he is not bound to do more than give an honest answer, that is to say, to do more than answer to the best of his actual knowledge and belief. He may, no doubt, undertake greater responsibility; he may bind himself by a warranty, or he may so express himself as to be estopped from afterwards denying the truth of what he has said; but unless he does one or the other he cannot, consistently with the decision of the House of Lords in Derry v. Peek (a), if he answers honestly, expose himself to liability (b).

[Nor to do more than answer honestly.]

Secondly, upon the execution of the assignment, the purchaser should himself give notice of his own equitable title to the trustee or debtor, by means of which he will gain precedence of all prior incumbrancers who have not been equally diligent, and will prevent the postponement of himself to subsequent incumbrancers more diligent than himself; and of course the trustee or debtor will be personally responsible, if, after such notice, he part with the fund to any person not having a prior claim (c).

8. Between choses in action and real estate there is an observable distinction. As regards the former the purchaser knows the legal title is outstanding in a third person, and is therefore bound to give notice of his incumbrance; but in lands it often happens that the vendor professes to have the legal ownership in himself, whereas it afterwards appears that it was really vested in some stranger. If the purchaser be not cognizant of the outstanding legal estate, he cannot give notice of his interest, and therefore cannot be held to have forfeited his right by having neglected a precaution that was impossible. On the other hand, to hold that the doctrine of notice does not apply at all to real estate, renders any dealings with equitable interests therein needlessly dangerous. Thus A. is entitled to an equitable interest, of which the legal estate is in B. upon trusts requiring B. to retain possession of the title-deeds, and not to part with the legal estate. A. conveys his interest to C., who makes no inquiries about incumbrances, and gives no notice to the trustee; A. afterwards, fraudulently concealing the previous assurance, conveys the same interest to D., who makes inquiries of the trustee respecting incumbrances, and gives him notice of his own charge. There seems no sound reason for postponing D. who has taken these precautions to C., who has merely priority in point of time. It is, however, now settled that the incumbrances in such a case are not governed by the law of notice, but rank primâ facie, and in the absence of other controlling equities, in order of date (a).

F. & J. 518), fraud on the part of the trustee being in that case negatived, was inconsistent with and therefore overruled by Derry v. Peek.]

Rule as to notice applicable to money charged on land.

[Secus, a mortgage debt.]

However, the rule as to notice, though not applicable to estates in land, whether freehold or leasehold, applies when the subject matter is a sum of money to arise from a trust for sale of land (b), or which is charged upon land (c). [But the case of money charged on land must be distinguished from that of a mortgage debt where the assignees of the debt acquire equitable estates in the mortgaged land; thus where a solicitor held a mortgage of land in his own name as trustee for a client, and deposited the mortgage deed by way of equitable security, the depositees gained no priority over the cestui que trust by giving notice to the mortgagors (d).]

Second incumbrancer giving notice but making no enquiries.

9. A second incumbrancer who advances his money without enquiry as to the existence of previous charges, but afterwards, and before any notice given by the first incumbrancer, gives notice of his own security, obtains thereby priority (e). The reason is, that, in the case supposed, non-enquiry by the second incumbrancer is immaterial, since the answer to any enquiry would have been that there were no prior charges, whereas the absence of notice by the first incumbrancer works an ex post facto injury to the second, who, if informed at the time of giving his own notice of the existence of the earlier charge, would immediately have exerted himself to obtain repayment of his money (a).

Notice to one of several co-trustees.

10. If notice be given to one of several co-trustees, it is sufficient as against all subsequent incumbrancers during the lifetime of that trustee; for the subsequent incumbrancer should have made enquiry of all the trustees, and if he had done so he would have come to a knowledge of the prior charge, so that here non-enquiry is material (b).

Death of the single trustee to whom notice was given.

11. But if a prior incumbrancer content himself with giving notice to one of the trustees, and that trustee dies, and a second incumbrancer gives notice of his assignment, then, as the first incumbrancer did not do his utmost to guard against the fraud, and the second incumbrancer had no means in his power of detecting the fraud, the loss will fall on the person who had so far occasioned that he might have prevented it (c).

Enquiry by incoming trustees of outgoing trustees.

12. If there be two trustees, and notice be given to both of them, and then one dies and the other retires, and new trustees are appointed in the place of both, and the new trustees having no notice of the charge distribute the fund, the incumbrancer cannot hold the new trustees liable as for a misapplication on the ground that, when appointed, they ought to have enquired of the retiring trustee whether he had notice of any charge in which case it would have come to their knowledge (d).

13. As the rule requiring notice is not only to prevent the trustees from parting with the fund, but also and more particularly to enable future purchasers to ascertain prior incumbrances, it has been held that where the assignor, the party beneficially interested, is also one of the trustees, the notice which he has is not sufficient, as it is so strongly his interest to suppress the assignment. But if the assignee be one of the trustees, the notice which he has is sufficient, for he will of course, for his own protection, take care to apprise future incumbrancers of the assignment to himself (a).

[A trustee having himself a charge upon the trust fund is not, in the absence of enquiry, bound to communicate that charge to a person giving him notice of a subsequent charge (b); but a trustee concealing his own prior charge would be narrowly watched by the Court, and it is conceived that if by his conduct he had led the subsequent incumbrancer to believe the fund to be unincumbered, he would lose his priority.]

Notice to all the trustees, and all dying.

14. As an incumbrancer may, by giving notice to one trustee, complete his title for the time, and yet may afterwards by the death of the trustee be displaced; so, if notice be sent to all the trustees, and they all die, a second incumbrancer, who gives notice to the succeeding trustees, will gain priority. Notice properly given at the time does not make an absolute title, but one liable to be defeated by an alteration of circumstances (c). An incumbrancer, therefore, would do well not only to give notice to all the trustees in the first instance, but to watch as well as he can the changes in the state of the trust, and to take care, by repeating his notice, that there is never a set of trustees of whom there is not at least one who has notice of his charge.

Time of giving notice.

15. Notice of an equitable incumbrance ought to be given to the trustees as early as possible, but if delayed for any length of time, it will be equally efficacious, provided no notice of any other charge has been served in the interval (d). Therefore, if the owner of an equitable interest, but who has given no notice to the trustees, contract for the sale of it, the purchaser cannot object to the title on the ground of no notice having been given, unless he can show some intermediate incumbrance; but it is the vendor's duty, by pointing out who have been the trustees from time to time, to furnish full means to the purchaser of enquiring whether or no any such charge has been created (e).

but who may and probably will become such, confers no right to priority. Thus, where A. had a first charge, and B. the second charge, on the proceeds to arise from the sale of an officer's commission; and B. first, and then A., gave notice of their respective charges to the army agent of the regiment; but both notices preceded the time when the army agent first actually assumed the character of trustee; it was held that A. retained his priority (a). [Where an officer retires under "The Regulation of the Forces Act, 1871" (b), the amount payable on his retirement, though previously lodged with the army agents and entered in their books under the officer's name, cannot be affected by notice of an incumbrance created by him until after his retirement is gazetted (c). But as soon as the retirement is gazetted, the amount lodged becomes the money of the retiring officer in the hands of the army agents, and is liable to set-off in respect of any monies owing by the officer to the army agents (d).] [Charge on commission of officer in army.]

17. These cases do not disturb the great principle that an equitable assignment is complete, if notice be given to the person by whom payment of the assigned debt is to be made, whether that person be himself liable, or is merely charged with the duty of making the payment; and it is not material whether the right to receive the money and the consequent obligation to pay is at the time when the notice is given absolute or conditional, so long as the person who receives the notice is himself bound by some contract or obligation at the time when notice reaches him to receive and pay over, or to pay over if he has previously received, the fund out of which the debt is to be satisfied. The cases on the sales of commissions turn upon the fact that the notice was given to a mere possible agent before he was an actual agent,—before the time when he was in any sense liable to make payment, neither being himself a debtor nor at that time charged with the duty of paying the money in question (e). [Cases as to such charges no exception from general rule.]

18. The doctrine of priority by notice applies only in favour of purchasers; for as between two volunteers notice is not Notice as between volunteers.

Simultaneous notices.

19. Where two or more notices are served simultaneously, the incumbrances rank according to their respective dates (b).

To whom notice should be given.

20. The notice, written or unwritten (c), but better written, should be given to the trustees themselves, [and notice to the solicitors of the trustees will be of no effect unless the solicitors are expressly or impliedly authorized to receive such notices (d);] and where there are two settlements, one original and the other derivative, the notice should be given to the trustees of the original settlement who hold the property (e). Where notice to one trustee would be sufficient, it may be given to one who is not the acting trustee, the law recognizing no distinction between an acting and a passive trustee (f). Where the trust fund consists of shares in a company, the notice may be sent to the secretary (g); but notice to A., a director, and B., the actuary, was in one case considered sufficient (h); and, in another, notice to A., one of the directors, and B., an auditor (i); and in another verbal notice, not casually, but in the way of business, to the board of directors (j). [But the fact that the secretary or any other officer of the company had casual knowledge, acquired in his individual capacity and not whilst engaged in transacting the business of the company, of any matter, will not affect the company with notice of it (k).] It was at one time held that, as notice to a partner was notice to the partnership, if by the constitution of an assurance office the person insuring became a partner, the assignment of a policy by him was ipso facto notice of it to the society (a); but this was going very far, as it was the assignor's interest to suppress the assignment, and the point has since been ruled the other way (b). The negotiation for the assignment through a solicitor, who happens to be the local agent of the insurance office, is not notice to the office (c). Incidental mention of the charge to a clerk of the company, though in the office of business, will not be constructive notice to the company itself (d); and the fact that the solicitor to the trustees was a creditor under an insolvency, and must have known of the insolvency, was no notice of it to the trustees (e). [And in general notice through an agent will not be imputed where the circumstances are such as to raise a conclusive presumption that he would not communicate the fact to his principal (f).] [Solicitor, agent, &c.]

21. If the notice be by parol it must be clear and distinct (g), [and sufficient to bring to the mind of the trustee an intelligent apprehension of the nature of the dealing with the trust property, so that he may regulate his conduct by it in the execution of the trust (h).] Notice must be clear.

22. It was held by Lord Romilly, M.R., that the notice should be given by or on behalf of the assignee himself, and that notice to a trustee proceeding from a mere stranger would be insufficient (i), but the case on appeal was reversed on the ground that the trustee had received such notice as he would or should have acted upon (j). By whom notice should be given.

23. Where the trustee himself is the assignee or incumbrancer, the transaction necessarily carries notice along with it, and no Where trustee is incumbrancer.

other notice is necessary (a). So in the case of a Joint Stock Bank, the lien of the bank under the deed of settlement for a debt owing from one of its members, does not require any further notice than that which the bank, the only trustee, already possesses from the relative position of the parties (b).

Form of the notice.

24. The notice, if it go into details at all, should set forth the entire amount of the assignee's claim, for it has been held that the trustee is affected by notice only of the amount stated upon the face of the memorandum served, and not by notice of all the contents of the instrument to which the memorandum refers (c). But notice of a charge in general terms, without expressing any amount in particular, will be sufficient (d); and if there be no doubt as to the fund intended, a mistake in the description will not vitiate the notice as against a subsequent purchaser, but the Court will not extend the security beyond the amount of the sum mentioned in the notice as intended to be charged (e); [and the notice will not be invalidated by an error in an immaterial point, such as the date of the deed of which notice is given (f).]

Case of the fund being in Court.

25. Where the fund is in Court the step equivalent to notice is the obtaining of a stop-order to restrain the transfer of the fund, and as between two assignees the one who first gets a stop-order will have priority (g); [though the other may have given prior notice to the trustees of the settlement (h); and] though the first stop-order was upon the general fund, and the second stop-order was the first upon the share when carried over to the separate account of the debtor and his incumbrancers (i); and trustees in bankruptcy who claim under the order and disposition clause in the Bankruptcy Act will lose the benefit of the transfer to them, if an assignee for value give notice to the Court of his incumbrance before any notice is given of the assignment under the bankruptcy (j); but the incumbrancer who obtains the first stop-order will not prevail over an incumbrancer who gave the regular notice to the representative of the trust before the money was paid into Court (a); [nor will he prevail over a prior incumbrancer of whose incumbrance he had notice at the time of making his advance (b); but notice of a prior incumbrance acquired after the date of the advance but before the stop-order is obtained, will not prejudice the right to priority (c).] And even after the money has been paid into Court, although the legal title is in the Paymaster-General (d), the trustees remain such for the purposes of notice, and priority may be gained by serving notice upon the trustees (e).

[But where part of the trust estate was in Court and part in the hands of the trustees, and a mortgagee gave notice to the trustees but did not obtain a stop-order, and a subsequent incumbrancer both gave notice and obtained a stop-order, the first mortgagee had priority as to the funds in the hands of the trustees, and the subsequent mortgagee had priority as to the fund in Court (f).]

Notice to trustee, where fund in Court and neither assignee obtains a stop-order, confers priority.

26. Should an incumbrancer give notice to the trustees, but neglect to obtain a stop-order, he will still take precedence of a prior incumbrancer, who has neither obtained an order nor given notice, or who had given notice to only one of several trustees, and that trustee had died before the time of the second incumbrance. It is true the second incumbrancer did not adopt every precaution, but he resorted to one which the prior incumbrancer neglected to the detriment of the second incumbrancer, while the first assignee either sent no notice, or one which, by the death of the trustee before the time of the second incumbrance, had become equivalent to no notice (g).

Precaution where the fund is in Court.

27. If the trust fund be in Court, the following course should be adopted. The intended assignee should enquire at the Paymaster-General's and search at the entering seat in the Registrar's offices whether any stop-order has been made to restrain the transfer of the fund, and also enquire of the trustees, whether notice has been given of any prior incumbrance; and, on the completion of his own assignment, he should give notice to the trustees personally, and obtain a stop-order himself, and leave it at the Paymaster-General's office to be noted in the Paymaster's books (a). The enquiry at the Paymaster-General's or search at the Registrar's offices is merely for the purchaser's greater satisfaction, and makes no part of his own title, for neither the Paymaster-General nor the Registrar is the trustee, but the Court is the trustee. The stop-order is the effective step, and whether or not previous enquiry or search was made at the offices, is immaterial (b).

Case where there is no trustee.

28. It may happen that at the time of the incumbrance there is no representative of the trust on whom notice can be served, as if A. be trustee of stock for B., and A. dies intestate, or his executor declines to act. In such a case it has been held, that an incumbrancer gains priority by taking all the precautions that under the circumstances are practicable, as if he serves a [notice in lieu of] distringas on the Bank where the stock is standing (c).

Purchaser with notice.

29. A purchaser who gives notice, or obtains a stop-order, can gain no priority over an incumbrance of which he has notice himself, at the time of his own purchase (d).

Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 6.

30. By 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25, sub-s. 6, any absolute assignment of any debt or legal chose in action by writing under the hand of the assignor (not purporting to be by way of charge only) (e) upon express notice in writing being given to the legal holder of the chose in action, is to be effectual in law to pass the legal right from the date of such notice, but subject to all the equities which would have been entitled to priority had the Act not passed.

[An assignment may be absolute within this enactment

[(a) The Registrar will pass and enter the order, but it is the duty of the assignee to leave it with the Paymaster; and generally as to the practice respecting stop-orders see Rules of the Supreme Court, Ord. 46, RR. 12 & 13; and Seton on Judgments, 5th ed., chap. xxviii. s. 1.]

although a trust is thereby created, in respect of the proceeds of the debt or chose in action, in favour of the assignor, as in the case of a deed by creditors assigning their debts to a person who is to sue to recover the debts and pay the creditors proportionately out of the money recovered (a).

31. The notice of assignment of a policy of assurance which is required to be given by "The Policies of Assurance Act, 1867" (30 & 31 Vict. c. 144) to enable the assignee to sue, is not requisite to complete the title of the assignee as against a subsequent assignee; and accordingly a second incumbrancer who advanced his money with notice of a prior incumbrance, does not, by giving the statutory notice, gain priority over the prior incumbrancer who has neglected to give the notice (b).] [Policy of assurance.]

1. "The rule," observed V. C. Kindersley (c), "is sometimes expressed in this form:—'As between persons having only equitable interests, qui prior est tempore potior est jure.' This is an incorrect statement of it; for not only is it not universally true, as between persons having only equitable interests, but it is not universally true even where their equitable interests are of precisely the same nature, and in that respect precisely equal, as in the common case of two successive assignments for valuable consideration of a reversionary interest in stock standing in the names of trustees, where the second assignee has given notice, and the first has omitted it. Another form of stating the rule is this:—'As between persons having only equitable interests, if their equities are equal, qui prior est tempore potior est jure.' But even this enunciation of the rule (when accurately considered) seems to involve a contradiction. For when we talk of two persons having equal or unequal equities, in what sense do we use the word 'equity'? For example, when we say that A. has a better equity than B., it means only that, according to those principles of right and justice, which a Court of equity recognizes and acts upon, it will prefer A. to B., and will interfere to enforce the rights of A. as against B. And therefore it is impossible (strictly speaking) that two persons should have equal equities, except in a case in which the Court of equity General rule.

would altogether refuse to lend its assistance to either party as against the other. To lay down the rule, therefore, with perfect accuracy, I think it should be stated in some such form as this:—'As between persons having only equitable interests, if their equities are in all other respects equal (a), priority of time gives the better equity; or qui prior est tempore potior est jure.'" "Questions of priority between equitable incumbrances," said L. J. Turner, "are in general governed by the rule qui prior est tempore potior est jure. The rule, as I conceive, is founded on this principle, that the creation or declaration of a trust vests an estate in the person in whose favour the trust is created or declared. Where, therefore, it is sought to postpone an equitable title created by declaration of trust, there is an estate or interest to be displaced. No doubt there may be cases so strong as to justify this being done, but there can be as little doubt that a strong case must be required to justify it" (b).

All circumstances to be considered.

2. For ascertaining priorities, the Court directs its attention to the nature and condition of the conflicting equitable interests, the circumstances and manner of their acquisition, and the whole conduct of the respective parties: in short, all the circumstances of the case (c). The following instances will suffice for illustration.

Vendor's lien.

3. A vendor has an equitable lien for his purchase-money; but if he deliver the deed of conveyance with a receipt for the purchase-money indorsed and signed, and the purchaser then makes an equitable mortgage of the property by deposit, the equity of the mortgagee, who was deceived by the deed, is better than that of the vendor, who was careless enough to sign the receipt without payment of the money (d). But if the mortgagee have notice of the lien, he of course cannot complain, and is bound by it (e).

[Receipt by vendor.]

[Receipt signed by mortgagor.]

[And the same principle applies as between a mortgagor who has signed a receipt in full for the mortgage money, part of which remains unpaid, and a transferee of the mortgage who has taken his transfer on the faith of the receipt in full and without notice that part of the mortgage money had not been paid (f).]

(e) Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 349.

[(f) Bickerton v. Walker, 31 Ch. Div. 154.]

Possession of title deeds.

4. The possession of the title deeds is a circumstance which may give the holder a better equity, provided they have come into his possession from want of due activity on the part of the prior incumbrancer, or through some neglect or default of such incumbrancer (a). But the onus lies on the holder to establish a case of blamable conduct against the first incumbrancer (b); and the second incumbrancer gains no priority if the deeds get into his hands by an accident or by the misconduct of a stranger (c), or the wrongful act of the solicitor of the first incumbrancer (d), for it is not the doctrine of the Court that in the case of mere equitable interests priority can be obtained through the medium of a breach of trust or duty (e). [And an equitable incumbrancer, by getting possession of the title deeds without any default on the part of a person who has previously contracted to purchase the property, does not gain priority over him, but takes subject to his contract (f).]

[What conduct as to title deeds will postpone mortgagee.]

[The whole question as to what conduct in relation to the title deeds on the part of a mortgagee who has the legal estate, is sufficient to postpone such mortgagee to a subsequent equitable mortgagee who has obtained the title deeds without knowledge of the legal mortgage, has been fully discussed by the Court of Appeal (Cotton, Bowen and Fry, L.JJ.) in a recent case (g); in which the Court, after reviewing and classifying the earlier cases, arrived at the following conclusions:—

"(1) That the Court will postpone the prior legal estate to a subsequent equitable estate—(A), where the owner of the legal estate has assisted in or connived at the fraud which has led to the creation of a subsequent equitable estate, without notice of the prior legal estate; of which assistance or connivance, the omission to use ordinary care in inquiry after or keeping title deeds may be, and in some cases has been, held to be sufficient evidence, where such conduct cannot be otherwise explained; (B), where the owner of the legal estate has constituted the mortgagor his agent with authority to raise money, and the estate thus created has, by the fraud or misconduct of the agent, been represented as being the first estate.

But (2) that the Court will not postpone the prior legal estate to the subsequent equitable estate on the ground of any mere carelessness or want of prudence on the part of the legal owner" (a). And in a recent case it was held by Kay, J., in a carefully reasoned judgment, that this principle applies equally whether the prior estate is legal or equitable, and that in the case of innocent persons taking equitable mortgages from a fraudulent mortgagor, the negligence required to induce the Court to postpone the prior incumbrancer must be gross, i.e. so great as to make him responsible for the fraud committed on the subsequent incumbrancer (b).

[Title of cestui que trust prevails in absence of negligence.]

5. If a trustee in whose name shares in a company are standing borrows money for his own purposes and deposits the certificates as a security for his debt, the equitable title of the mortgagee will not, in the absence of negligence on the part of the cestui que trust, prevail against the prior equitable title of the cestui que trust (c). And a cestui que trust is entitled to place reliance upon his trustee, and is not guilty of negligence if, in the absence of anything to raise suspicion, he omit to inquire whether a fraud has been committed upon him by the trustee (d), and as "any person is entitled to vest property in another as trustee for himself, and to leave the title deeds in the hands of the trustee" (e), where the purchaser of an equity of redemption for his own convenience took the assignment in the name of a confidential clerk, ostensibly as absolute owner, but in fact as trustee, and allowed the assignment to remain in his custody, and the clerk availed himself of possession of the deed to effect an equitable charge, it was held that there was no such negligence as would deprive the cestui que trust of his prior equitable title (a).

6. Where trust funds were invested in the names of two trustees in the shares of a bank, the articles of which provided that the bank should have a paramount charge on the shares held by more persons than one in respect of all monies owing to the bank from all or any of the holders thereof, alone or jointly with any other person, it was held that the bank had a lien on the shares for a debt owing by a firm in which one of the trustees was a partner, which must prevail over the title of the cestuis que trust (b).] [Lien of banking company on shares.]

7. A party, having a secret equity, who stands by and permits the apparent owner to deal with others, as if he were the absolute owner and as if there were no such secret equity, shall not be permitted to assert such secret equity against a title founded upon such apparent ownership (c). A fortiori if the person having the secret equity be party to a document which assumes that there is no such equity, or on having notice of a purchaser's claim do not give information of the equity, so as to enable him to proceed against the person by whom he has been deceived (d). ["It is a principle of natural equity which must be universally applicable, that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate, and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title, unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice, or something which amounts to constructive notice, of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an inquiry that, if prosecuted, would have led to a discovery of it" (e).] Secret equity.

Canons laid down in Thornton v. Ramsden.

8. The doctrines of the Court on this subject were much discussed in the case of Thornton v. Ramsden (a), and the following canons were laid down by the highest authorities in the House of Lords on appeal:—

a. If a stranger begins to build on land, supposing it to be his own, and the real owner, perceiving his mistake, abstains from setting him right, and leaves him to persevere in his error, a Court of equity will not afterwards allow the real owner to assert his title to the land.

b. But if a stranger builds on land knowing it to be the property of another, equity will not prevent the real owner from afterwards claiming the land, with the benefit of all the expenditure upon it (b).

c. If a tenant builds on his landlord's land, he does not, in the absence of special circumstances, acquire any right to prevent the landlord from taking possession of the land and buildings when the tenancy has determined.

d. If the tenant, being a mere tenant at will, builds on the land in the belief that he thereby acquires a title afterwards to claim a lease of the land, and the landlord allows him so to build, knowing that he is acting in that belief, and does not interfere to correct the error, (semble) equity will interfere to compel the grant of a lease.

e. If a man, under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land, or under an expectation, created or encouraged by the landlord that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land with the consent of the landlord, and upon the faith of such promise or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord, and, without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation (c).

[Willmott v. Barber.]

[9. The ground upon which relief is given in these cases is fraud in the possessor of the legal right, and the elements necessary to constitute fraud of this description were enumerated by Fry, J., in a recent case (d), as follows:—

"(1) The plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights.

(2) The plaintiff must have expended some money, or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the defendant's land) on the faith of his mistaken belief.

(3) The defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff.

(4) The defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the plaintiff's mistaken belief of his rights (a).

(5) The defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must have encouraged the plaintiff in his expenditure of money, or in the other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right."]

Estates subject to common charge.

10. The question who has the better equity frequently arises where estates, subject to a common charge, become vested in different owners, and each assignee endeavours to throw the charge upon the other.

Express agreement to exonerate from a judgment.

11. It has been held in Ireland that if there be an express agreement that one estate shall exonerate another from a judgment, a purchaser with notice of the agreement will be bound by it (b). And a covenant that the one estate is free from incumbrances or for quiet enjoyment will amount to such an agreement (c).

Judgments as between two purchasers.

12. It has been further decided in Ireland that where A., the conusor of a judgment, settles an estate for valuable consideration, and afterwards sells an unsettled estate, the purchaser of the latter cannot have the judgment raised by a contribution from both estates (d); and even where a purchaser was not seeking relief against another purchaser, but the plaintiff was the judgment creditor seeking to have his debt raised, it was held that the whole onus must be borne by the subsequent purchaser (e); and the circumstance that the conveyance to the first purchaser contained a covenant against incumbrances or for quiet enjoyment does not appear, where it occurred, to have been the material ground on which the decision was rested (f). Neither did the Court distinguish the case where the subsequent purchaser had no notice of the prior charge. Indeed, in the leading case, the subsequent purchaser on whom the onus was thrown was apparently a purchaser without notice (a).

As between settled and unsettled estates.

13. It has been further ruled in Ireland that where the conusor of a judgment settles an estate with a covenant against incumbrances, the purchasers under the settlement can throw the judgments on the unsettled estates as against subsequent judgment creditors of the settlor, who had merely a general and roving lien, and did not stand in the place of specific purchasers (b), and even where the settlement was voluntary and without a covenant against incumbrances, it was ruled by the M. R. in Ireland that the owners of other estates devised by the settlor had no equity for contribution from the settled estates to pay off a judgment to which both settled and unsettled estates were subject at the date of the settlement (c). But on appeal the decision was reversed (d).

[So where estates were expressed to be settled for value, subject to charges amounting to 65,000*l.*, with a covenant against incumbrances except "the charges now existing thereon, amounting to the said sum of 65,000*l.*," and a power was reserved of further charging the property to a specific amount, which power was subsequently exercised, but the charges upon the estates at the time of the settlement in fact far exceeded 65,000*l.*, it was held that the purchasers under the settlement were entitled to be recouped the difference between the charges actually subsisting and the 65,000*l.*, in priority to the mortgagees under the power (e).]

Law in England.

14. These principles, which have been acted upon in Ireland, will no doubt be followed to some extent in England. If, for instance, A., possessing Blackacre and Whiteacre [which are subject to a common incumbrance], mortgages Blackacre to B., and covenants that it is free from incumbrances, this is a contract between A. and B., and every purchaser of Whiteacre with notice of the incumbrance and of the contract must be bound by the contract.

Rule in equity in absence of contract.

15. But if there be no express contract between A. and B., then the right of B. depends on a rule of equity, and as against A.

himself it is clear that B. can insist on throwing the whole incumbrance on Whiteacre (a); and so as against any person claiming a general and roving lien only as a judgment creditor of A. (b); and even if A. afterward sell Whiteacre to C., who has notice of the incumbrance and of the mortgage, there is no ground for saying that B. has not the like equity as against C., but if C. have no notice of the incumbrance or no notice of the mortgage, the Court will probably refuse to enforce the rule against him. At least Lord St. Leonards seems to have thought that the decisions in Ireland do not affect innocent purchasers—i.e. purchasers for valuable consideration without notice (c). And in the case of Strong v. Hawkes (d), L. J. Turner expressed a doubt whether the cases in Ireland had not gone too far.

Barnes v. Racster.

16. In Barnes v. Racster (e) a person mortgaged Foxhall to A., and then to B., and then Foxhall and No. 32 to A., and then Foxhall and No. 32 to C. All parties had notice of the prior transactions. It was held that B. could not compel A. to pay himself exclusively out of No. 32, so as to leave B. the first incumbrancer on Foxhall, but C. was entitled to have the charges thrown proportionately upon Foxall and No. 32.

Purchaser with notice.

17. A purchaser of an equitable interest specifically has a higher equity than a person claiming under a general and roving charge as a judgment, and therefore the purchaser of such an equitable interest without notice of an equitable judgment was properly held not to be bound by it (f).

[Rule where specific charge on one property and general lien on another.]

[18. If there be a specific charge on one property to secure a sum of money, and there be a general lien on other property, (as for instance a banker's lien on his customer's securities in his hands), to secure the same sum, the property comprised in the specific charge must be primarily resorted to in exoneration of the property subject to the general lien (g).

[Where goods wrongfully pledged by a firm.]

SECTION II.

OF TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION.

How trusts of freeholds to be devised.

1. An equitable interest in lands is transmissible by devise (b). Indeed the old use, which preceded the trust, was devisable by parol previously to the Statute of Wills, 32 H. 8. c. 15 (c); but after that Act the trust, by analogy to legal estates, became devisable only by will in writing.

Statute of Frauds.

2. The Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3, followed, which required a devise of "lands" to be by a will, signed by the testator in the presence of and attested by three witnesses. This enactment was applied by the Courts to a devise of the equitable interest in lands. Otherwise a door would have been opened to all the mischiefs and inconveniences the Statute was intended to prevent (d). Whether trusts were within the letter of the Act, or equity brought them under its operation by analogy, it is not easy to determine (e); but undoubtedly the word "lands" has often been extended to include trusts (f), and, if so, there seems to be little reason why trusts should not have fallen within the express terms of the Statute.

Trusts of copyholds.

3. Copyholds, strictly speaking, are not at common law a devisable interest. A surrender is made to the use of the will, and the gift contained in the will operates as a declaration of the use. The devisee does not come in by the will, but by the surrender and the will taken together, as if the name had been inserted in the surrender itself (g). Thus copyholds at law were out of the Statute of Frauds, and might have been devised by a will neither signed nor attested; and as equity followed the law the trust of a copyhold was devisable in the same manner (h).

And the equitable interest might always have been passed by will, though not preceded by a surrender, which previously to 55 G. 3. c. 192, was required to pass the legal estate (a).

Where no custom to devise the legal estate of copyholds.

4. As equitable interests in copyholds were regulated by analogy to the custom affecting the legal estate, one might have supposed, that where the legal estate could not be devised, the equitable estate in like manner must have been left to descend. However, it was decided by the Court, that even assuming the absence of any power to devise the legal estate (b), the owner of the equitable estate could pass by will (c). Whether the will must have been executed according to the Statute of Frauds, or whether any instrument sufficient for declaring the uses on a surrender would have been enough, does not sufficiently appear. But in a case of customary freeholds of which the legal estate could not be devised (and customary freeholds are now regarded as copyholds (d), Lord Hardwicke held that the reason why the equitable interest in copyholds could be devised by an unattested will, was because the legal estate of copyholds could be devised by an unattested will, and that as, in the case of customary freeholds before him, the legal estate could not be devised, the equitable interest could only pass by a will executed according to the Statute of Frauds (e). And à fortiori where a customary freehold, of which the legal estate was not devisable, was vested in a trustee upon such trusts as the cestui que trust should by will "to be by him legally executed" appoint, it was held that the equitable interest could not be devised by a will not executed according to the Statute of Frauds (f).

Of customary freeholds.

5. Now by the Wills Act (g), as to wills made on or after 1*st January*, 1838, property, of whatever description, whether real or personal, freehold or copyhold, legal or equitable, may be devised or bequeathed by a will in writing, signed by the

The whole argument in this case assumes that the will as opposed to the codicil was executed according to the Statute of Frauds, and yet the report states that the will was in writing, "but not attested according to the Statute of Frauds." The Reg. Lib. does not state whether the will was or not so executed. Amb. Blunt's edit.

testator in the presence of and attested by two witnesses, and by such a will only.

Revocation of wills by alteration of estate.

6. If, before this Act, a testator seised of an equitable estate in fee had devised it, and then disturbed the equitable seisin by executing a conveyance and taking back a new estate in the same property, the will was revoked in like manner as if the estate had been legal (a). But if a testator had devised an equitable estate and afterwards taken a conveyance so as merely to clothe the equitable estate with the legal, or was party to a conveyance for merely changing the trustees, such conveyances were not a revocation of the prior will (b). Now by the late Wills Act, a subsequent disturbance of the seisin, either at law or in equity, does not revoke the will (c).

SECTION III.

OF SEISIN AND DISSEISIN.

Equitable seisin.

1. THE term seisin is properly applicable to legal estates; but a Court of equity regards actual receipt of the rents and profits under the equitable title as equivalent to seisin at law, and has often adjudicated upon the rights of parties with reference to that circumstance.

Casborne v. Scarfe.

Thus, in Casborne v. Scarfe (d), it was disputed, whether, as curtesy did not attach at law without a seisin in fact, the husband could claim his curtesy out of the wife's equity of redemption; but Lord Hardwicke said, "It is objected there is no seisin whatever of the legal estate in the wife in the consideration of law. But the true question is, if there was such a seisin or possession of the equitable estate in the wife, as in this Court is considered equivalent to an actual seisin of a freehold estate at common law—and I am of opinion there was —actual possession, clothed with the receipt of the rents and profits, is the highest instance of an equitable seisin, both of which were in this case."

(a) Locke v. Foote, 5 Sim. 618; Earl of Lincoln's case, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 411; S. C. Shower's P. C. 154.

(b) Doe v. Pott, 2 Doug. 710; Watts v. Fullarton, cited Doug. 718; Parsons v. Freeman, 3 Atk. 741; Dingwell v. Askew, 1 Cox. 427; Clough v. Clough, 3 M. & K. 296.

(c) 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 23.

(d) 1 Atk. 603; and see Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare, 413.

2. And so it was held that there was possessio fratris of a trust, in other words, that if a person inherited a trust and died before actual seisin of the estate by receipt of the rents and profits, it should descend to the brother of the half blood, as heir to the father, in preference to the sister of the whole blood; but that if there had been such a receipt of the rents and profits as constituted equitable seisin, the sister of the whole blood, as heir to the brother, would exclude the brother of the half blood (a). Possessio fratris.

3. The doctrines of the Court upon the subject of equitable disseisin cannot be better illustrated than by a statement of the well-known case of the Marquis of Cholmondeley v. Lord Clinton (b). The circumstances were briefly these:—George, Earl of Orford, conveyed certain manors and hereditaments to the use of himself for life, remainder to the heirs of his body, remainder as he should by deed or will appoint, remainder to the right heirs of Samuel Rolle, with a power reserved of revocation and new appointment. Some time after, the Earl executed a mortgage in fee, which operated in equity as a revocation of the settlement pro tanto. In 1701 the Earl died without issue and intestate, and upon his death the ultimate remainder (which had been a vested interest in the Earl himself, as the heir of Samuel Rolle at the date of the deed), should have descended to the right heir of the Earl, but, the parties mistaking the law, the person who was heir of Samuel Rolle at the death of the Earl was allowed to enter on the premises, and continued in possession, subject to the mortgage, up to the commencement of the suit. The bill was filed in 1812, by the assign of the right heir of the Earl against the mortgagee and the assign of the right heir of Samuel Rolle, for redemption of the premises, and an account of the profits. It was debated whether, as the legal estate was vested in the mortgagee, and the heir of Samuel Rolle had held the possession subject to a subsisting mortgage, the assign of the Earl's heir, to whom the equity of redemption belonged in point of right, had been disseised of his equitable interest, and was now barred by the effect of time. Sir W. Grant argued, that although there might be what was deemed a seisin of an equitable estate, there could be no disseisin—first, because the disseisin must be of the entire estate, and not of a limited and partial interest in it; and, secondly, because a tortious act Marquis of Cholmondeley v. Lord Clinton.

(a) See now 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 106.

could never be the foundation of an equitable title; that an equitable title might undoubtedly be barred by length of time but could not be shifted or transferred (a); that the equity of redemption subsisted, and it must therefore belong to some one, and could only belong to the original cestui que trust (b); that the cestui que trust could only be barred by barring the trustee (c). Sir W. Grant did not then decide the point, but directed a case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench on a question of law, and retained the bill in the meantime.

Re-heard.

The cause was afterwards re-heard on the equity reserved before Sir T. Plumer, who determined that the original cestui que trust had been disseised and was consequently barred (d). "The grounds," he said, "upon which it is contended that the holder of the rightful equity is not bound by laches and non-claim are that the tortious possessor does not claim to be the holder of more than the equitable estate—that there is no disseisin, abatement or intrusion of a trust—that the possessor is only tenant at will, and may be dispossessed at any time by the trustee of the legal estate, and he has therefore only a precarious and permissive possession—that tortious possession can never be the foundation of an equitable title (e). But this reasoning" he continued, "proceeds on a mistaken view of the manner in which, and the grounds upon which, the bar from length of time operates. The question respects the plaintiff's right to the remedy, not the defendant's title to the estate. A tortious act can never be the foundation of a legal any more than of an equitable title. The question is, whether the plaintiff has prosecuted his title in due time (f). As to the argument that a title in a Court of equity may be lost by laches, but cannot be transferred without the act of the party, the case is the same in this respect both in equity and law. If the negligent owner has for ever forfeited by his laches his right to any remedy to recover, he has in effect lost his title for ever. The plaintiff is barred of his remedy; the defendant keeps possession without the possibility of being ever disturbed by any one: the loss of the former owner is necessarily his gain; it is more—he gains a positive title under the statute at law, and, by analogy, in equity (g). If the mere existence of an old legal estate would have the effect of preventing the bar attaching upon the equitable estate, all the principles that have been established respecting equitable estates and titles would be overturned. According to this reasoning, whenever the legal estate is outstanding, in an old term, for instance, to attend the inheritance, the earliest equitable title must in all cases prevail; quiet enjoyment for sixty, one hundred, or two hundred years or more, would be no security, if the old term had existed longer; it would always be open to inquiry in whom was vested the equitable title which originally existed when the old term was created" (a). Marquis of Cholmondeley v. Lord Clinton.

On appeal to the House of Lords his Honour's decision was affirmed, and the principle on which it proceeded was approved. Lord Eldon said, "He could not agree, and had never heard of such a rule as that adverse possession, however long, would not avail against an equitable estate: his opinion was, that adverse possession of an equity of redemption for twenty years was a bar to another person claiming the same equity of redemption, and worked the same effect as abatement or intrusion with respect to legal estates, and that for the quiet and peace of titles and the world it ought to have the same effect" (b). Appeal to the House of Lords.

SECTION IV.

OF MERGER.

1. At law merger is the necessary consequence of the union of two estates in the same person in the same right, but in equity two estates without any intervening interest may meet in the same person in the same right without merger, and, on the other hand, though the estates are separated by an intervening interest, merger may take effect. The principle by which the Court is guided is the intention; and in the absence of express intention, either in the instrument or by parol, the Court looks to the benefit of the person in whom the two estates become vested (c). General view.

2. The chief importance of the doctrine of merger is with Purchase subject to charges.

reference to charges. Thus A., the owner of an estate subject to a first incumbrance in favour of B., and a second incumbrance in favour of C., contracts to sell the estate to D. Here, if the purchaser knows of both the incumbrances, he of course will not accept the title until they have been discharged. But should he have actual notice of the incumbrance to B. only, and take a conveyance from A. and B. so as to extinguish the charge of the latter, this act (if, by reason of his having constructive notice of C's incumbrance or otherwise, the defence of purchase for value without notice is not available) lets in the incumbrance of C. as the first charge (a). If, on the other hand, the purchaser, being apprehensive of some outstanding incumbrance, take an assignment of B.'s security to a trustee for him in order that it may be kept on foot, then the charge does not merge in the fee-simple; but should C. take proceedings for raising his charge, the purchaser may protect himself by the shield of B.'s incumbrance as the first charge (b).

Purchase by person entitled to the charge.

3. The same principle under different circumstances applies where B., the first incumbrancer, buys up the interest of the owner subject to the charge; for if the charge be not kept on foot the incumbrance of C. will be let in, unless the defence of purchase for value without notice be applicable (c).

Purchaser may require the charge to be kept on foot.

4. The vendor must not be put to extra expense by the form in which the purchaser wishes the conveyance to be made, and

R., sitting in the Court of Appeal, while withholding his opinion as to whether it was binding in that Court, observed, "it amounts to no more than this, that in the case of a purchase from the owner of an equity of redemption in which the purchase-money is partly applied in paying off incumbrances, the purchaser with notice, whether actual or constructive, of other incumbrances is not, in the absence of any contemporaneous expression of intention, entitled as against the other incumbrancers, of whose securities he has notice, to say afterwards that the incumbrances so paid off are not extinguished. It does not go beyond that, and there are several authorities which say that this doctrine is not to be carried further." And in a recent Indian appeal the Privy Council refused to apply the doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere to India on the ground that it did not rest on any broad intelligible principle of justice; Gokuldoss Gopaldoss v. Rambux Seochand, 11 L. where the vendor is under a personal liability he may insist on being discharged from it, but with these qualifications the purchaser can insist on having charges kept up instead of being merged (a).

Mode of keeping charge on foot.

5. If the purchaser desire to keep on foot a charge vested in himself, he should take a conveyance of the equity of redemption to a trustee, and the intention should be expressed on the face of the instrument, and if this be done the charge and the inheritance will both be sustained in equity, so as to afford protection against any intervening incumbrance (b).

Merger on a contingency.

6. A purchaser may even have the charge assigned so as to keep it on foot in one event and merge it in another event, should the contingencies affecting the estate make such a course desirable (c).

A trustee not absolutely necessary.

7. The assignment should in prudence be made to a trustee, but if the purchaser have the equity of redemption conveyed to himself, yet if the intention to keep up the charge be clear, no merger will take place (d).

Getting in a charge pending contract for purchase.

8. If a person contract only for the purchase of an estate, and pays off a first charge with a view to the purchase but before the completion of it, no merger takes place, but the purchaser stands in the shoes of the first incumbrancer (e).

Where the person who created the second charge buys up the first charge.

9. The question of merger has been spoken of as one of intention (f), but this principle must not be applied where a person has himself created two successive incumbrances and then buys up the first charge, for in this case the mortgagor when he creates the second incumbrance is under a duty to discharge the debt previously incurred, and though the second mortgagee cannot compel him to do this, yet if the mortgagor do discharge the first debt, the second incumbrancer, whatever may have been the intention, will have the benefit of it. Besides, in most cases a mortgagor, in creating an incumbrance, enters into a covenant for further assurance, and this, independently of any general equity, would, it is conceived, give the incumbrancer a right to call for the assignment to him of any interest in the estate subsequently acquired by the mortgagor. Although, therefore, the mortgagor take an assignment of the prior charge to a trustee for himself to the intent that the same may be kept on foot, yet equity will not allow this as against the second incumbrancer (a).

Otter v. Vaux.

10. This has been carried so far that where a mortgage was made with a power of sale, and then a second incumbrance was created, and then the mortgagor purchased under the power of sale in the first mortgage, it was held that by this means the second incumbrance was let in as the first charge upon the estate (b). It was clear that if the mortgagor had paid off the first mortgage and taken a re-conveyance, this would have enured to the benefit of the second mortgagee; and the substance of the transaction was thought to be the same where the mortgagor took a re-conveyance from the mortgagee by the machinery of the power of sale: it was, indeed, said that this would give the second incumbrancer a double security—first, the purchase money in the hands of the first mortgagee, and then the estate in the hands of the mortgagor; but the answer was that the mortgagee could get no more than he was entitled to, viz., his principal money and interest (c).

[Trustee in bankruptcy buying up charge.]

[11. But where the trustee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor purchased from the first mortgagee, it was held that the second mortgagee was unaffected by the transaction, that the trustee stood in the position of transferee of the mortgage, and the second mortgagee was entitled to redeem him upon the usual terms (d).]

Owner of a charge may buy equity of redemption and hold his charge against an intervening incumbrancer.

12. It was observed by Sir William Grant (e) that the cases of Greswold v. Marsham (f) and Mocatta v. Murgatroyd (g) were express authorities to show that one purchasing an equity of redemption could not set up a prior mortgage of his own, nor consequently a mortgage which he had got in, against subsequent incumbrances of which he had notice. Now a person who borrows money cannot be his own creditor, or set up an incumbrance of his own, as against his own creditor (h); and if the vendor of the equity of redemption be himself personally liable for the charge, the purchaser will, as a general rule, be bound to indemnify him, but that one purchasing an equity of redemption cannot set up a mortgage of his own, or one which he has got in, as against incumbrances not created by himself (a proposition not established by the authorities cited by Sir W. Grant (a)) is, it is conceived, not law at the present day (b). If the first mortgage be paid off and extinguished, of course the second charge is let in; but, subject to the equities flowing from the contract between the purchaser and his vendor, the first mortgage and the equity of redemption may be so vested in the same person as to keep the two separate, and so exclude the second incumbrance.

Effect of keeping a charge on foot.

13. It must be borne in mind that where the charge and the inheritance do not merge, the person in whom they are vested has two distinct possessions, and in the absence of any indication of intention that the charge shall in equity wait upon and attend the inheritance, the charge will go to the executor, subject to probate and legacy duty (c), and the inheritance to the heir (d). The question, therefore, is constantly arising as between the real and personal representatives, whether the two interests merged in the lifetime of the person entitled to both or were subsisting at the time of his death; and the question of merger or non-merger is held to be an open one up to the death of a testator (e), and for the purpose of collecting the intention parol evidence is admissible (f).

Rule where charge and inheritance become united.

14. Where a person is entitled to a charge and to the inheritance under the same instrument (g), or being first entitled to the charge subsequently acquires the inheritance as devisee (h), or heir (i), or being first entitled to the inheritance acquires the charge by bequest (j), or by succession as next of kin (k), in all these cases, in the absence of anything said or done by the owner of the charge and of the estate to show what his intention was (a), the Court presumes the charge to be merged or not according as merger would or not be for the owner's benefit. If, therefore, the owner would, as in the case of an infant previously to the Wills Act, have had a larger testamentary power over the charge than over the inheritance (b), or if the merger would let in subsequent or competing incumbrances (c) of substantial amount (d), or the debts of the testator or grantor (e), the Court presumes the intention to have been that the charge and the inheritance, though both vested in the same person, should be kept distinct. But if it clearly appear that to keep the charge on foot could in no way benefit the owner it will merge (f).

Rule where owner pays off a charge.

15. Where a charge is paid off by a person owning an interest in the property charged, the quantum of interest which he owns is, in the absence of direct evidence of intention, the chief guide in determining whether merger takes place. If he be absolutely entitled, the presumption is that he meant to free the property from the charge; if only partially interested, the presumption is that he intended to keep it on foot (g).

Tenant in fee-simple paying off a charge.

16. Thus, if the person paying off the charge be tenant in fee-simple, the presumption will be that the charge was meant to be merged (h), unless the assignment of the charge was to a

(a) See Tyrwhitt v. Tyrwhitt, 32 Beav. 244, in which case Sir John Romilly, M.R., observed, "The three tests usually applied for the purpose of ascertaining whether the owner of the charge intended that it should merge in the inheritance at the time when he became entitled to the absolute interest in the charges are: 1. Any actual expression of that intention; 2. Where the form and character of the acts done are only consistent with the keeping the charge on foot; and 3. Such an intention may be presumed when, though a total silence in all other respects pervades the matter, it appears that it was for the interest of the owner of the charge that it should not merge in the inheritance;" [and see Smith v. Smith, 19 L. trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance, his "executors, administrators and assigns," instead of his "heirs and assigns" (a), or there were other circumstances in the transaction sufficient to exclude the presumption (b).

The mere fact of taking the assignment to a trustee for the person paying off, though a material ingredient in the question of intention, is not alone enough to keep the charge on foot (c).

[And where a person, claiming to be the absolute owner of an estate, borrows money to pay off a mortgage, there being no intermediate incumbrance, the presumption is that he means to extinguish the charge (d).]

Tenant for life paying off a charge.

17. If the person paying off the charge be tenant for life, the Court considers that as his interest ceases with his death, he could never have meant that the charge should be extinguished instead of enuring to the benefit of his representatives (e); and the same rule applies though the tenant for life be or become entitled (subject to remainders to his own issue which fail) to the ultimate reversion in fee (f). But even in the case of tenant for life, positive evidence may be given by parol that he meant to merge the charge (g).

Tenant in tail in possession and of age paying off a charge.

18. As tenant in tail in possession, if of age, has an absolute power of disposition over the estate, subject to his compliance with certain forms, the presumption is, that if he pay off a charge he meant to merge it (h).

Special cases where charge has been kept on foot.

19. But if tenant in fee-simple, subject to an executory limitation over, which he cannot destroy (i), or a tenant in tail under an Act of Parliament, who is incapable of acquiring the fee-simple (j), or tenant in tail in remainder during the life of the tenant for life whose issue, if any, will be prior tenants in tail (k), pay off a charge, in all these cases, as the interest of the party required the charge to be kept on foot, the presumption is that such was the intention. And where a tenant in tail paid off a charge with the intention of extinguishing it believing himself to be tenant in fee-simple, and assuming that as the basis of the transaction, the Court considered, on the ground of mistake, that the tenant in tail had not merged the charge (a).

Payment of charge and subsequent acquisition of fee.

20. It seems to be settled that where a tenant for life or tenant in tail in remainder pays off a charge, and afterwards the fee devolves on the tenant for life, or the remainder of the tenant in tail vests in possession, this subsequent union of the charge and the inheritance is not per se sufficient to rebut the intention previously shown to keep the charge on foot (b).

Mortgage by person who has bought up a charge.

21. If a person having both a subsisting charge and the estate mortgage or convey the latter, without mention of the charge, the security carries with it all the mortgagor's interest, and as between the mortgagor and mortgagee there is a merger (c). If tenant in fee of an estate mortgage it to the trustees of his settlement to secure a fund to which he is absolutely entitled, subject to a life interest limited to his wife, and then dies in the lifetime of the wife, there can be no merger, for during the existence of the wife's interest the trustees could not, without a breach of trust, release the charge to him (d).

Whether charges can be made to attend the inheritance.

22. As charges are not unfrequently assigned like terms of years upon trust to attend the inheritance, it may be useful to add some cautionary remarks. So far as the author is aware, there is no authority for saying that charges can be made to wait upon the inheritance like terms of years. No doubt charges, like heirlooms and other personalty, can be settled to a certain extent to run in the channel of realty, but can they be impressed with the nature of realty itself? Thus A. buys an estate, and settles it by the purchase deed to the use of himself for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder over to B., and suspecting secret incumbrances has a charge assigned to a trustee upon trust to attend the inheritance; A. dies, leaving an only son, who shortly afterwards dies without issue, when the estate becomes vested in B. An incumbrancer now starts up, and the charge is raised. Who is to have the benefit of it? Not, it will be said, A.'s real or personal representative, for by the trust he has parted with the absolute interest in favour of others. Not B., for how can personal estate go after an entail to a remainderman? The practice of assignment of charges, however, is so prevalent that when the point comes to be decided, the Court may go the whole length of holding that charges can attend the devolution of real estate through all its changes, and that they are not barred, &c., and that though latent before, yet they resume their vitality when a secret incumbrance is disclosed. The point must at present be considered an open one.

23. Now by a recent Act, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25, sub-s. 4, there is not any merger by operation of law only of any estate, the beneficial interest in which would not be deemed to be merged or extinguished in equity. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25.

SECTION V.

OF DOWER AND CURTESY.

Dower and curtesy of a trust.

1. A TRUST or equitable interest (a) and equity of redemption (b), of freeholds, were until the Dower Act (c) exempt from the lien of dower; but were subject to the curtesy of the husband (d), unless the husband was an alien (e).

Freebench.

2. An equitable interest in copyholds (as the Dower Act does not apply to them (f)) remains as before not subject to freebench (g).

What seisin required to give curtesy.

3. With respect to curtesy, as at law the wife, to entitle her husband to curtesy, must have seisin in deed of the freehold (h),

[(h) The seisin in deed of the freehold is necessary only in the cases in which, in the language of Lord Coke, "it may be attained unto;" Co. upon Litt. 29a., but where there are no the question arises whether in the instance of a trust, there must not be such a seisin of the equitable estate in the wife as is considered equivalent to legal seisin, as actual possession of the estate clothed with the receipt of the rents and profits.

No curtesy where there is adverse possession.

4. It seems to be admitted that if the equitable interest be in the possession of a stranger, adversely to the right of the wife, there is no such seisin in deed as to entitle the husband to his curtesy (a).

Executory trusts.

5. But if money be articled or directed by will to be laid out in a purchase of land to be settled on a married woman in fee or in tail, the husband is entitled to curtesy, though no rent or interest may have been actually paid during the coverture (b). This proceeds on the principle that the laches of the trustees shall not prejudice the right of a third person, and, therefore, the claim to curtesy arises in the same manner as if the trustees had actually laid out the money in land and put the parties in possession.

Parker v. Carter.

6. And it has been held, that in the case of an ordinary trust, any seisin of the wife, though she has not possession or receipt of rents, is sufficient to entitle the husband to curtesy. Thus an estate had been vested in trustees upon trust for Carter, during the joint lives of himself and Mary his wife, and upon the death of either of them, and in default of appointment, upon trust for the children in fee. There were two children, a son and a daughter Elizabeth, and the daughter married Parker; Carter died in 1817, and on his decease the widow, although she had no life estate, held possession of the estate until her own death in 1839. Elizabeth Parker died in 1836, and the question was, whether Parker the husband was tenant by the curtesy, although his wife had never been in receipt of rents. The Vice-Chancellor ruled, that the possession of Carter was the possession of his possible means by which the seisin in deed can be acquired, the husband will be entitled to curtesy notwithstanding its absence, for impotentia excusat legem. Thus in the case put by Lord Coke, "a man seised of an advowson or rent in fee hath issue a daughter, who is married, and hath issue and dieth seised, the wife, before the rent became due or the church became void, dieth, she had but a seisin in law, and yet he shall be tenant by the curtesy, because he could by no industry attain to any other seisin," Co. upon Litt. 29a. So where a testator devised an estate to his daughter, her heirs and assigns, for her separate use, and the daughter died in the lifetime of the testator leaving a husband and an only child, it was held that under the operation of the Wills Act the husband was entitled to curtesy, and that as there were no possible means by which the husband could have obtained seisin in the wife's lifetime, it was not required, Eager v. Furnivall, 17 Ch. trustee, and gave to the trustee a seisin of the inheritance: that the death of Carter did not interrupt that seisin, but the trustee was still in actual possession, not by a new title then for the first time accruing, but by continuance of the seisin acquired during the coverture: that the trustee was in such possession for the benefit of the party lawfully entitled thereto, and that he continued in such possession until the entry of Mary, which might be supposed to be a month or more after the death of her husband, and that such interval, there being no adverse possession, would entitle the husband to his curtesy (a).

Curtesy where there is separate use.

7. If the trust be for the separate use of the wife, so that her seisin would not entitle her husband to the possession or profits, it was formerly doubted whether in this case curtesy was not excluded. Lord Hardwicke was originally in favour of the curtesy (b); but in a subsequent case (without any allusion, however, to his former opinion), he decided against the claim of the husband (c). It has since been determined that the husband is entitled (d).

[Defeated by a disposition by the wife.]

[The right of the husband will however be defeated by a disposition by the wife of her inheritance by act inter vivos or by will (e).]

Opinion of Sir John Leach.

8. It was observed by Sir John Leach that at law the husband could not be excluded from the enjoyment of property given to or settled upon the wife, but in equity he might, and that not only partially, as by a direction to pay the rents and profits to the separate use of his wife during coverture, but wholly, by a direction that upon the death of the wife the inheritance should descend to the heir of the wife, and that the husband should not be entitled to be tenant by the curtesy (f); but this doctrine may admit of question, as there appears no reason why a person should be able to exempt equitable any more than legal estates from the ordinary incidents of property. A declaration, for instance, by a settlor, that a trust should be inalienable or not available to creditors would be absolutely void. In the case of Bennet v. Davis (g), which is cited by Sir J. Leach for his position, the question discussed was not whether curtesy attached on an equitable estate but whether an equitable estate arose. A testator had devised lands "to his daughter, the wife of Bennet, for her separate use, exclusive of her husband, to hold the same to her and her heirs," and that her husband should not be tenant by the curtesy, nor have the lands for his life in case he survived, but that they should upon his wife's death go to her heirs. It was contended that the wife could not be a trustee for herself, and that the husband could not be a trustee for the wife, they both being one person, and, that consequently, as there was no trustee, the husband was entitled to the estate beneficially. But the Court held that the husband was a trustee for the wife, and observed, "though the husband might be tenant by the curtesy (viz., of the legal estate), yet he should be but a trustee for the heirs of the wife." The remark certainly implies that on the death of the wife the husband would not be tenant by the curtesy of the equitable estate, but that question had not been adverted to at the bar, and apparently, from the context, was not under the consideration of the Court. Even assuming the remark to have been made advisedly, the view of the Court may have been that the curtesy of the husband was excluded on the ground now overruled, viz., that the trust being not simply for the wife and her heirs but during the coverture for the separate use of the wife, and after her death for her heirs, there was not a sufficient seisin as regarded the husband for the curtesy to attach upon (a).

[Effect of Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]

[9. Under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman is enabled to acquire, hold, and dispose of property as her separate estate as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee, and the question has been suggested whether a husband can become entitled to curtesy out of property which the wife has acquired as separate estate under the Act. It is conceived that, in the event of the wife not otherwise disposing of the property, he will be entitled to his curtesy in the same manner as if the property had independently of the Act been settled for the separate use of the wife (b).]

Distinction between dower and curtesy.

10. It must be acknowledged, that as dower and curtesy stand exactly on the same footing upon principle, either the rejection of dower, or the admission of curtesy, was an anomaly. Some high authorities, as Lord Talbot (a), Sir T. Clarke (b), and Lord Loughborough (c), regarded the allowance of curtesy as the exception; and the ground upon which they proceeded was that as trusts followed the likeness of the use, and there was no curtesy of the use, there could be none of the trust. On the other hand, Sir J. Jekyll (d), Lord Hardwicke (e), Lord Cowper (f), Lord Mansfield (g), Lord Henley (h), and Lord Redesdale (i), thought that consistency would be restored by the admission of the title to dower; for, since the Statute of Frauds, they argued the system of trusts had undergone considerable alteration, and was conducted upon a much more liberal footing: the rule now was, that, as between the cestui que trust and the trustee and all claiming by or under them, whoever would have a right against the legal estate had a like right against the equitable. Thus either argument had a fair show of reason to support it; but the latter view was, no doubt, more in harmony with the system of trusts as eventually established.

How curtesy came to be allowed and not dower.

The Courts, according to Lord Redesdale, were led to refuse dower out of trust estates from a well-founded fear of affecting the titles to a large proportion of the estates in the country, because parties had been acting on the footing that dower did not attach to a trust; but the same objection did not apply to allowing tenancy by the curtesy, inasmuch as no person would purchase an estate without the concurrence of the husband (j).

Dower Act.

11. By the Dower Act (k), the widow is entitled to dower in equity where the husband dies beneficially entitled to any interest (not conferring a title to dower at law) which whether wholly equitable, or partly legal and partly equitable, is an estate of inheritance in possession, or equal to an estate of inheritance in possession, other than an estate in joint tenancy (l). But in either case the wife will not be entitled to dower out of any property absolutely disposed of by the husband in his lifetime or by will (m). And by the Act a widow is not entitled to dower out of any land, when in the deed of conveyance thereof to her husband, or in any deed executed by him, it shall be declared that his widow shall not be entitled to dower (a). And the widow's right of dower may also be barred by declaration contained in the husband's will (b).

Exceptions from Act.

12. The Act does not extend to the dower of any widow married on or before the 1st January, 1834 (c), and does not apply to copyholds (d), though it does to lands of gavelkind tenure (e).

Dower uses no bar to widow married since the Act.

13. The ordinary uses to bar dower vest in the husband the whole inheritance in possession, partly at law and partly in equity, and therefore, in the absence of declaration by him to the contrary, must confer on a widow, married after the Act, a right to dower (f).

Intent to bar dower expressed in deed dated before the Act inoperative.

14. And if an estate was conveyed before the Act to uses in bar of dower with words expressing the intent of the limitations to be to prevent any wife of the purchaser from becoming dowable, such words cannot amount to a declaration under the Act (g); and, if they did, the deed, as being executed before 1st January, 1834, could not prejudice any right of dower (h); and consequently the widow married after the Act will, in such a case, be dowable (i).

Dower out of equitable fee subject to executory devise.

15. And a widow married since the Act is dowable of an equitable estate limited to the husband in fee, but subject to a limitation over on his dying without issue living at his death and which event has since occurred (j).

pure personalty, chattels real, and real estate of freehold or inheritance; and, Secondly, To consider the nature of a wife's separate estate (a).

First. Of a feme covert's equitable interest generally.

[And here we may observe, that the mutual rights of husband and wife in the property of the wife have recently undergone such great changes, that it will be well, for the sake of simplicity, to deal separately with (A), the law as regards cases not affected by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and (B), the modifications introduced by that Act.

(A) As to cases not affected by the Married Women's Property Act.

The cases to be considered under this head will be confined to those in which property accrued before the 1st January, 1883, to women who were married before that date.]

Pure personal estate not settled to separate use.

1. As respects pure personal estate (by which expression is here meant personalty exclusive of chattels real, such as chattels personal, legacies, and other choses en action), not settled to the wife's separate use, the husband's power over the equitable estate is regulated by his power over the legal estate. A personal chattel, as furniture, held in trust for the wife, belongs in equity to the husband absolutely. But as to choses en action, as legacies, the right of the husband depends upon the fact of reduction into possession (b). If the wife's equitable interest be a present one, and the trustee is willing to facilitate the reduction into possession by payment, transfer, &c., to the husband, the trustee is at liberty to do so, and will not thereby incur any personal responsibility (c). On the other hand, the trustee, in whose hands the wife's chose en action is, may, in a proper case, insist on having it settled; and if for that purpose he pay it, by arrangement with the husband, to the trustees of an existing settlement, to be held by them upon the trusts thereof, such settlement will be as valid as if made by the Court (d). But a wife has no equity to a settlement until her antenuptial debts have been discharged (a); and she has no such equity against a purchaser where the fund has been aliened by the husband, and the alienation is binding on the wife from her having taken a fraudulent part in the alienation (b).

Reduction into possession.

An actual reduction into possession (c) is required for defeating the wife's rights (d); and in the absence of reduction into possession by the husband during his life, the equitable interest passes to the wife by survivorship (e). It follows that where the wife's interest remains reversionary until after the husband's death, and the wife survives, she necessarily takes by survivorship (f). And so if the marriage be dissolved, or a judicial separation be decreed (g), [or a protection order be obtained (h)]

[(d) A release by the husband of a chose en action payable in præsenti is effectual to bar the wife's equity to a settlement, and if the release be of a legacy by deed poll it will be operative although there was no legal personal representative in existence at the time of its execution; and the release is good although the husband was living apart from the wife and not contributing to her support, McCreery v. Searight, 5 L. [(e) If the husband and wife appoint an agent to receive a chose en action of the wife, and he receives it, but does not pay it over to either husband or wife, his receipt nevertheless operates as a reduction into possession by the husband, Huntley v. Griffith, F. Moore, 452, Goldsborough, 2nd ed. p. 159, pl. 91; and this will also be the case, where the chose en action is the distributive share of the wife in the estate of an intestate of which she is the administratrix, Re Barber, 11 Ch. D. 442. If the wife with the assent of her husband receives a chose en action, it operates as a reduction into possession by him, Rogers v. Bolton, 8 L. R. Ir. 69; but the payment to the wife without the husband's assent will not prevent the husband, if he survive her, from suing for the chose en action as her legal personal representative, S. C.]

After the husband's death, which occurred in the wife's lifetime, it was discovered that the sale had taken place under circumstances which it was contended rendered it voidable, and on the question as to who was entitled to take proceedings to set the sale aside, it was held that the right of avoidance was in the husband's representatives and did not survive to the wife.]

before the chose en action is got in, it belongs to the wife. A similar principle applies, where the interest of the wife may be viewed as partly possessory and partly reversionary,—as where the wife is entitled during her own life; in which case, the husband cannot bind the interest of the wife beyond the duration of the coverture (a). So, even if the husband assign the wife's reversionary interest, and it subsequently, during the husband's lifetime, becomes possessory, the wife's right by survivorship remains, unless reduction into possession be actually effected by the husband in his lifetime (b). [And a settlement of such an interest by the wife is void and incapable of confirmation, and can be validated only by some act amounting to a new disposition by her while sui juris (c).]

Equity to a settlement.

2. The equity to a settlement appears to have had its origin (d) in cases where the trustee, declining to pay, transfer, &c., the wife's possessory interest to the husband, and the husband filing a bill against the trustee to compel payment, transfer, &c., the Court held that those who seek equity must do equity; and declined to assist the husband in obtaining the wife's equitable interest, except upon the terms of some portion of it being settled for the benefit of the wife and her issue.

[But where property is given to husband and wife, inasmuch as by the unity of the persons in law they take by entireties, and the husband is entitled in his own right to the entirety during his life, the wife will have no equity to a settlement out of any part of the property (e).]

Feme may assert her equity to a settlement actively.

3. Whatever may have been the source of this equity, it is undoubtedly one which the wife has a right, according to the now established practice of the Court, to assert actively, either by an action (f), or, in the case of an already existing suit, by

[The right is a personal one in the wife, and, on her death without having taken any steps to assert it, fails, and cannot be set up by her children. If, however, the wife has taken proceedings to enforce her equity, and has obtained a decree or order referring the matter to the Judge in chambers to approve a proper settlement, the children are en-petition (a), at any time before the husband has finally reduced the equitable interest into possession; and possession by the husband in the mere character of executor, or administrator, or trustee, and not as husband in his marital right, will not be deemed a reduction into possession to defeat the equity to a settlement (b). [And the equity may be enforced in respect of a fund which is possessory although not actually distributable, as in the case of a share of an estate which is being administered by the Court, but which will not be distributable until further consideration (c).

Where the husband and wife are not domiciled in England, and the law of the place of their domicile does not recognize any equity to a settlement in the wife, she cannot assert the right in the English Courts (d).]

[Or waive it.] It is equally clear that the equity is one which the wife has a right to waive, by consenting in open Court (e) to the receipt of the equitable interest by the husband, [but an infant is not capable of giving such consent (f).] The wife may revoke her consent at any time before the actual transfer (g), and she has no power of consenting out of Court, and therefore a trustee who thinks a settlement ought to be executed, which the husband rejects, is justified, notwithstanding the wife's wishes to the contrary, in paying the money into Court (h).

[But where a conveyance by husband and wife of the wife's real estate is duly acknowledged by her, she must be treated as titled to the benefit of that decree or order, and may bring an action to enforce the settlement. having given up to her husband all claim on the purchase money, even though part of it is left outstanding in trustees by way of an indemnity fund against charges on the estate (a).]

As to fund under 200*l.*

4. In one case where the fund was under 200*l.*, and therefore by the practice of the Court payable to the husband without the consent of the wife, the wife, though the husband had deserted her, had no equity to a settlement (b). But this case has since been overruled, and the Court has directed the whole fund, though it was under 200*l.*, to be settled upon the wife and children (c).

[Equity to settlement prevails though husband indebted to estate.]

[5. The wife's equity to a settlement is paramount to the right of the representatives of the testator or intestate under whom her interest is derived to retain a debt due from the husband to the testator or intestate (d).]

Where the husband, being himself an executor, was a defaulter to the estate, it was held that the wife, one of the residuary legatees, had no equity to a settlement as against the claims of other persons who suffered by the default (e); [but this decision has been doubted (f).]

Equity to settlement prevails against assignees in law or by deed.

6. The wife's equity to a settlement subsists not only against the husband himself, but also, as a general rule, against those claiming under him, as a trustee under his bankruptcy, or an assignee by deed, even for valuable consideration; in fact, the assertion of the equity most commonly takes place in cases where the husband has become bankrupt or has assigned the fund. Where, owing either to the trustee refusing to pay without suit, or to the wife's taking independent proceedings of her own, the fund comes under the control of the Court, the latter commonly considers that payment of one-half to the husband or the assignees, and the settlement of the other half on the wife and children, is, in the absence of special circumstances, a reasonable apportionment (g). As the moiety paid to the husband or assignees represents the whole of the husband's interest, the entirety of the other moiety must be settled on the wife and children, to the exclusion of the husband (a), except on failure of issue (b), in which event the husband will take, whether he survive the wife or not (c). It would appear that in Lord Eldon's time a rule existed against giving the wife the whole fund (d). But subsequently, in a case (e) in the Exchequer, where the husband was insolvent, Baron Alderson directed a settlement of the whole fund, considering insolvency to afford ground for a special exception. At the present day it is clear that the Court, wherever the special circumstances warrant the step (as, for instance, where the husband has abandoned the wife, or is not in a position to maintain her, and the fund is not more than sufficient for her maintenance), will settle the whole corpus, and, it seems, the arrears of income (f) on the wife and children (g). In every case the Court exercises a discretion as to the amount with reference to the particular circumstances (h)—namely, the conduct of the parties (i), the wife's means of livelihood (j), the settlement, if any, previously made upon her (k), and the sums before received by the husband in respect of the wife's fortune (a); [and the mere fact that the wife and children are in necessitous circumstances, and dependent on her for support, will not alone be sufficient to induce the Court to direct a settlement of more than a half (b).] Where the wife has been amply provided for, and the husband has not misconducted himself, the Court has dismissed the wife's bill with costs, and left the husband at liberty to follow up his marital rights (c).

[7. As regards the form of the settlement, the general rule is that the rights of the husband will not be interfered with further than is necessary to give effect to the equity in favour of the wife and children. Thus, the ultimate limitation, in default of children of the wife by any coverture will, in general, be for the husband whether he survives or not (d). But in special circumstances, as where the property is of small amount, the Court has not unfrequently secured to the wife the capital as well as the income (e). In a case where the wife, upon being examined, expressed a wish that part of the fund to which she was entitled should be retained in Court, and the income paid to her, with liberty for her to apply for payment of the capital at a future period, if she desired it, the Court made the order, settling the fund upon her for life, with remainder to her children, with liberty for her to apply to the Judge at chambers for a transfer of all or any part of the capital to her, by way of revocation of the settlement (f). Where the wife and children were in necessitous circumstances, and supported by her, and the husband had received a large proportion of the fund, which was of small amount, the Court ordered £20 a year out of income and capital to be paid to the wife during her life for her separate use, and after her death the remainder to be paid to her children at twenty-one, and if there should be none then to the representatives of the assignee of the fund (a).]

How far life interest of wife is subject to equity to a settlement.

8. Upon principle it would seem that the wife's equity to a settlement ought in all cases to be the same, whether it be claimed against the husband or his trustee in bankruptcy or his assignee for value. There is, however, an exception where the subject-matter against which the equity is asserted is a life interest of the wife. In this case, so long as the husband maintains the wife, he is entitled to receive the income of her life estate, and there can be no equity to a settlement (b). If, however, he deserts her, or is divorced by reason of his misconduct, the Court will not allow him to receive the income without securing at least a portion of it for the maintenance of the wife (c); and pari ratione where the husband becomes bankrupt, and the wife is left without the means of subsistence, the same equity will be enforced against the trustee in bankruptcy (d). But where the husband assigns the income for value while duly discharging the marital obligation of maintenance, and subsequently deserts his wife, the wife is held to have no equity against the particular assignee for value, for the very object of the husband in making the alienation may have been to find the means for better providing for his wife, and the purchaser cannot be involved in such an inquiry (e).

Right by survivorship.

9. It must be remembered that the wife's equity to a settlement and her right by survivorship are two entirely distinct things. The former does not apply where the fund is reversionary (f), but arises only when the fund is ready for reduction into possession, and may be waived by the wife as before stated; the latter the wife cannot, by any act during coverture, deprive herself of, except so far as the provisions of Malins' Act (g) may enable her so to do. Occasionally resort has been had to certain ingenious devices for the purpose of bringing the wife's reversionary interest into possession. Thus where a fund has been settled on A. for life, and after his decease on B. a married woman absolutely, the husband of B., in order to reduce the wife's chose en action into possession, has purchased the prior life interest, and had it assigned to himself or his wife. But this scheme will not bear examination, for if the assignment be made to the husband, then, as the life interest was possessed by him in his own right, and the reversionary interest in right of his wife, the two will not coalesce; and if the assignment was made to the wife so that the husband would have both interests in the same right, then the feme on the coverture ceasing might disclaim the accession of interest and so prevent the intended merger. The late Vice-Chancellor of England held in several cases that the chose en action could thus be reduced into possession (a), and on one occasion Lord Cottenham, on an application to take the wife's consent, seems to have assented to the doctrine (b). But in a case before Lord Langdale, M.R., the question was considered to involve too much difficulty to be disposed of on petition (c); and the case of Whittle v. Henning (d) before Lord Cottenham, and other cases (e), have since decided that a reversionary chose en action of the wife cannot, by means of this machinery, be reduced into possession so as to be made disposable. However, if a fund be settled on A. for life, and the remainder be appointed to the feme covert for her separate use, and her power of anticipation is not restrained, the tenant for life and feme covert in remainder can deal with the fund (f).

[10. If the husband assign the reversionary interest of his wife in a chose en action, and survive her, and the interest be not reduced into possession during her life, administration to the wife's estate must be taken out before the assignee of the husband can compel payment of the interest assigned (g).] [Administration by surviving husband to wife's estate.]

upon legal interests, it follows, that as the husband may assign the chattels real of the wife at law, so he may assign her trust of a term in equity (a), though it be [reversionary (b) or] merely a contingent interest (c); and without the concurrence of either the wife or the trustee, and without consideration. And this doctrine is not interfered with by the case of Purdew v. Jackson (d); for a trust of chattels real is not a chose en action, but a present interest—an estate in possession (e). If, however, the equitable interest in the chattel be such that it could not by possibility vest in the wife during the coverture, then, inasmuch as the legal interest of a similar kind could not be disposed of by the husband, he cannot dispose of the equitable interest (f). If a husband mortgage his wife's chattel real, and the wife survives, she has the equity of redemption, though the mortgage deed recited falsely that the husband was absolutely entitled (g). If the equitable interest in the chattel be settled to the separate use of the feme covert, and she does not dispose of it, it survives to the husband (h).

Whether wife entitled to settlement out of equitable chattels real.

11. Whether the doctrine regarding the wife's equity to a settlement extends to the equitable chattels real of the wife, has been much doubted. It was held in one case, by Vice-Chancellor Wigram, as a result of the principles laid down by Lord Cottenham, in Sturgis v. Champneys (i), that even where the husband could dispose of the equitable chattel, the wife was entitled to a provision out of the equitable interest, as against the assignee of the husband for valuable consideration (j). The opinion of the Vice-Chancellor himself was the other way, but he considered himself bound by the authority of the Chancellor in the case referred to.

Result of decisions.

gage by the husband of the wife's legal term bars her of all right, except in the equity of redemption (a); while under a similar mortgage of the equitable term, she would have an equity to a settlement as against the mortgagee. Again, the legal reversionary term of the wife, provided it be such as may by possibility vest during the coverture, is capable of absolute assignment by the husband; and the wife has no right by survivorship, such as exists in the case of her chose en action, while as respects the assignment of a similar equitable interest there would be an equity to a settlement in the wife. The difficulties of applying the doctrine of the wife's equity to the case of chattels real, must, undoubtedly, prove considerable; but it can be hardly expected that the steps, of which Lord Cottenham in Sturgis v. Champneys took the first, will be retraced.

Effect of getting in legal estate of wife's equitable term.

14. It is conceived that if the husband, or the assignee from him of the wife's equitable term, can procure an assignment of the legal estate from the trustee, the wife's equity to a settlement is at an end; but the point is not touched by authority.

Arrears of income.

15. The equitable interest of the wife in a chattel real is not a chose en action, but an estate, and therefore, although, according to the principles laid down in Sturgis v. Champneys, the wife can claim an equity to a settlement out of such estate prospectively, yet until such claim is established, the right of the husband prevails. All arrears of income therefore which may have occurred before the claim, whether from an equitable estate in fee or for life, or a term of years, will be exempt from the equity to a settlement, and belong to the husband or his assignee (b).

Estate by elegit in trust for a feme covert.

16. If a judgment be acknowledged to A. in trust for a feme sole, and she marries, and the conusee of the judgment sues out an elegit, and possession of the lands is delivered to him in trust for the wife, the husband may assign the extended interest, as he might have assigned the trust of a term certain (c); and the law is the same where the feme is put in possession of lands by a decree of a Court of equity until a certain sum is raised by way of equitable elegit (d). But a mere judgment, recovered by the wife before the coverture, is clearly a chose en action, and as such cannot be disposed of by the husband as against the wife surviving (a).

Mortgage term in trust for a feme covert.

17. And it has been held that a mortgage term in trust for the wife (b), or a term in trustees for raising a portion for her (c), may be assigned by the husband, so as to carry the beneficial interest. But in these cases a doubt arises whether the debt or portion may not be held to be the principal thing; and as the doctrine that a chose en action of the wife is not disposable by the husband is of far more recent date than the decisions referred to, the question cannot be considered as settled. The cases in which it has been held under the order and disposition clause in bankruptcy, that the land draws with it the debt, so as to exclude the operation of the clause, tend to support the old authorities (d), but they are hardly conclusive, and a modern decision of Sir John Romilly, M.R., which was affirmed on appeal, has shaken the authority of the older cases (e).

Wife's equitable interest in lands of freehold or inheritance.

18. The case of the wife's equitable estate in lands of freehold or inheritance, presents in the main the same general similarity to the case of her legal estate in like lands, as has been noticed in respect of chattels real. Thus the husband without the wife can, in the case of the equitable as in that of the legal interest, convey an estate for the joint lives of himself and his wife (f), or for his own life after issue born. So he and his wife conjointly can, by deed acknowledged by the latter under the Fines and Recoveries Act, dispose of the equitable and of the legal interest; and can bar an equitable entail as they might a legal entail, by deed inrolled in Chancery; [and can dispose of an equitable reversionary interest in freehold property, which has been purchased by trustees in breach of trust and is still personal estate in equity (g).]

19. But according to Lord Cottenham's decision in Sturgis v. Champneys (h), the acts of the husband alone cannot affect the wife's equity to a settlement, where the interest of the wife can only be recovered through the medium of a Court of equity (i).

The propriety of the decision in this case was questioned by the late Lord Westbury (a). But after so long a lapse of time it is not likely that the principle of it will be shaken. It has accordingly been held that as regards an equitable freehold, that is, an estate to which a feme covert is entitled in equity for her own life, she may proceed actively, and institute a suit against the trustee of her bankrupt husband for a settlement of it upon herself (b). But she has no such equity against a purchaser, for value, from her husband, who at the time was supporting her (c). In short, the principles which cover the wife's equitable interest for life in realty, are the same as those which regulate the like interest of the wife in personalty (d).

[It has been suggested in a recent case (e) that since the passing of the Judicature Act, 1873, it is immaterial whether the estate of the wife is legal or equitable, and that the equity to a settlement can be enforced against the husband even although his estate is legal; but this conclusion was not necessary for the decision of the case, and seems to be open to grave doubt.]

Equitable estates in fee simple or fee tail.

20. As to the case of an equitable fee simple or fee tail to which a feme covert is entitled, a distinction must be borne in mind between the husband's powers over a wife's personal, and over her real estate. The husband can get possession of the absolute interest of the former and make away with it; and therefore the Court settles the corpus or a competent part of it on the wife and her children; but as to realty, the husband has no power over the corpus, but can dispose only of the interest during the joint lives, or if there be issue, for his own life; and as this limited interest is all that the husband or those claiming under him can deal with, and the husband has the curtesy in his own right, it is only the interest during the joint lives that requires to be settled. As to any ulterior interest, the Court has properly nothing to do with it. If the wife be tenant in fee,—why should the heir be disinherited in favour of the children? and if the wife be tenant in tail,—why should the issue in tail and remainderman be defeated? "In the case of the wife's real estate," observed V.C. Wood, "she wants no protection out of the corpus of that estate, for she cannot be deprived of it without her own concurrence, which the law requires to be given in such a manner as will protect her from her husband" (a). Where, therefore, the wife is tenant in fee or in tail in equity, the claim of the wife stands on the same footing as where she is tenant for life in equity, and has been so dealt with accordingly (b).

[Real estate held upon trust for sale.]

[21. Where real estate is held upon trust for sale and to pay the proceeds to a married woman, the husband can, after the land has actually been sold, give a good discharge for the purchase-money, but until the sale the husband cannot by any act of his bar the wife's right (c).

[Fund in Court representing realty.]

22. Where a fund in Court represents realty to which a married woman is absolutely entitled, she may elect to take it as personalty, and, upon her being separately examined and consenting, it may be paid out to her husband without any deed being executed (d).

[Alimony.]

23. A married woman, to whom permanent alimony has been allowed on a judicial separation from her husband, cannot alienate it, as it is not in the nature of property but is simply an allowance to provide for the daily maintenance of the wife and is by its very nature inalienable (e).]

Existence of an outstanding term.

24. The mere circumstance of the existence of a jointure-term, preceding the estate of a feme covert, tenant in tail in possession subject to the term, sufficiently renders the wife's estate equitable to entitle her to a settlement during the joint lives in a suit instituted by her (f). And, indeed, wherever a plaintiff is obliged to come into a Court of equity he must submit to do

Getting in the legal estate.

25. The effect of the husband, or the husband's assignee, procuring a conveyance of the legal estate so as to clothe his equitable interest therewith, must be the same as in the case of an equitable term of years before adverted to (b).

[(B) Of the modifications introduced by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c).

[Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]

1. By sect. 1, sub-s. 1 of the Act it is enacted that "a married woman shall, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing by will or otherwise, of any real or personal property, as her separate property, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee." This is a general section, "pointing out the provisions the details of which are to be worked out in the subsequent sections" (d); it must therefore be construed together with sections 2 and 5 (e).

By sect. 2, "every woman who marries after the commencement of this Act" (1st January, 1883), "shall be entitled to have and to hold as her separate property and to dispose of in manner aforesaid, all real and personal property which shall belong to her at the time of marriage, or shall be acquired by or devolve upon her after marriage, including any wages, earnings, money, and property gained or acquired by her in any employment, trade, or occupation in which she is engaged, or which she carries on separately from her husband, or by the exercise of any literary, artistic, or scientific skill."

And by sect. 5, "every woman married before the commencement of this Act shall be entitled to have and to hold and to dispose of in manner aforesaid as her separate property all real and personal property, her title to which, whether vested or contingent, and whether in possession, reversion, or remainder, shall accrue after the commencement of this Act, including any wages, earnings, money and property, so gained or acquired by her as aforesaid (f)."

[General effect of Act.]

2. The result of this enactment is that as to women married since the 31st of December, 1882, and also as to property accruing after that date to women married before that date, the rights of the husband, during the life of the wife, are entirely excluded, and the wife is enabled to deal with, bind and dispose of her property, whether real or personal, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole. The cases relating to the rights of the husband over the wife's property during the coverture, and to the equity to a settlement of the wife, and to the wife's right by survivorship have, therefore, no bearing, where the marriage has taken place or the property has been acquired since the 31st of December, 1882.

[Property falling into possession after the commencement of the Act.]

3. It will be observed that the 5th sect. relates to the accruer of the married woman's title, which must, in order to bring the case within the section, take place after the commencement of the Act, and the section does not deal with the case of a change in the title such as occurs when a contingent interest becomes vested or a reversionary interest falls into possession. A contrary view was indeed for some time entertained, but the question has now been set at rest by the decision of the Court of Appeal (a).

[Mere expectancy.]

A mere spes successionis to property as one of a class of possible next of kin is not a "contingent title" within the section, and therefore where property was given upon trust for such a class, and the class became ascertainable subsequently to the passing of the Act, a married woman who was a member of the class was held entitled to her share for her separate use under the section (b).

[Damages recovered in action by husband and wife.]

Damages awarded to the wife in an action by her and her husband in respect of personal injury to her, even assuming that they are not her separate property under sec. 1, sub-s. 2, are clearly so under this section (c).

[Rights of husband in property not disposed of by wife.]

4. Whether the rights of the husband after the wife's death in such parts of her property as have not been disposed of by her are affected by the Act, was a question upon which there the earnings arise, see Ashworth v. Outram, 5 Ch. D. 923, post 898, note (a).]

was some difference of opinion founded on the use of the words "feme sole" in the 1st sect., but it has now been decided (a) that as the Act simply confers on married women the capacity to acquire, hold, and dispose by will or otherwise of property as if they were femes sole, and does not purport to deal with the devolution of property undisposed of, the rights in a married woman's property after her death, so far as such property is not disposed of or bound by her in her lifetime, are unaffected by the Act (b). The husband therefore will be entitled, as to personal chattels and cash by the marital right, and as to choses en action on taking out administration to her estate under 29 Car. 2. c. 3, s. 2, to retain her undisposed of personal estate to the exclusion of her next of kin. And the mere fact that the married woman has made a will appointing executors, to whom probate in general form has been granted under the new Probate Rules of March, 1887, will not affect the right of the husband (c), as although such probate enables the executor to get in her assets (whether she had power to dispose of them by will or not) it does not affect the beneficial title (d).

[Extent of application of Act.]

5. The Act has no application where the marriage took place and the property was acquired, or the title to it accrued, before the commencement of the Act, 1st January, 1883, and in such cases the old law applies (e).

Where a testator dies after the Act, but his will was executed before the passing of the Act, the will must be construed according to the law in force when it was executed, but the interest of a married woman under it will be governed by the Act. Thus where a residuary estate was given by such a will to A. and B. and C., his wife, under which gift before the Act A. would have taken one moiety, and B. and C. the other moiety as if they had been one person, it was held by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of Chitty, J., that A. was still entitled to one moiety, but the other moiety belonged to B. and C. as joint tenants as if she were unmarried. The Court of Appeal expressed no opinion as to what share A. would have taken if the will had been executed after the passing of the Act (f), but it has now been decided that the previous law has not been altered in this respect (a); and it has been observed that "the capacity of a married woman to take property is not altered" by the Act "as between her and the grantor. That was always complete. Whatever property, real or personal, was devised, bequeathed, conveyed, or assigned to a married woman, as between her and the grantor, passed absolutely. The Act only enlarges her capacity to take such property as her separate property" (b).

[Will of married woman does not pass property acquired after the death of her husband.]

6. Section 1 of the recent Act does not confer a testamentary power of disposition in respect of any property which does not fall within sections 2 and 5 (c) already noticed (d), and as those sections refer only to separate property, it has been held that the will of a married woman will not be effectual to pass property acquired by her after the determination of the coverture (e), so that the doctrine of Willock v. Noble (f), that the will of a feme covert requires republication in order to render it effectual to dispose of such property, is still applicable notwithstanding the provisions of the Act (g).]

Secondly. Of the separate use.

Trusts for separate use of a feme covert.

1. [Independently of the recent enactments affecting the property of married women] the principle at common law is that, as the husband undertakes the debts and liabilities of the wife, he is entitled absolutely or partially, according to the circumstances of the case, to the enjoyment of her property; but in equity a feme is allowed to contract with the husband before marriage, for the exclusive enjoyment of any specific property (h); or a person may make a gift to the wife during the coverture, and shut out the husband's interference by clearly expressing such an intention. Where the separate estate is the result of a special agreement between the parties, the policy of the law can scarcely be said to be transgressed, for the old rule was established for the benefit and protection of the husband, and

[(g) It is observable that in the 2nd sect. the words are "to have and to hold as her separate property and to dispose of in manner aforesaid" (that is, as it would seem, by will or otherwise), while in the 5th sect. they are "to have and to hold and to dispose of in manner aforesaid as her separate property," but no distinction can be founded upon this.]

unusquisque renuntiare potest juri pro se instituto; but that equity should have allowed a stranger to vest property in the wife independently of the husband during the coverture, appears a more questionable doctrine, though it may be said, that even in that case, there was no violation of the marital rights, for the property never vested in the feme herself, and the donor might limit any estate which the law did not refuse to recognize. The Court has also permitted the further anomaly of a restriction upon the feme's anticipation (where such an intention has been expressed) of the growing proceeds of the separate estate; but this indulgence appears not a distinct inroad upon the common law incidents of property, but rather an appendage to the separate use for the purpose of more effectually excluding the influence of the husband. If the wife were not debarred from anticipating the proceeds, she might, where the husband was not actuated by proper motives, be induced to divest herself of the property, and place it at the husband's disposal.

Not necessary that there should be an express trustee.

2. At the first introduction of the settlement to the separate use it was doubted, whether, to accomplish the object, the interposition of an express trustee was not necessary (a), but it was afterwards determined that this precaution might be dispensed with, for, rather than the intention should be disappointed, the husband himself should be construed a trustee for the wife (b). But [as to cases not falling within the recent statute] whether a trustee be expressly appointed or not, the intention of excluding the husband must not be left to inference, but must be clearly and unequivocally declared; for, as the husband is bound to maintain the wife, he has primâ facie a right to her property (c); but, provided the meaning be clear, the Court will execute the intention, though the settlor may not have expressed himself in technical language (d).

[Gift by husband to wife.]

intervention of a trustee (a); and if a husband permit his wife to carry on a business for her own benefit, independently of him, it becomes her separate property, and the husband becomes so far as is necessary a trustee of everything employed in the business for the wife (b).

In the absence of proof of an unequivocal or final intention on the part of a husband to constitute himself a trustee for his wife, the Court will not, after his death, upon her uncorroborated statement, treat the property as belonging to her for her separate use (c).

[Allowance to wife of lunatic.]

An allowance made under an order in lunacy to the wife of a lunatic, living apart from her husband, for her separate maintenance, belongs to her for her separate use (d).

[Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]

3. Now by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman can acquire, hold, and dispose of property as her separate estate, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee (e); and under the 2nd and 5th sections of the Act (f) all property acquired by any married woman since the 31st of December, 1882, irrespective of the date of her marriage, and also all property belonging to any woman married since that date, are made her separate estate (g).

[Intervention of trustee rendered wholly unnecessary.]

[Application of previous law.]

Notwithstanding the material change thus made in the principle on which the doctrine of the separate use is based, it is conceived that subject to the enlarged rights and liabilities introduced by the Act, many of the principles which regulate the administration of property held for the separate use will apply equally to any property which by virtue of the late Act belongs to a married woman as her separate estate; so that, while the old law has to some extent ceased to be applicable to cases governed by the late Act, it will frequently be necessary to refer to it even in connection with property bound by that Act. Moreover, as to property acquired before the 1st January, 1883, by women married before that date, the law remains unaffected by the Act.

What words will create a trust for separate use.

4. In cases not falling within the recent Act], the marital claims are defeated if the gift be to the wife for her "separate use" (a), or "sole and separate use" (b), or "solely for her own use" (c) (which is construed as separate use), or "solely and entirely for her own use and benefit" (d), [or "for her sole use and disposal" (e), or "for her sole and absolute use and disposal" (f),] or for "her livelihood" (g), or "that she may receive and enjoy the profits" (h), or "to be at her disposal" (i), or "to be by her laid out in what she shall think fit" (j), or "for her own use, independent of her husband" (k), or "not subject to his control" (l), or "for her own use and benefit, independent of any other person" (m), or "to receive the rents from the tenants while she lives, whether married or single," with a direction that no sale or mortgage should be made during her life (n): for such expressions as these are considered inconsistent with the notion of any interference on the part of the husband. So, if the gift be accompanied with such expressions as "her receipt to be a sufficient discharge" (a), or "to be delivered to her on demand" (b); for in these cases the check put upon the husband's legal right to receive could only have been with the intention of giving the wife a particular benefit. So, if the gift be to the husband should he be living with his wife, but if separate then half to the husband and the other half to the wife "absolutely," for the context shows that by absolutely is meant for the separate use (c).

[Where trustees have a discretion to "pay, apply, and dispose of" the income of a trust fund for the maintenance and support of a married woman, they may pay the income to her for her separate use (d).]

5. But if the trust be merely "to pay to her," or "to her and her assigns" (e), or the gift be "to her use" (f), or "her own use" (g), or "her absolute use" (h), or "in trust only for her, her executors, administrators, and assigns" (i), or, "to her, her heirs, and assigns, for her or their own sole and absolute use" (j), or "to pay into her own proper hands for her own use" (k), or "to pay to her to be applied for the maintenance of herself and such child or children as the testator might happen to leave at his death" (l), there is no such unequivocal evidence of an intention to exclude the husband.

Had the husband alone been appointed a trustee for the wife the decision might have been different (a).

[7. On the resumption of cohabitation in cases where there has been a judicial separation or a protection order, the property to which the wife is entitled when such cohabitation takes place belongs to her for her separate use (b).] [Resumption of cohabitation.]

8. If a feme sole marry without having disposed of the property settled to her separate use, the limitation to the separate use will on the marriage take effect. This doctrine is open to much observation upon principle (c), but Lord Cottenham, in the cases of Tullett v. Armstrong, and Scarborough v. Borman (d), anxious to prevent the consequences that would have flowed from a different decision, and not finding any other safe ground upon which to base his judgment, asserted an inherent power in the Court of Chancery to modify estates of its own creation, and in virtue of that jurisdiction established the validity of the separate use in case of the feme's marriage. If a fund be given to a feme sole for her separate use, without the intervention of a trustee, and she sells out the fund and invests it in another form, and then marries, the separate use has been destroyed, and she is regarded as the owner of the new property in the ordinary way (e). 9. If property be settled, whether by deed or will, to the separate use of a feme, and the separate use was meant to be confined to a particular marriage, and the husband dies, and the widow marries again, the second husband will not be excluded [by the terms of the instrument] from his ordinary marital rights (f). The question simply is, What was the intention of the settlement or will? So, if real or personal estate be devised or bequeathed to A., a married woman, for her sole and separate use independent of her husband B., the separate Effect of separate use on second marriage.

[14. Since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman, by sect. 1, sub-sect. (2), is capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued, in contract or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be made a party to any action or proceeding, and any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding are her separate property; and any damages or costs recovered against her are payable out of her separate property and not otherwise (c). Under this enactment a married woman may sue without her husband in respect of a tort committed before the commencement of the Act, and the damages recovered belong to her as separate property (d); and it has been intimated that if the action were brought by the husband and wife jointly, the section, which applies only to "any such action," i.e., an action brought by the wife as if she were a feme sole, would not make the damages separate property (e). But in a recent case (f) Charles, J., thought that sect. 1, sub-sect. 2, was not necessarily confined to actions brought solely by the wife, and that even where in the same writ the husband was joined as a party, the money recovered by the wife might be her separate property within the meaning of that section; and in that case, the husband and wife having sued as co-plaintiffs in respect of injury to the wife, it was held that whatever might be the true construction of sect. 1, sub-sect. 2, the damages recovered were clearly her separate property under sect. 5. Under the sub-section the right to bring an action in respect of any cause of action within section 7 of the Statute of Limitations, 21 Jas. I. c. 16, which accrued before the passing of the recent Act, commenced at the date of that Act coming into operation, as the married woman then became "discovert" within the meaning of the statute of James, and time runs against her as from that date (a); and by force of the words "or otherwise" the feme may be sued in respect of an equitable liability not directly arising out of contract or any other cause of action on which a feme sole might be sued (b). But the sub-section is limited to actions relating to the married woman personally; thus it does not remove her incapacity to act as next friend or guardian ad litem (c).

[Not retrospective.]

And the sub-section is not retrospective, and does not render a married woman liable in respect of a breach of trust or of implied contract committed previously to the Act (d).

[Liability for costs.]

The liability of a married woman who is ordered to pay costs attaches when the order against her is made, and affects arrears of income, as to which she was restrained from anticipation, which have become due and payable to her since the commencement of the action, and if the order is for payment of costs by her to the trustees in whose hands the arrears are, they may retain the money in discharge of the costs (e).

[Remedies for protection of separate property.]

By section 12 of the Act every woman has in her own name against all persons, including her husband, the same civil remedies for the protection and security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole; but no husband or wife is entitled to sue the other for a tort (f).

[(f) An application by a husband against his wife for damages under an undertaking given by her on an injunction which was subsequently dissolved, is not in the nature of an action for tort within this section; Hunt v. Hunt, W. N. 1884, p. 243. Since the Act, the sole undertaking of a married woman as to damages must be accepted where she as sole plaintiff is entitled to an injunction; Re Prynne, W. N. 1885, p. 144.]

the Courts determined that if, without any direct or express reference to her separate property, a feme covert who had property settled to her separate use (a), professed to bind herself by any written instrument, the implication of law was, that she meant to charge her separate estate; for, except with reference to that, the instrument was without meaning and nugatory. Thus, if a feme covert executed a bond (b), even to her husband (c), or joined in a bond with another, even with her husband (d), or signed a promissory note (e), or bill of exchange (f), [or gave a guarantee (g),] though she was not personally bound, yet her separate estate, if anticipation were not restrained (h), was liable. [But if, prior to the recent Act, her anticipation was restrained as to such separate estate as she was entitled to at the time of entering into the engagement, such engagement had no effect either at law or in equity (i).] Again, if she gave a written retainer to a solicitor, it entitled him to have his costs out of her separate estate (j), though the circumstance that the solicitor of a husband and wife has transacted business relating to the separate estate is not, per se, sufficient to make that estate directly liable for the amount of his costs (k). So if she entered into a contract in writing for the purchase of an estate, she might enforce it against the vendor, as it created a valid obligation in respect of her property (l). And it was not necessary that the contract should expressly refer to the separate property, or that the vendor should know that the purchaser was a married woman (m).

Bond by feme before marriage.

In one case a feme executed a bond before her marriage, and her property having been settled upon her marriage to her separate use, the obligee filed his bill against the husband and wife to have the debt paid out of her separate estate, and the husband having absconded, the Court made the order (a).

[Costs of raising the charge.]

[The liability of the separate estate extended to the costs of an action to enforce the charge against the estate (b).]

General engagements not in writing.

16. Although it was thus established beyond question that a feme covert made her separate property liable by the execution of any written instrument, yet the principles upon which the liability was held to attach were for some time involved in much doubt. Thus it was considered by Lord Loughborough (c), Sir J. Leach (d), and the late Vice-Chancellor of England (e), that the separate estate of a feme covert was not subject to her general engagements, and this upon the notion that a feme covert could not contract, but that every dealing in respect of her estate was in the nature either of an appointment or of a disposition (f). However, it was clear that [irrespective of the recent Act] a feme covert could, in respect of her separate use, contract (g), and that her written obligations were not to be viewed as appointments, and did not operate merely by way of disposition. The principles that govern the liability of the feme's separate property have been very satisfactorily explained by Lord Brougham in Murray v. Barlee (h), and by Lord Cottenham in Owens v. Dickenson (i), and their judgments must be held to have clearly established that the dealings of a feme covert with her separate estate did not operate by way of appointment or disposition.

(h) 3 M. & K. 209, at pp. 223, 224. It may be observed that in this case the late V. C. of England, while expressing his opinion upon the hearing below, that the general engagements of the feme covert did not affect the separate estate, does not appear to have conceived that any distinction existed between a written and unwritten obligation; see 4 Sim. 94.

(i) Cr. & Ph. 48, at pp. 53, 54.

This being so, it became difficult to see on what ground any valid distinction could be sustained between written and verbal engagements. If a written promise to pay, as a promissory note, referring neither to the instrument of trust nor to the property, were held to bind the separate estate, upon what ground could a verbal assumpsit be distinguished? So long as it could be maintained that the dealing of the married woman operated by way of disposition of the separate estate, there seemed room for contending that the disposition, as being an assignment of trust, must have been in writing (a); but so soon as it was admitted that the general engagement in writing was binding it seemed impossible to resist the conclusion that a verbal general engagement must bind likewise. When it was attempted to imply a promise from mere acts of the feme, which might be construed as intended to bind either her husband or herself, there seemed room for a distinction, but an express verbal promise and an express written promise to pay must, it is conceived, stand on the same footing.

Observations of V. C. Kindersley respecting feme's verbal engagements.

The late Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, upon this subject expressed himself as follows:—"It has not yet, indeed, been made the subject of positive decision, that the principle embraces a feme's verbal engagements or cases of common assumpsit. Considering, however, the opinions expressed and the reason of the thing, I think it very probable that when that question arises for decision, it will be decided in the affirmative" (b).

Cases where writing is required.

But a verbal engagement could not bind the wife where the Statute of Frauds required, in the case of a feme sole, an engagement in writing, as if the feme covert were to undertake verbally to pay the debt of a stranger, or of her husband, who, for this purpose, is a stranger (c). It was even held, in Ireland, that the general engagements of the wife not in writing, could not, by reason of the Statute of Frauds, be satisfied out of any interest in land settled to her separate use (d). But this doctrine seems to involve a confusion between special contracts, which in the case of a feme sole, are required by the statute to be in writing, and general contracts, which, in the case of a feme sole, are not required to be in writing. In the latter case the remedy is against the feme sole personally, but where the feme is covert, is not against the person, but the property. The satisfaction, therefore, decreed against the separate estate is not the specific performance of a special contract, but an equitable execution by way of legal process for working out the liability created by the general contract.

Whether separate estate can be made liable by operation of law in clear contravention of the intention.

17. It was considered that there was still another distinction, viz., that, allowing the general engagements of the wife, whether written or unwritten, to bind her separate estate, yet, supposing the doctrine of these cases to be founded on the intention to charge the settled property as implied by the circumstance that otherwise the act would be nugatory, the same result would not follow where it was clearly not the intention of the feme to create any charge—where, in short, there was no contract either expressed or implied. Thus it was decided, that where an annuity granted by a feme covert and charged upon her separate estate, had been set aside as void for want of compliance with the requisitions of the Annuity Acts, the separate estate was not liable to repay the consideration money (a); and the decisions to this effect were cited, without disapprobation, by L. J. Turner (b). And where a married woman received rents claiming them as her separate property, but was in fact not entitled, Vice-Chancellor Kindersley held that the rents so received could not be recovered from her separate estate (c).

A feme covert having separate estate is a feme sole to all intents and purposes.

18. The Vice-Chancellor at the same time observed, "The doctrine (of the separate use) is now in a state of transition, and is not clearly established in all its points; but the modern tendency has been to establish the principle, that if you put a married woman in the position of a feme sole in respect of her separate estate, that position must be carried to its full extent, short of making her personally liable" (d).

[This, however, must be understood in respect only of the separate estate to which the married woman was actually entitled at the time of the engagement, which it was sought to enforce against her separate estate; for a married woman did not, by having separate estate, acquire an equitable status of capacity to contract debts, so as to enable her to bind separate estate to which she might afterwards become entitled, but could only contract with reference to separate estate to which she was actually entitled, and so as to bind that estate (a). So where an infant feme, in contemplation of her marriage, covenanted to settle all her after-acquired property, and subsequently, after attaining her majority but prior to the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, confirmed the settlement, it was held that this confirmation made the settlement absolutely binding only so far as related to property which she had already acquired at the time of confirmation, but that as to property which she might afterwards acquire for her separate use the covenant would remain voidable, and the married woman might, on such subsequent property accruing, elect to avoid the settlement as to it, and take it for her separate use (b).]

True principle.

19. The principle to be deduced from the cases was thus laid down by L. J. Turner. "To affect the separate estate there must be something more than the mere obligation which the law would create in the case of a single woman. What that something more may be must depend in each case upon the circumstances. What might affect the separate estate in the case of a married woman living separate from her husband, might not affect it in the case of a married woman living with her husband," &c. "In order," he continued, "to bind the separate estate by a general engagement, it should appear that the engagement was made with reference to, and upon the faith or credit of that estate, and the question whether it was so or not is to be judged of by the Court upon all the circumstances of the case" (c). These opinions have since been indorsed by the Court as a correct exposition of the law (d). In a late case Lord Justice James, in further illustration of the subject, observed, "The term general engagement is a misleading one. If it merely mean that goods sold to a married woman in the ordinary course of domestic life—that contracts expressed to be made by her in respect of property not her separate estate—e.g.

for buying or selling, or letting or hiring a house—do not necessarily impose a liability to be satisfied out of the separate estate which she may happen to have, in that sense and to that extent the proposition that her separate estate is not liable to her general engagements is quite correct. But that does not affect the rule, as laid down by Lord Justice Turner, as to general engagements, as to which it appears that they were made with reference to, and upon the faith or credit of, the separate estate. It would be very inconvenient that a married woman with a large separate property should not be able to employ a solicitor or a surveyor, or a builder or tradesman, or hire labourers or servants, and very unjust if she did that they should have no remedy against such separate property" (a).

21. Now, by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c), sect. 1, already adverted to (d), a married woman is made capable of "entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract," and it is further enacted as follows: (sub.-sect. 3,) "Every contract entered into by a married woman shall be deemed to be a contract entered into by her with respect to and to bind her separate property unless the contrary be shown;" (sub.-sect. 4,) "Every contract entered into by a married woman with respect to and to bind her separate property shall bind not only the separate property which she is possessed of or entitled to at the date of the contract, but also all separate property which she may thereafter acquire." [Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]

The contract, however, will not affect property as to which there is a restraint on anticipation (e).

It will be observed that by the recent Act no distinction is made between written and verbal engagements of the married woman, and both, therefore, equally bind her separate property. [Verbal and written engagements equally binding.]

It has been decided, upon the construction of these provisions, that the Act does not enable a married woman who has [Capacity to contract dependent on existence of separate property.]

no separate property to bind herself by a contract or engagement (a), and a person suing a married woman on an alleged contract must prove that she had, at the time of entering into the contract, separate property (b), free from any restriction on anticipation (c), as to which she might reasonably be deemed to have contracted (d).

[After acquired property when bound by contract.]

It has further been decided that as the Act refers to married women and not to widows, and to separate property and not to the property of women in general, the contract of the married woman will not affect separate property acquired after the coverture (e), or separate property as to which she was restrained from anticipation when she entered into the contract, but which afterwards becomes free from such restriction by the determination of the coverture (f); though it will affect separate property acquired by her during a subsequent coverture (g), a state of the law which certainly appears to be somewhat anomalous.

[Contracts entered into previously to Act.]

The Act does not expressly state whether it affects contracts entered into prior to its commencement (1st Jan. 1883), for enforcing which proceedings are taken after that date; but the language of the 1st section points to future contracts, and it has been said that "to hold that it was intended to alter the effect of contracts already made would be an unreasonable and violent construction, and one which the Court ought not to adopt without very express words" (h). But an order made by consent after the commencement of the Act, in an action relating to a contract before the Act, whereby all questions under the contract were referred to arbitration, and the parties bound themselves to perform and keep the award, was held to be a new contract and to be within the Act (i).

the wife contracted before marriage (a), and under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (b), property belonging to a feme and settled by her to her separate use without power of anticipation was liable to such a debt (c).

[Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]

Now, by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (d), sect. 13, it is provided that "a woman after her marriage shall continue to be liable, in respect and to the extent of her separate property, for all debts contracted, and all contracts entered into or wrongs committed by her before her marriage, including any sums for which she may be liable as a contributory" to any joint-stock company. The section contains provisions for working out the liability, but there is a proviso that nothing in the Act is to operate to increase or diminish the liability of any woman married before the commencement of the Act for any such debt, etc., except as to any separate property to which she may become entitled by virtue of the Act, and to which she would not have been entitled for her separate use if the Act had not passed.

It has been held that this section extends not only to debts properly so called contracted by the feme while sole, but to debts contracted by her under the powers of the Act, and for which judgment has been recovered, during a former coverture (e).

Liability of estate of feme covert to make good her breaches of trust.

23. The inquiry now under consideration involves the question how far a feme covert [could before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882,] commit a breach of trust for which her separate estate would be made liable. Where the breach of trust resulted in the loss of the very fund in which the feme had an interest to her separate use, the Court treated her acts as amounting to a disposition of the separate interest which she had power to bind (f). So if a feme covert who was executrix or trustee had wasted the trust estate, the ordinary right of retainer might be exercised against her separate estate under the same instrument (g). And the separate estate of a married woman under a settlement was held liable to make good the loss occasioned by her wrongfully selling absolutely a valuable chattel in which under the same settlement, she had only a limited interest (a). But where an annuity was devised to a feme sole in trust to apply it for the benefit of another, and the feme afterwards married and property was settled to her separate use, and then there was a breach of trust in respect of the annuity, the M. R. held that the effect of the marriage was to vest the legal estate of the annuity in the husband, that she could only act as his agent, that she could not be made liable for general torts in reference to trusts any more than for general torts at law—that strictly speaking she could not commit torts, but that they were the torts of her husband, and her acts created a liability against her husband: that he acted for her although she remained trustee, just as the husband of an executrix acted for the executrix, that her receipts must be treated as his receipts, and he alone was liable, and on these grounds the M. R. refused all relief against the separate property of the wife (b).

[Where a married woman having notice of assignment of a contract by her to convey land, conveyed to the assignor, it was held that she had not committed a tort, but a breach of trust or implied contract which would not have bound her separate property before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c).

[Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]

24. Now, by the recent Act (d), section 24, it is provided as follows: "The word 'contract' in this Act shall include the acceptance of any trust, or of the office of executrix or administratrix, and the provisions of this Act as to liabilities of married women shall extend to all liabilities by reason of any breach of trust or devastavit committed by any married woman, being a trustee or executrix or administratrix, either before or after her marriage, and her husband shall not be subject to such liabilities unless he has acted or intermeddled in the trust or administration." This section must be read in connection with the provisions of sections 1 and 13 already referred to (e); of section 19, to be hereafter noticed (f); and of section 18, which provides that a married woman who is an executrix or administratrix alone or jointly with others, or a trustee alone or jointly of property subject to any trust, may sue or be sued, and transfer or join in transferring any public or other stocks, funds, or investments in that character, without her husband as if she were a feme sole (g).]

Nature of the relief against the separate estate.

25. Supposing a person entitled to establish his claim against the separate estate, the limits of his remedy appear to be [as follows: Prior to the recent Act he could] not bring an action against the feme covert as the sole defendant and as personally liable (a). "There is no case," said Sir T. Plumer, "in which this Court has made a personal decree against a feme covert. She may pledge her separate property, and make it answerable for her engagements; but where her trustees are not made parties to a bill, and no particular fund is sought to be charged, but only a personal decree against her, the bill cannot be sustained" (b). But the party aggrieved might have brought an action against her and her trustees (and the death of her husband, which puts an end to the separate use, either after the commencement of the action (c), or even before it (d), would not have defeated the action), and might have prayed payment of his demand out of all personal estate in the hands of the trustees to which she was entitled absolutely (including arrears of rents), and also out of the accruing rents of real estate, if there were no clause against anticipation, until the claim and costs had been satisfied (e). "Determined cases," said Lord Thurlow, "seem to go thus far, that the general engagement of the wife shall operate upon her personal property, shall apply to the rents and profits of her real estate, and that her trustees shall be obliged to apply personal estate, and rents and profits when they arise, to the satisfaction of such general engagement; but this Court has not used any direct process against the separate estate of the wife, and the manner of coming at the separate property of the wife has been by decree to bind the trustees as to personal estate in their hands, or rents and profits, according to the exigency of justice or of the engagement the Act enables a feme covert to convey land in fee simple, being her separate property, without the concurrence of her husband (Re Drummond and Davie's Contract, (1891) 1 Ch. 524, 531), yet it does not appear that she has power to convey land of which she is trustee, otherwise than by deed acknowledged under the Fines and Recoveries Act.]

of the wife to be carried into execution." His Lordship then adds, "I know of no case where the general engagement of the wife has been carried to the extent of decreeing that the trustees of her real estate shall make conveyance of that real estate, and by sale, mortgage, or otherwise, raise the money to satisfy that general engagement on the part of the wife" (a). But it is conceived that if in any case the instrument were so specially worded as to place the corpus of real estate also at the separate disposal of the feme covert, the engagements of the wife would, upon principle [independently of the recent Act, have bound] the whole interest settled to the separate use, whether corpus or income (b).

[Where the property is acquired subsequently to the engagement.]

[A judgment recovered against the separate estate of a married woman in respect of an engagement not within the recent Act, binds only so much of the separate estate as the married woman was entitled to at the time when the engagement was entered into, and as remains undisposed of at the time of the judgment, and does not affect separate estate acquired subsequently to the engagement (c). In such a case, therefore, the proper inquiry to be inserted in a judgment against the separate estate is, "what was the separate estate which the married woman had at the time of contracting the debt or engagement, and whether that separate estate or any part of it still remains capable of being reached by the judgment and execution of the Court" (d).

[Where clause against anticipation.]

If there be a clause against anticipation as to any part, the Court directs payment out of the feme's separate estate, except that part of which she has no power of anticipation (e); and separate estate as to which anticipation was restrained at the time of the engagement, will not become available for the payment by reason of the determination of the coverture before the date of the judgment (f), and in this respect the law is not altered by the recent Act (g).

But where a woman married before the recent Act, who was restrained from anticipation, received, under an erroneous order of the Court, money to which she was not entitled, so that she was under a liability to refund which did not arise out of contract, it was held that arrears of income which had accrued due to her previously to the order declaring her liability to refund, must be retained in satisfaction of her liability (a). [Liability not arising out of contract.]

The remedy against the separate estate is in the nature of equitable execution, which may be obtained either by the appointment of a receiver or by a direction to the trustees to pay, and if any proceedings are pending between the married woman and her creditor, the order may be obtained in such proceedings without instituting a fresh action (b). [Equitable execution without new proceedings.]

26. The rule that the trustees of the property held for the separate use of a feme covert, must be parties to a suit for charging that property has in recent cases been broken through. Thus, in Picard v. Hine (c), where the trustee of a particular property was a defendant, the Court made a decree in a general form declaring that the separate property of the feme covert, vested in her or in any other person in trust for her, was chargeable with the payment of the plaintiff's debt, and in a later case V. C. Hall, on the authority of Picard v. Hine, held expressly that it was not necessary to make the trustees parties (d). But any order made in the absence of the trustees must be without prejudice to any claims they may have against the trust estate (e). [Trustee not a necessary party.]

Now, by the recent Act, although the ultimate remedy is only against the separate estate, the action may be brought against the married woman as if she were a feme sole, without joining either her husband or any trustee as a party, and a judgment may be obtained against the married woman (f). This judgment can, however, only be enforced against the separate estate, but it is available (in cases where the engagement in respect of which it is obtained was made after the 31st of December, 1882) against any separate estate of the married [Nor the husband.]

woman whether acquired before or after the date of the engagement (a).

[Form and effect of judgment against separate estate.]

27. Under the recent Act, judgment in default or under Ord. 14 of the Rules of the Supreme Court may be signed against a married woman, but execution can only issue against her separate estate as to which her anticipation is not restrained (b), unless the restraint arises under a settlement made by the married woman herself of her own property (c). The judgment should expressly state that "execution is to be limited to her separate property not subject to any restriction on anticipation, unless by reason of sect. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the property be liable to execution notwithstanding such restriction" (d). Judgment in this form against the married woman is not a personal judgment (e), but binds only her separate property, and under such a judgment there is no "debt due from her" within the meaning of sect. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, capable of being enforced by committal (f). But although the relief thus given against the married woman is different from that in the case of a feme sole, she is liable to be sued on any ground on which a feme sole could be sued, and this liability to be sued is entirely distinct from her power to contract. Thus a liability to refund in the capacity of a residuary legatee may be the subject of an action against the feme, although she is restrained from anticipation (g).

Where a married woman against whom a judgment has been made has only separate property which is subject to a restraint on anticipation, and has not received any income since the date of the judgment, an order for committal cannot be made against her under sect. 5 of the Debtors Act (h), and even if she has received such income, no such order can be made, when the effect would practically be to get rid of the restraint on anticipation (a).

28. A person entitled to establish a claim against the separate estate of a feme covert cannot obtain an injunction against her to restrain her from dealing with it until his right has been established by obtaining a judgment (b). [No injunction to restrain dealing with separate estate until claimant's right established.]

29. It was formerly held, though not without a conflict of judicial opinion, that where the creditor proceeded not against the feme covert personally, but against her separate property as a trust fund, the Statute of Limitations did not apply and could not be pleaded (c). But it was recently pointed out by Kay, J., that the leading case upon the subject proceeded upon the view that the bond of a married woman operated as an appointment making her a trustee for the obligee—a view which is now exploded. And it has now been decided by the Court of Appeal that the Statute of Limitations applies by analogy to the liability of a feme covert in respect of her separate estate (d).] Statute of Limitations.

30. In one case the Court refused to hold the Bank Annuities of a feme covert liable, as stock could not, in the case of a person sui juris be taken in execution (e); but now that stock is available to the creditor (f), the distinction may be considered as obsolete. Stock settled to the separate use.

31. Process against the separate property of the wife in her lifetime being in the nature of an equitable execution may, like an execution at law, be defeated by a bonâ fide assignment to a purchaser or mortgagee (g). Assignment good against creditor.

32. After the death of the feme covert the creditor may bring an action for payment of his debt out of her separate estate (h); and Sir W. Grant ruled that all the creditors, whether by specialty or simple contract, should be paid pari passu (i). But Lord Romilly was of opinion that the debts should be paid in Creditor's suit after death of feme covert.

order of priority (a). Two conflicting principles were in fact then at work in different branches of the Court (b): one was, that the general engagements of the wife were charges on the separate property equivalent to so many assignments, and if so, the debts would be payable in order of date: the other was, that the general engagements were not charges, but created a liability, the remedy for which if the feme were sole, would be against the person, but as she was covert, there was no remedy against the person, but the law gave an equitable execution against the property; and in this view the separate estate would be applicable as assets pari passu. Of these two principles the latter is clearly the more correct one (c).

[Earnings.] [33. The earnings of a feme covert, which under the Married Women's Property Acts belong to her for her separate use, are like her other separate estate divisible upon her death amongst her creditors pari passu (d).]

Funeral expenses. 34. It has been doubted whether the funeral expenses of the wife should be thrown upon her separate estate (e). [But in a recent case where a married woman exercised a general power of appointment (f), it was held that the husband, who was one of her executors, was entitled to retain out of the appointed property the amount of the expenses of her funeral (g).]

Savings. 35. The savings by a feme covert out of her separate estate form part of it, and are equally at her exclusive disposal, or, according to the language of an early authority, "the sprout is to savour of the root and to go the same way" (h); and the same has been held with respect to savings out of a maintenance allowed on separation (i). Where a fund is settled to the separate use of a married woman and her anticipation is restrained, as the income when actually accrued is at her absolute disposal, any savings from the income, though invested by her in the names of the trustees of the original settlement, will not be subject to the fetter against anticipation which attached to the corpus whence the savings proceeded (a). Savings out of money given to the wife by her husband for household purposes, dress, or the like, belong to the husband (b).

Power of disposition by will of separate estate.

36. A feme covert has always possessed as incident to her separate estate, a power to dispose of it, whether it be real or personal, not only by act inter vivos, but also by testamentary instrument in the nature of a will (c). [And her will will be effectual to pass after acquired separate property although she had no separate property at the time of making it (d),] and administration with the will annexed, where [no executors are appointed, or where] the executors die in her lifetime, will be granted not to her husband the survivor, but to her residuary legatees (e). And if a feme leave a will and make bequests, the usual course of administration will be observed. Thus, in the payment of her debts, the undisposed of interest will be first applied, then, general legacies, and, if there still be a deficiency, the specific legacies (f); and general legacies will, it is presumed, as in the ordinary case, carry interest, not from the death of the testator, but from the expiration of one year after the death (g). And a general residue will sweep all arrears of income due at the time of the death (h). [But as the separate property is, in the nature of equitable assets distributable pari passu amongst the creditors, the executor has no right of retainer in respect of money due to him (i).]

Separate estate undisposed of survives to the husband.

Executors take as appointees.

38. If a feme covert [in a case not governed by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, make a will in exercise of a power and] appoint executors, they do not take all the separate property jure representationis, but as appointees under the power to the extent of the fund appointed (b). And therefore if the will do not dispose of [the separate property not subject to the power] the executors take only the [property] disposed of, while the husband takes such chattels as are in possession, and as regards choses en action there must be letters of administration (c). [But if the feme covert being possessed of separate personal estate make a will, not under a power, but by virtue of her right as a married woman to dispose of her separate estate, and appoint executors, and direct them to pay legacies, they are entitled to probate, and all the separate estate vests in them jure representationis (d). And since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, if a married woman make a will in execution of a power and also appoint executors they are entitled to probate in general form and the right of the husband to administration cæterorum is excluded (e). And wherever there is evidence of the existence of separate property probate will be granted to the executor (f),

By sect. 23 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, for the purposes of the Act the legal personal representative of any married woman is, in respect of her separate estate, to have the same rights and liabilities and be subject to the same jurisdiction as she would be if living; and the husband taking jure mariti is the legal personal representative of the wife within this section, and therefore liable to her debts to the extent to which the property was her separate estate (b).]

Separate property invested in land.

39. If a feme covert, having income settled to her separate use, lay out the savings in a purchase of land in the name of a trustee, [or in her own name,] the land on her dying intestate will descend to the heir and not be personal estate in equity for the benefit of the administrator (c).

[Appointment does not pass savings after the termination of the coverture.]

[40. A testamentary appointment by a feme covert will not pass dividends arising after the termination of the coverture from property settled to her separate use for life with a power of appointment by deed or will, and in default of appointment, in the event of her surviving her husband, for her, her executors, administrators, and assigns, or investments which have been acquired by her after the termination of the coverture from the sale and reinvestment of property subject to the power of appointment (d).

Whether property subject to power of appointment by feme covert becomes assets on exercise of the power.

41. The question whether (independently of the provision in the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, to be hereafter noticed) property subject to a power of appointment in a married woman becomes, on her exercising the power, assets available for the satisfaction of her engagements, has been the subject of conflicting opinions. In Johnson v. Gallagher (e), the question was treated by Turner, L.J., as an open one upon the authorities, though a distinction was drawn where the feme covert was guilty of fraud. V. C. Kindersley, on the general question, was of in question, ought to take proceedings in the Probate Division to revoke the probate, proceeded on the footing that the married woman had no separate property, and therefore no power to make a will, whereas in fact, as appears from the report of the case on appeal in 59 L. J. Ch. 363, 364, she had some separate property.]

opinion that the appointed funds were not assets (a), but held that] if an estate were settled to the separate use of a feme covert for life, with a general power of appointment by will, and in default of appointment to her in fee, and she suppressed her real name, and holding herself out as a feme sole, mortgaged the estate, the mortgagee had a lien upon the estate as against the heir or appointee (b).

[Modern decisions, however, seemed, until very recently, to have established the proposition that on the married woman exercising the power, the property becomes assets available for the discharge of her liabilities in the same manner as her separate estate is available. Thus in a case in the Privy Council] where there was no fraud, and the feme covert had a general power of appointment either by instrument inter vivos or by will, [and there was a gift in default of appointment to her executors or administrators, and she exercised the power by will, it was] held that her general engagements were payable out of the property(c), and the Court went so far as to say, in the broadest terms, that such a settlement amounts in effect to what in common sense and to common apprehension it would be, viz., an absolute gift to the sole and separate use, and that such a form of settlement on a married woman, without restraint of anticipation, vests in equity the entire corpus in her for all purposes as fully as a similar gift to a man would vest it in him (d). The actual decision of the case in which this general doctrine was laid down was clearly supportable on the ground that there had been an imperfect execution of the power, and there being valuable consideration equity would supply the defect; and the Court did not mean what the generality of the expressions would imply, that where the power is not executed the property is available for the feme covert's engagements, for the Court expressly approved the doctrine laid down by Sir G. Turner, that where there is a limitation over in default of appointment and the power has not been exercised, the engagements of the married woman cannot prevail against the parties entitled in default of appointment (a). [In a later case (b), where personal property was settled upon such trusts as a feme covert should during coverture by deed or will appoint, and, subject thereto, for her separate use for life, and if she survived her husband (an event which happened) for her absolutely, and the feme appointed the property by will, the late M. R. held that the property was bound by her general engagements. Again, where property was settled on a feme covert for life for her separate use with a general power of appointing by will, with a gift over in default of appointment, V. C. Hall held that the property appointed by her will was assets for the payment of her debts in the same manner as if it had belonged to her for her separate use (c), and this decision has since been acted upon (d).

However, in the most recent case, in which the authorities [Re Roper.] were fully examined by Kay, J., a conclusion at variance with the previous decisions was arrived at, and it was held that the property appointed by the will of the feme covert was not liable to satisfy her obligations incurred before the Act of 1882, and that the exercise of the power did not make the appointed property available as assets to answer such obligations (e). The grounds upon which this decision was based were that as, according to the principle of Pike v. Fitzgibbon (f), the engagement of a married woman could only bind separate estate to which she was entitled at the time when the engagement was entered into, it followed that property which did not become part of the estate of the feme until the appointment took effect upon her death could not be resorted to to answer an antecedent engagement, and that the previous decisions, including that in the Privy Council already referred to, were based on the exploded doctrine of Norton v. Turvill (g), that the bond of a married woman operated as an appointment. The law, therefore, upon this subject remains, at the present time, in a somewhat unsettled condition (a).

[Married Women's Property Act, 1882, sect. 4.]

42. Now by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, sect. 4, it is provided that "the execution of a general power by will by a married woman shall have the effect of making the property appointed liable for her debts and other liabilities in the same manner as her separate estate is made liable under this Act."

[Particular power and particular engagement.]

43. Where a married woman was tenant for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and the trustees were "at her direction to direct repairs and do all such acts as should be proper for that purpose," and the tenant for life herself ordered the repairs, the Court gave effect to the particular engagement out of the particular power to direct repairs, and treated the power as being in effect exercised, and directed the trustees to raise the amount required for the repairs which had been executed, and to pay the amount to the builder employed by the tenant for life (b).]

Arrears of separate estate.

44. If the husband receive the wife's separate income, it is clear that neither the wife nor those entitled under her can claim against the husband or his estate, or any one standing in his place (c), more than one year's arrears (d), but it is still sub judice whether the wife or her representative can claim even so much. Lord Macclesfield (e), Lord Talbot (f), Lord Loughborough (g), Sir W. Grant (h), and Lord Chancellor Brady (i), held that the wife or her representative could claim nothing. Where there is such a conflict of authority it is hard to say which way the balance inclines. The better opinion, independently of authority, is thought to be that the wife can recover nothing from the husband's estate. Should the husband die insolvent, could she recover anything from the trustees on the ground of misapplication? and if the payment by the trustees to the husband was a proper one, why should the amount be recoverable from the estate of the husband? The wife's assent must be deemed to continue until revoked by something either expressed or implied.

Wife's acquiescence in receipt of her separate income by husband presumed.

45. The principle upon which the relief against the husband's estate is thus denied is, that the Court presumes the acquiescence of the wife in the husband's receipt de anno in annum (i). If, therefore, the wife did not in fact consent to the husband's receipt, but remonstrated and required that the separate income should be paid to herself, the Court will carry back the account of the arrears to the time of the wife's assertion of her claim (j). But the Court requires very clear evidence that the demand was seriously pressed by the wife, and will not charge the husband's estate from any idle complaints against his receipt which the wife may have occasionally made (k). There can be no acquiescence by the wife, and, therefore, no waiver of her rights where the income has not actually come to the hands of the husband, as where it is still in the hands of a receiver (a).

Case of feme covert being non compos.

46. As the Court proceeds upon the notion of the wife's acquiescence, the question arises where she is non compos, and so incapable of waiving her right, whether the husband's estate shall not be liable for the entire arrears; and it would seem that in such a case the husband's estate must account for the whole, but will be entitled to an allowance for payments made for the wife's benefit, and which ought properly to have fallen on her separate estate (b).

Case of pin-money whether an exception.

47. In Howard v. Digby (c), a woman's pin-money was distinguished from ordinary separate use, and it was held as to pin-money that the wife's representative (d) could make no claim to any arrears. The ground upon which the House proceeded was that pin-money was for the personal use and ornament of the wife, and the husband had a right to see the fund properly applied, and that if the husband himself found the necessaries for which the pin-money was intended, the wife or her representative could have no claim against the husband's estate when the requirements for her personal use and ornament had ceased (e). Lord St. Leonards has justly questioned these principles (f), and it remains to be seen whether any distinction between pin-money and separate use generally can be maintained.

Gift of corpus to husband not presumed.

48. As regards the corpus of the separate estate no presumption arises in favour of a husband who has received it. He is primâ facie a trustee for his wife, and a gift from her to him will not be inferred without clear evidence (g), [enabling the Court to come to the conclusion that she deliberately gave the property to him (h). Thus, where a legacy bequeathed to the separate use of a wife was paid by a banker's draft payable to her order, and she indorsed the draft and handed it over to her husband, who paid it into his own bank, and had the amount carried over to a deposit account in his name, it was held that this was not sufficient to deprive the wife of her right (a). So where shares in a company, which were appropriated to a married woman as part of her share of a residue bequeathed to her for her separate use, were transferred into the name of the husband, and he made an entry in his ledger that the shares were part of his wife's portion of the testator's estate, the separate use of the wife was not destroyed (b); and the husband's estate was held liable for the proceeds of new shares which had been allotted in respect of the old shares, and had been sold by him (c), and it has been regarded as a material circumstance that the wife has concurred in the transfer to the husband without having previously had any independent advice (d).] But the employment of the money by the husband in his business and for his family expenditure with the knowledge and assent of his wife, will, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, amount to a gift by her (e). [And where a joint account was opened at a bank in the names of the husband and wife, and each of them had power to draw on the account, and each of them had also a separate account at other bankers, and the moneys credited to the joint account were chiefly derived from the wife's separate income, it was held that the moneys paid in had ceased to be part of the separate estate of the wife (f).]

Feme not bound to contribute to household expenses.

49. Occasionally a feme covert has a large income from property settled to her separate use, and being of penurious habits accumulates the whole, and yet looks to her much poorer husband for her support. This is a hard case, but it is said that the Court cannot advert to the question whether she accumulates or not (g).

[Trespass on wife's separate property.]

[50. Where the house in which the wife resides is settled to her separate use, and the husband has been guilty of improper conduct, and claims to use the house not for the purpose of consorting with his wife, but for his own purposes, the Court will grant an injunction to restrain him from entering the house (h).

bought out of her own earnings, can sue a stranger for a trespass in having entered the house without her leave, even though the entry was made under the authority of her husband (a).]

Separate use may extend to corpus, or to income beyond coverture.

51. It has never been questioned that if personal estate be given to a feme covert for her separate use, her power of disposition extends over the corpus; and so, if the income of property be limited to a feme covert for her life, either in possession or reversion, for her separate use, or if the absolute interest be given to her in reversion for her separate use, if it appear that the separate use applies not only to the income accruing during the coverture, but to the life estate, or absolute reversionary interest, the feme may aliene the whole life estate, or absolute reversionary interest (b). The question in these cases is one of construction only, and therefore where the fund was settled upon trust for a feme covert "absolutely," and "during her life for her separate use," her power was held not to extend beyond the life estate (c). But if personalty had been limited to the separate use upon a mere contingency (as on the insolvency of the husband, an event which had not yet occurred), it seems that the feme covert could not, pending the contingency, have aliened or otherwise disposed of her possible interest (d). [But since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, as to cases falling within that Act, a married woman can dispose of a contingent interest (e).]

Separate use in reference to real estate.

52. As regards realty it was formerly held that the feme covert could not by virtue of the separate use, if there were no express power, dispose of the freehold, at least not for any larger interest than during her life (f), for between real and personal estate it was said there was this distinction, that on the death of the feme in her husband's lifetime, the absolute interest in the personal estate would devolve on the husband, but the inheritance of the real estate would descend upon the heir, who was not to be disinherited but in some formal mode. However, the favour shown anciently to the heir has in later times been disregarded; and at the present day, if lands be conveyed to a trustee and his heirs upon trust as to the fee simple for a feme covert "for her separate use," she may deal with the fee as if she were a feme sole. It is simply a question of intention. A married woman may have limited to her a power of disposition over a fee simple estate, and if it appear clearly that the separate use was meant to extend to the fee, she ought upon principle to be able to deal with the absolute property by virtue of the separate use, whether by act inter vivos, or by testamentary instrument, as fully as she might in the case of personal estate (a). And so it has been decided both in Ireland and England (b). But the feme covert has not been regarded as a feme sole in respect of the fee simple, unless it clearly appeared from the instrument itself that the fee simple, and not the mere life estate, was limited to the separate use (c).

[The mere renunciation by an intended husband of his marital rights in his wife's realty is not sufficient to clothe her with a testamentary power, or to constitute a valid declaration of trust of the fee (d).

Under the recent Act (e), the whole interest in real estate given to a married woman belongs to her as her separate estate, and can be disposed of by her accordingly (f).

[Feme covert can bar an equitable entail.]

53. If a married woman be equitable tenant in tail in possession of real estate, which is settled to her separate use, she can under the provisions of the Fines and Recoveries Act bar the entail, with the concurrence of her husband (a), and the husband's power of concurring will not be affected by his bankruptcy (b); and in cases falling within the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the concurrence of the husband is unnecessary (c).]

Feme covert as protector.

54. If a legal estate be limited to a married woman for her life for her sole and separate use, without the interposition of a trustee, with remainder in tail, the wife is the sole protector of the settlement, and the husband's consent in barring the entail is not necessary (d).

[Exception of settlements from the operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]

[55. A very important exception from the operation of the recent Act is contained in sect. 19, which controls the general powers of disposition conferred by the previous sections by providing that "nothing in this Act contained shall interfere with or affect any settlement or agreement for a settlement, made or to be made, whether before or after marriage, respecting the property of any married woman." The construction of this enactment is attended with great difficulty; but the effect of it, so far as can be gathered from the decided cases, is that the operation of a settlement is to be determined just as it would have been under the pre-existing law, so that no one who under that law could have taken any interest is to be deprived thereof (e). The true construction of the section, so far as it affects property of the married woman falling within the operation of sect. 5, has been said by Cotton, L.J., to be that "it prevents the previous enactment" (i.e. sect. 5) "from interfering with any settlement which would have bound the property if the Act had not passed" (f). Thus where a settlement contains a covenant for settlement of after-acquired property belonging to the wife, such covenant will, it would seem, though entered into by the husband only, bind all her property as fully as it would if the Act had never been passed (a), and she will be obliged to bring into settlement property to which she would otherwise have been entitled as her separate property under the provisions of the Act. And a postnuptial settlement of a feme covert's property on herself with a restraint on anticipation, made by her subsequently to the passing of the Act and after she had contracted a liability, was held to be protected by the clause (b).

When, however, it has once been ascertained that a married woman takes an interest under a settlement, the incidents annexed by the Act to the property of married women attach to the interest so taken by her, and on her becoming discovert, and then marrying again, she will hold such interest as her separate property in accordance with the Act (c); and an alienation, whether voluntary or involuntary, by the married woman is not an interference with or an act affecting the settlement, even though such an alienation would not have been practicable before the Act. Thus where the feme carried on a trade separately from her husband and became bankrupt, her separate life interest under a settlement passed to her trustee in bankruptcy under sect. 1, sub-sect. 5 of the Act (d).

56. It still remains to treat of restraint of anticipation.

Clause restraining anticipation.

The clause against the feme's anticipation is of comparatively modern growth. In Hulme v. Tenant (e) it was held that a limitation to the separate use simply did not prevent the feme from aliening. In Pybus v. Smith (f) great pains had been taken in framing the separate use, and the income was made payable as the feme should by writing under her proper hand from time to time appoint, but it was again decided that the feme could even then dispose of her interest. After this Lord Thurlow happened to be nominated a trustee of Miss Watson's settlement, and he directed the insertion of the words "and not by anticipation" (g), from which time this has been the usual formulary, and the effect of it for the purpose of excluding the power of disposition has never been questioned.

No particular form of words required to restrain anticipation.

57. But although these words are now almost universally employed they are not absolutely indispensable, for if the intention to restrain anticipation can be clearly collected from the whole instrument it is sufficient (a); as if there be a direction to pay the income to such persons as the feme shall after it has become due appoint (b), or for her sole separate and inalienable use (c); [or her receipt to the trustees is to be given after the rents shall become due from time to time (d).] But if the limitation be merely to the sole and separate use, or to pay from time to time upon her receipt under her own proper hand (e), or if the trust be to pay her upon her personal appearance (f), the feme is left at liberty to part with her interest, for such expressions are, as Lord Eldon observed, "only an unfolding of all that is implied in the gift to the separate use" (g). Where a testator directs a daughter's share of his estate to be "so settled that she may enjoy the income during her life for her separate use," the trust is executory, and the Court will insert a clause against anticipation (h); and if upon marriage a fund be articled to be vested in the wife and a co-trustee in trust for herself, but not to be disposed of without the consent of both parties, the wife cannot anticipate without the consent of the co-trustee (i).

Effect before marriage of the clause against anticipation.

58. A widow may, after her husband's death (j), and a feme sole may, before marriage (k), dispose absolutely of a gift limited to her separate use, though coupled with words purporting to restrain her power of anticipation; and the principle is briefly this—that wherever a person possessing an interest, however remote a possibility, is sui juris, that person cannot be prevented by any intention of the donor from exercising the ordinary rights of proprietorship. The fund may be limited "in trust for the separate use of the feme," or "in trust for her, and in the event of her marriage, for her separate use," or "in trust for her separate use in the event of her marriage," without the gift of any estate independently of that contingency; but in all these cases the interest, whether vested or contingent, is in favour of one who is now sui juris, and who therefore cannot be restrained from disposing of property to which she either now is, or may eventually become entitled.

The clause against anticipation will operate upon the marriage.

59. It was formerly held by Sir L. Shadwell, that while the separate use took effect upon marriage (a), a general clause against anticipation not made with reference to the marriage was nugatory (b). Lord Langdale, with more consistency, held that in the absence of alienation during discoverture, both the separate use and also the clause against anticipation came into operation upon marriage (c). And it was so finally decided by Lord Cottenham on appeal (d).

Brown v. Bamford.

60. It was also held in a case (e) before Sir L. Shadwell, that if a fund be vested in trustees upon trust to pay the proceeds to such persons and for such purposes as a feme covert shall, when and as they become due, appoint, but so as not to charge or anticipate the same, and in default of appointment to pay the same into the hands of the feme for her separate use (without the addition of any words to restrain her power of anticipation), if the feme covert assign the life estate limited to her in default of appointment, it destroys the power, and the restriction upon the anticipation annexed to it is nugatory. Such a doctrine would have led to great inconvenience, as the precedents of the most approved conveyancers were known to have been frequently expressed in that form, and the decision after failing to secure the assent of other judges (f) was ultimately reversed on appeal (g). The substantial intention was taken to be, that the payment into her hands, as well as the power to appoint, was not to operate until the annual proceeds had become actually due.

[Release of power of appointment.]

[Where property was held in trust for a married woman for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and after her death for such persons as she should by will appoint, it was held by the Court of Appeal in Ireland, reversing the decision of the Judge of first instance, that she could, while under coverture, extinguish the power (a).

[Gift over on anticipating income.]

Where by a will a life interest was given to a married woman with a restraint on anticipation and a gift over on her decease or on her anticipating the income, and she afterwards executed an assignment by way of mortgage, it was held that the assignment being wholly inoperative no forfeiture had taken place, and that the word "anticipating" could not be read as equivalent to attempting to anticipate (b).]

Absolute gift followed by restraint of anticipation.

61. Where there is an absolute gift of bank annuities—i.e. of a perpetual annuity redeemable by the State, to a married woman, followed by a restraint against anticipation, she cannot aliene during coverture (c); and generally where property is given absolutely to a married woman, but clogged with a clause restraining anticipation, [and an intention is shown by the instrument giving the property that the income only is to be paid to her,] she cannot aliene either income or corpus during the coverture (d). [But where a testatrix gave the proceeds of a mixed fund of realty and personalty to trustees upon trust to invest the residue after payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies in specified securities, and to pay the income to A. for life, and after her death (which occurred in the testatrix's lifetime) to divide and pay the said residue between B. and C., one of whom was a married woman, and there was a declaration that every gift to a married woman was to be for her separate use without power of anticipation, V. C. Bacon drew a distinction between a gift of a sum of money and of a fund producing income, and held that in that case the gift was equivalent to a gift of a sum of money, and that the restraint against anticipation would not prevent the married woman from receiving her share of the residue (a).

But this distinction has been disapproved of, and cannot be supported upon principle; and the true test, as to whether a clause against anticipation is effectual to prevent a married woman from requiring the payment or transfer of property given absolutely to her subject to such a restraint, is whether upon the construction of the whole document the intention is or is not shown that the trustees should retain the property and pay the income to the married woman (b). And the mere circumstance that the property given absolutely to the married woman is subject to a particular estate, is not a sufficient ground for confining the restraint to the continuance of that estate (c). But if the interest of the married woman is reversionary, a clause against anticipation, even though not effectual to interfere with her right to receive the property when it falls into possession, may be an effectual restraint on her power of assigning it by way of anticipation so long as it is reversionary (d).

62. A married woman cannot, by a deed acknowledged under the Fines and Recoveries Act, dispose of an interest in land as to which her anticipation is restrained (e). But where an equitable estate tail was limited to a married woman for her separate use, and it was also provided that the rents and profits were to be paid to her without power of alienation or anticipation, it was held that this did not prevent her from barring the entail and limiting the equitable fee to herself. For that was not an alienation so as to deprive herself of anything; it was not, strictly speaking, an alienation at all, except in a very wide sense of the term. It was what was always called an enlargement of the estate (f).

[(f) Cooper v. Macdonald, 7 Ch. Div.

[Enlarging long term into a fee.]

63. So a married woman entitled to a long term for her separate use may, if the case falls within the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, enlarge the term into a fee simple, notwithstanding her anticipation may be restrained (a).

[Restraint against anticipation not avoided by fraud.]

64. The clause against anticipation cannot be got over even in the case of deliberate fraud by the feme covert. Thus where a feme covert, by fraudulently suppressing the restraint on anticipation, obtained an advance on the mortgage of property limited to her separate use, it was held upon an application by her that the property was protected against the mortgage by the clause restraining her anticipation (b).]

Court could not discharge the clause against anticipation.

65. Where the clause against anticipation had once attached, even a Court of equity [could not until a recent Act have] discharged it, though alienation [might have been] for the feme covert's own advantage (c). An estate so settled may, however, be subject to paramount equities, as for raising costs of suit, [or for antenuptial debts (d),] which may enable the Court to direct a sale (e); and in case of adultery by the wife may be dealt with by the Divorce Court under the provisions of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5 (f); and as a married woman whose anticipation is restrained may still employ a solicitor to defend her right to the separate use, the solicitor so employed may acquire a lien on the separate estate for his costs thereby incurred (g).

[In a recent case where a married woman entitled to the income of a trust fund for her life with a restraint upon anticipation took proceedings for the execution of the trust, in the course of which an application by her was dismissed with costs, Pearson, J., gave the trustees liberty to retain their costs out of the plaintiff's income, and said "that the restraint on anticipation was intended for the protection of a married woman outside the Court; it was not intended to enable her to do a wrong in the Court. It did not fetter the power of the Court in any case in which it thought that she was not entitled to that protection" (a). But this is inconsistent with principle and with the earlier authorities, and has since been overruled (b).

66. Now, by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 39, the Court may, "notwithstanding that a married woman is restrained from anticipation, where it appears to the Court to be for her benefit, by judgment or order, with her consent, bind her interest in any property." [May now, under 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41.]

Applications under this section should be made by summons, and not on petition (c).

The power of the Court is discretionary, and only to be exercised where a strong case is made out (d). The Court must be satisfied that it will be for the benefit of the wife to accede to the application (e), and will not bind her interest where the object is to benefit the husband (f); or to benefit herself by releasing a power conferred on her to appoint amongst her children (g); but where a married woman, who was entitled to the income of a fund for her life for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder in the events which happened for her appointees by will, and in default of appointment for herself absolutely, had contracted debts and was being harassed by her creditors, the Court made an order binding the property (h). So in a case where the wife, who was entitled to a considerable income, was living with her husband who had been adjudged bankrupt, was being harassed by his creditors to whom she had given acceptances, and was suffering in health from pecuniary embarrassment, the Court made an order relieving part of the income from the restraint (a). And where two married women were tenants in common, and by reason of their being restrained from anticipation there was a difficulty in granting leases, the Court made an order (b). The restraint has also been removed for the purpose of enabling the retention of an unauthorized but beneficial investment (c), and the carrying on of a trade by trustees for the benefit of a married woman separated from her husband (d), and to preserve from eviction an estate to which the feme was entitled in reversion for life (e). The Court has no power simply to remove the restraint; it can only bind the married woman's interest in spite of the restraint, when a disposition is made of the property which the Court considers to be for her benefit (f).

Where the Court is satisfied by the evidence of the consent of the married woman, it will not require her separate examination (g).

Restraint of anticipation void for perpetuity

67. The restraint against alienation may also be void for perpetuity, as if a fund be settled on A.'s marriage upon himself for life, with a power to A. to appoint to his issue, A. cannot appoint to his daughters as the issue of the marriage for their sole and separate use without power of anticipation, for this would prevent alienation for more than a life in being, and twenty-one years, which the law does not allow (h).

[Where, in a postnuptial settlement, the trusts were, after the death of the husband and wife and in default of appointment, for sons at twenty-one and daughters at twenty-one, or marriage, but the daughters' shares were for their separate use without power of anticipation, it was held that as to the daughters in esse at the time of the settlement the restraint against anticipation was valid (a). In one case a restraint on anticipation attached to the interests of the children of a woman who, at the date of the will creating the interests, was past child-bearing, was held valid (b), but this decision has been questioned on the ground that evidence that a person is past child-bearing is not admissible for the purpose of giving validity to a gift which would otherwise be void for remoteness (c).

[Election where property subject to the restraint.]

68. Opinions have differed as to whether a feme covert can be put to her election to give up, or make compensation out of, property as to which her anticipation is restrained, and the authorities on the point were for some time about evenly balanced (d), but it has now been decided by the Court of Appeal that she cannot be called upon to elect (e).]

Settlement of accounts.

69. It has been held that a clause against anticipation, though applicable to the fund when raised, does not prevent a feme covert from adjusting the amount of the fund with the trustees (f).

Breach of trust.

70. Compensation for a breach of trust by a feme covert in respect of settled property cannot be enforced, even against a fund limited by the same settlement to her separate use without power of anticipation (g).

garded in the light of arrears but of future income, and therefore the feme covert, if anticipation be restrained, has no power over it (a).

Arrears of income.

72. The clause against anticipation does not prevent the operation of the rule, that if the husband be allowed to receive the wife's income she or her personal representative cannot recover more than one year's income, if so much (b) ; and the contracts or other engagements of the wife, which would affect her separate use generally, may be enforced against arrears already accrued, and which consequently have become emancipated from the clause against anticipation (c); [and the period of the restraint is determined by the instrument creating it, and will not be enlarged or its cesser arrested by an order of Court, made for convenience of administration and directing payment on specified days (d).

[Liability to costs.]

Where a married woman is suing under sect. 1, sub-sect. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (e), damages or costs recovered against her are payable out of her separate property, and arrears of income as to which anticipation by her was restrained, which have accrued due to her, and which she could therefore validly charge in the hands of her trustees, are available for payment of costs which she is ordered to pay to them in proceedings instituted by her while the restraint was still subsisting (f).

[Restraint of anticipation unaffected by the late Act.]

73. The 19th section of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, after the provision already noticed protecting settlements and agreements for settlements from the operation of the Act (g), proceeds to enact further that nothing in the Act contained "shall interfere with or render inoperative any restriction against anticipation at present attached or hereafter to be attached to the enjoyment of any property or income by a woman under any settlement, agreement for a settlement, will, or other instrument; but no restriction on anticipation contained in any settlement or agreement for a settlement of a woman's own property to be made or entered into by herself shall have any validity against debts contracted by her before marriage, and no settlement or agreement for a settlement shall have any greater force or validity against creditors of such woman than a like settlement or agreement for a settlement made or entered into by a man would have against his creditors."

The effect of this section, construed together with section 1 of the Act (a), is that the contract or engagement of a married woman does not bind any property as to which anticipation by her is restrained, whether such property belongs to her at the time when the contract is entered into or is acquired subsequently, though the coverture may have afterwards determined (b); but where the restraint on anticipation determines during the coverture the property which has thus become free separate property of the feme will fall within the provisions of sect. 1, and be bound by any contract subsequently entered into by her under the Act, or by any contract previously entered into whereby her other separate property is bound (c).

A debt contracted by the feme during a previous coverture is a debt contracted by her before marriage within the meaning of the section (d).

The concluding clause of the section applies only to settlements made after the passing of the Act (e). It is to be read in connection with the first clause (f), and does not prevent a married woman, as against creditors whose debts were incurred after her marriage, from settling her separate property by a postnuptial settlement on herself with a restraint on anticipation (g).

[Powers under Settled Land Act, 1882, not impaired by restraint on anticipation.]

74. A restraint on anticipation in a settlement will not prevent a married woman from exercising any power given to her as tenant for life, or as a person having the powers of a tenant for life, by the Settled Land Act, 1882 (h).

[(a) In Ashworth v. Outram, 5 Ch. D. 923, 939, Lord Coleridge commenting upon this section, observed, "It clearly means to protect the wages and earnings gained or acquired by a woman, while married, in any employment or trade carried on separately from her husband. It seems to me the Vice-Chancellor was justified in finding as a fact that this person was engaged in an 'employment, occupation or trade,' after the marriage separately from her husband, and the wages and earnings acquired in such employment, occupation or trade, are admitted to be protected. But how far does this carry us? It seems to me that it must carry the protection, I will not say beyond the wages and earnings, but it must carry the protection of the wages and earnings to those things which are necessary to make the wages and earnings which are to be protected. Therefore, the effect of the Act, if fairly construed, is to protect the trade or business of the married woman which she carries on separately from her husband, for without the protection of the trade itself it is manifest that the protection of the wages and earnings of the trade is impossible;" and see Lovell v. Newton, 4 C. or upon the funds of any industrial and provident society, or any friendly society, benefit building society or loan society, to the holding of which share, benefit, or debenture no liability was attached, to be entered in her name to her separate use, which should thereupon be deemed her separate property.

S. 7. That where any woman married after the date of the Act should during coverture become entitled to any personal property as next of kin (a), or any sum not exceeding 200*l.* under any deed or will, such property should belong to her for her separate use.

S. 8. That where any freehold or copyhold property should descend upon any woman married after the passing of the Act, the rents and profits (b) thereof should belong to her for her separate use.

S. 10. That a married woman might effect a policy of insurance upon her own life, or the life of her husband for her separate use, and that a policy of insurance effected by any married man on his own life, and expressed upon the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife or his wife and children, should be deemed a trust for the benefit of the wife for her separate use, and of the children; [and that when the sum secured by the policy should become payable, or at any time previously, a trustee (c) thereof might be appointed by the Court of Chancery, or the Judge of the County Court of the district in which the insurance office was situated, and that the receipt of such trustee should be a good discharge (d).]

(a) The amount coming to her as next of kin appears to be without limit; [so now decided Re Voss, 13 Ch. D. 504.]

[(b) The object of this section has been held by Stirling, J., to be simply to remove and put aside the interest of the husband, and not to give the wife an enlarged dominion over her property; and accordingly the separate use created by the section does not authorize a dealing with the fee; Johnson v. Johnson, 35 Ch. D. 345.]

[(c) Where the fund was to be retained on behalf of infants, the Court declined to appoint a single trustee under this section; Re Howson's Policy Trusts, W. N. 1885, p. 213.]‖

[(d) Upon an application under this section the Court declared the rights and interests of the wife and children of the deceased, and directed a proper settlement of the fund; Re Mellor's Policy Trusts, 6 Ch. D. 127. In this case a husband effected a policy on his own life under the Married Women's Property Act, for the benefit of his wife and children, but the interest they were to take was not expressed on the face of the policy. On an application to the Chancery Division by the widow and children (who were two daughters) V. C. Malins at first appointed two trustees of the policy moneys, and declared that they were "to hold the moneys when received upon trust to pay thereout the costs, and to invest the residue in securities authorized by the Court, and to pay the income to the widow for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder (as to both capital and income) for the children on attaining 21 or marriage under

Married Women's Property Act, 1870.

S. 12. That a husband should not by reason of any marriage after the passing of the Act be liable for the debts of his wife contracted before marriage (a), and that the wife should be liable to be sued for, and any property belonging to her for her separate use should be liable to satisfy such debts, as if she had continued unmarried (b).

Married Women's Property Act, 1874.

[76. By the Amendment Act of 1874 (c), as to marriages which took place after the 30th July, 1874, by the 1st section the liability of the husband was restored, but by the subsequent sections his liability was confined to the extent of the fortune of the wife received, or which ought to have been received, by him, if he pleaded that limit to his liability; but it was in the option of the husband either to claim this limit to his liability or not, and if he did not so claim it, he was liable for the wife's debts in the same manner as the husband originally was at common law. Under this Act, therefore, in a statement of claim by a creditor that age in equal shares, and if but one the whole for that one, with remainder (as to both capital and income) if neither child attained 21 or married under that age for the widow absolutely." But on a subsequent application in the same matter, 7 Ch. D. 200, the V. C. reconsidered this decision, and directed the policy moneys to be distributed in thirds between the widow and two children. This case was disapproved of in Re Adam's Policy Trusts, 23 Ch. D. 525, where Chitty, J., held that the Court had no jurisdiction under this section to do more than make an order appointing a trustee, and intimated an opinion that a policy by a husband under this section "for the benefit of his wife and children," should be read in conjunction with the section, and that the proper construction was, by virtue of the words "separate use" in the section, for the benefit of the wife for her life with remainder to the children as joint tenants. But in Re Seyton, 34 Ch. D. 511, North, J., disapproved of the case last cited, and held that under such a policy, whether it was to be considered alone (as he appears to have thought it ought to be) or jointly with the Act, the widow and children took as joint tenants. It is doubtful whether, since the Act of 1882, this section now remains in force for any purpose (see sect. 11 of that Act, post, p. 903). Where the appointment by the Court of a new trustee is required, the petition should be entitled also in the matter of the Trustee Act, and in the matter of the Act of 1882, Re Soutar's Policy Trusts, 26 Ch. D. 236; and the Court can under its general jurisdiction appoint two new trustees, Schultze v. Schultze, 56 L. J. Ch. 356; 56 L. T. N.S. 231.]

of the wife against the husband and wife, it was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege that the husband had received or with reasonable diligence might have received assets of the wife, but the husband, intending to rely upon the Act, was put to claim the benefit of it in his defence (a).

[Repeal of Acts of 1870 and 1874.]

77. The Married Women's Property Act, 1870, and the Amendment Act of 1874, have now been repealed by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, but without prejudice to "any act done or right acquired while either of such Acts was in force, or any right or liability of any husband or wife, married before the 1st January, 1883, to sue or be sued under the provisions of the repealed Acts, for or in respect of any debt, contract, wrong, or other matter or thing whatsoever, for or in respect of which any such right or liability shall have accrued" before that date (b). It may therefore still be necessary in many cases to refer to the provisions of the repealed Acts.

[Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]

78. By the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, it is in effect enacted:—

S. 1. sub-s. (5). That every married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall, in respect of her separate property (c), be subject to the bankruptcy laws as if she were a feme sole (d).

S. 3. That any money or other estate of the wife lent or intrusted (e) by her to her husband for the purposes of any trade or business carried on by him or otherwise, shall be treated as assets of his estate in case of his bankruptcy, she being entitled to a dividend as a creditor for the amount or value of such money or estate after all claims of the other creditors for valuable consideration have been satisfied (f).

[45 & 46 Vict. c. 75.]

S. 6. That all deposits in any post office or other savings bank, or in any other bank, all annuities granted by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt or by any other person, and all sums forming part of the public stocks or funds, or of any other stocks or funds transferable in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of any other bank, which, at the commencement of the Act (1st January, 1883), are standing in the sole name of a married woman, and all shares, stock, debentures, debenture stock, or other interests of or in any corporation, company, or public body, municipal, commercial, or otherwise, or of or in any industrial, provident, friendly, benefit, building, or loan society, which at the commencement of the Act are standing in her name (a), shall be deemed, unless and until the contrary be shown, to be the separate property of such married woman; and the fact that such property is standing in the sole name of a married woman shall be sufficient primâ facie evidence that she is beneficially entitled thereto for her separate use, so as to empower her to receive or transfer the same, and to receive the dividends, interest, and profits thereof, without the concurrence of her husband, and to indemnify persons mentioned in the Act in respect thereof.

S. 7. That all such deposits, annuities, sums, shares, stock, debentures, debenture stock, and other interests as referred to in the last section, which after the commencement of the Act shall be allotted to or made to stand in the sole name of a married woman shall be deemed, unless and until the contrary be shown, to be her separate property, in respect of which, so far as any liability may be incident thereto, her separate estate shall alone be liable.

The words "or otherwise" mean either alone or in partnership, and either personally or by an agent, so that the section has no application to a loan by the wife to the husband for purposes unconnected with his trade or business; Re Tidswell, 56 L. J. Q. B. 548; 35 W. R. 669; but see Alexander v. Barnhill, 21 L. R. Ir. 511. And as the section refers only to the bankruptcy of the husband it does not preclude a widow as administratrix from retaining out of the insolvent estate of her intestate husband money advanced by her out of her separate property to him for the purposes of his business; Re May, 45 Ch. D. 499. On the other hand, in the case of the bankruptcy of the husband the onus will be on the wife, proving for such an amount, to show that it was not lent for the purposes of his trade or business; Re Genese, 16 Q. of any shares or stock therein, to which any liability may be incident, contrary to the provisions of the instrument regulating such corporation or company. [45 & 46 Vict. c. 75.]

S. 8. That the provisions of sects. 6 and 7 shall apply, so far as relates to the estate, right, title, or interest of the married woman, to any deposits, &c., in the name of any married woman jointly with any persons or person other than her husband.

S. 9. That it shall not be necessary for the husband of any married woman in respect of her interest to join in the transfer of any deposit, &c., affected by the 6th, 7th, or 8th sects.

S. 11. That a married woman may effect a policy upon her own life or the life of her husband for her separate use.

And that a policy of assurance effected by any man on his own life, and expressed to be for the benefit of his wife, or of his children, or of his wife and children, or any of them, or by any woman on her own life, and expressed to be for the benefit of her husband, or of her children, or of her husband and children, or any of them, shall create a trust in favour of the objects therein named. And that the insured may by the policy, or by any memorandum, appoint a trustee or trustees of the monies payable under the policy, and from time to time appoint a new trustee or new trustees thereof, and may make provision for the appointment of a new trustee or new trustees thereof, and for the investment of the policy monies; and that in default of any such appointment such policy shall vest in the insured in trust for the purposes aforesaid. If, at any time, there shall be no trustee, or it shall be expedient to appoint a new trustee or new trustees the appointment may be made by any Court having jurisdiction under the Trustee Act, 1850, or the Acts amending the same.

S. 13. That a woman after her marriage shall continue liable to the extent of her separate estate for her ante-nuptial debts, contracts, or wrongs, and may be sued accordingly, and all sums recovered against her shall be payable out of her separate property, and as between her and her husband, unless there be any contract between them to the contrary, her separate property shall be primarily liable (a).

S. 14. That a husband shall be liable for his wife's ante-nuptial debts, contracts and wrongs, to the extent of her property which he shall have acquired or become entitled to, from or through his wife, after deducting payments made by him, and sums for which judgment may have been recovered against him, in respect of such debts, contracts, or wrongs (a).

S. 15. That a husband and wife may be jointly sued in respect of any such debt or liability if the plaintiff shall seek to establish his claim against both of them.

S. 21. That a married woman having separate property shall be subject to all such liability for the maintenance of her children and grandchildren (b) as the husband is now by law subject to for the maintenance of her children and grandchildren: provided that nothing in the Act shall relieve her husband from any liability imposed upon him by law to maintain her children or grandchildren.

Various other important provisions of the Act are incorporated into this work in places which seemed convenient. For the provisions of minor importance the Act should be referred to.

[Agricultural Holdings Act.]

79. The Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (c), enacts in sect. 26, that "a woman married before the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, entitled for her separate use to land, her title to which accrued before such commencement as aforesaid, and not restrained from anticipation, shall for the purposes of this Act be in respect of land as if she were unmarried." And that "where any other woman married before the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is desirous of doing any act under this Act in respect of land, her title to which accrued before such commencement as aforesaid, her husband's concurrence shall be requisite," and she is to be separately examined by the County Court, or by the Judge of the County Court, for the place where she for the time being is.

The words "any other woman" here used are inaccurate, but are apparently intended to apply to a woman who does not, under the preceding clause, acquire the powers of an unmarried woman. It is, however, conceived that there is nothing in the section empowering a married woman whose anticipation is restrained to bind her interest.

[(a) It will be observed that the language of the 14th section, the effect of which is given shortly in the text, differs materially from that of the Act of 1874, and Matthews v. Whittle, 13 Ch. D. 811, has no application to a case under the Act of 1882. Under this and the following section the husband can avail himself of the Statute of Limitations in respect of his wife's ante-nuptial debt as from the time when the debt accrued due against her; Beck v. Pierce, 33 Q. B. Div. 316.]

By the same section the County Court is empowered to appoint, and change or remove any next friend of a married woman required for the purposes of the Act (a).]

SECTION VII.

OF JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE CESTUI QUE TRUST.

BEFORE entering upon this topic, it may be useful to notice briefly how legal interests stand affected by judgments.

Writs of Execution at common law.

1. At common law the plaintiff in the action had only two writs of execution open to him against the property of the defendant: the fieri facias, to levy the debt de bonis et catallis; and the levari facias, to levy it de terris et catallis (b). The execution under the latter writ, however, embraced no interest in land of a higher description than a mere chattel interest, and affected not the possession of the lands (c), but merely enabled the sheriff, besides taking the chattels, to levy the debt from the present profits, as from the rents payable by the tenants (d), and the emblements (e), that is, the corn and other crops at the time growing on the lands (f). If the sheriff, when he made his return, had not levied the full amount of the debt, a new levari facias might have issued, to be executed by the sheriff in like manner (g) (1).

[(a) 46 & 47 Vict. c. 61, s. 26.]
(b) Finch's Law, 471.
(c) Ib.; Sir E. Cooke's case, Godb. 290.

(f) Harbert's case, 3 Rep. 11 b.; 2 Inst. 304; 2 Bac. Ab. Execution (C) 4, note (b).
(g) F. N. B. 265.

(1) There was also another species of levari facias, of which the plaintiff might under particular circumstances, have indirectly availed himself. In case the defendant was outlawed in the action, the sheriff, on the issuing of the capias utlagatum, took an inquisition of the lands of the debtor, and extended their value, and made his return to the Exchequer. A levari facias from the Crown then followed, commanding the sheriff to levy the extended value de exitibus, from the issues of the lands, till the plaintiff should be satisfied his debt. These issues were defined to be the "rents and revenues of the land, corn in the grange, and all moveables, except horses, harness, and household stuff;" 13 Ed. 1. c. 39, st. 1; 2 Inst. 453. The sheriff might have agisted or mown the grass; Britten v. Cole, 5 Mod. 118, per Lord Holt. But if at the date of the inquisition, Statute of Westminster.

2. In order to provide for the creditor a more effectual remedy, the Statute of Westminster (a) introduced the writ of elegit, and enacted, that when the debt was recovered or knowledged, or damages awarded, the suitor should at his choice (whence the term elegit) have a writ of fieri facias (b), from the debtor's lands and chattels, or that the sheriff should deliver to him all the chattels of the debtor, except his oxen and beasts of the plough, and one-half of his land until the debt should be levied upon a reasonable price or extent. It was by virtue of this statute that judgment creditors were first enabled to sue execution of one moiety of the debtor's lands, whether vested in him at the time of the judgment or subsequently acquired.

[Levari facias abolished in civil proceedings.]

[Now by the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (c) it is enacted that (1), The sheriff shall not under a writ of elegit deliver the goods of a debtor nor shall a writ of elegit extend to goods; and (2), No writ of levari facias shall hereafter be issued in any civil proceeding.]

We now come to the inquiry, what is the effect of judgments upon equitable interests.

Fieri facias as regards trusts.

1. With respect to the fieri facias, it is clear that under the system of uses no relief could have been granted; for the creditor, coming in by operation of law, did not possess that privity of estate which could alone confer upon him the right to sue a subpœna. During the earlier period of trusts the same technical notions prevailed; but Lord Nottingham introduced more liberal doctrines, and established the principle that a creditor, prevented from executing the legal process by the interposition of a trust, might come into Chancery, and prosecute an equitable fieri facias (d).

Trusts not bound by it before execution sued out.

2. But, as the analogy to law must be strictly pursued, the the agistment was already let, the money agreed to be paid was a sum in gross, and was not subject to the levari facias; S. C. 1 Raym. 307, per eundem. The cattle of a stranger, if levant and couchant on the land, were seizable under the writ, as included in the word "issues"; S. C. Ib. 305. The lands were bound by the levari facias from the date of the writ, so that any subsequent disposition, though it served to pass the freehold and possession, yet did not interrupt the king's title to the profits; Ib. 307, per Lord Holt.

trust of a chattel could never have been attached in equity until the writ of execution was actually sued out; for till that time there was no lien upon the debtor's effects, which was the very ground of the application (a).

Nor where the legal estate is not liable.

3. And as equity only follows, and does not enlarge the law, the judgment creditor has no title to relief where the chattel of which the trust has been created, is not in itself amenable to any legal process. An opinion, indeed, is subjoined to the case of Horn v. Horn in Ambler (b), that a trust of stock might, before the late Act, have been taken by a judgment creditor in equitable execution; and Taylor v. Jones (c), before Sir W. Fortescue, M.R., was even a decision to the same effect; but such a doctrine, inasmuch as stock could not have been reached at law, was clearly contrary to all principle, and afterwards incurred the express disapprobation of Lord Thurlow (d), Lord Manners (e), Sir W. Mac-Mahon (f), Sir Archibald Macdonald (g), and Lord Eldon (h); Lord Thurlow observing, that the opinion in Horn v. Horn was so anomalous and unfounded, that forty such would not satisfy his mind (i). However, by the Act of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 (j) various descriptions of property, formerly exempt, are now liable to be taken in execution, and the remedy of the creditor in equity must be deemed to be enlarged accordingly (k); and the same statute provides a special procedure for reaching a judgment debtor's interest in stock, whether legal or equitable (l).

Equity of redemption.

4. The judgment creditor is entitled to the like relief against the equity of redemption of a chattel, as against any other equitable interest in a chattel (m).

Whether equity can adopt the elegit by analogy.

5. The elegit owing its origin to a statute, a doubt may suggest itself in limine, whether, when the legislature has passed an enactment against the legal estate, a Court of equity can consistently with its general principles, apply by analogy the same provision to the case of a trust. A legal estate, for example, was by Act of Parliament made forfeitable without inquest for treason, and, as the Statute enumerated "uses," it was contended, and seems to be the better opinion (a), that trusts also under that expression became forfeitable to the Crown; but it was never suggested that, had "uses" not been inserted in the Act, a Court of equity could have subjected trusts to forfeiture by any inherent jurisdiction of its own. But the Act which originated the elegit was, like the statute de donis, prior to the introduction of the use; and as equity, by analogy to the Statute of Westminster, admitted entails and remainders of trusts, why might it not, by analogy to another Act of the same statute, allow equitable interests to be affected by judgments (b)?

Trusts formerly not subject to elegit. Secus now.

6. It would seem that in Lord Keeper Bridgman's time a trust was not subject to an elegit (c). But it was long ago established that a judgment creditor might redeem a mortgage in fee (d), and it is now equally well settled that he may prosecute his elegit against any other equitable interest (e).

Land to be converted into personalty not bound by a judgment.

7. An estate given by A. to trustees upon trust to convert into personalty for the benefit of B. has in equity all the properties of personality; and even under the old law therefore, a judgment against the person to whom the proceeds of the sale were directed to be paid conferred no lien upon the proceeds (f).

Judgment against vendor, after contract to sell.

8. Whether the same principle applied where a judgment was entered up against a person after he had contracted to sell real estate was much doubted.

(f) Foster v. Blackstone, 1 M. & K. 297; and see Browne v. Cavendish, 1 Jon. & Lat. 633.

Upon this subject we have the following opinion of Mr. Serj. Hill :—H. A. S., seised in fee of an estate, subject to his mother's jointure and to younger children's portions, contracted for the sale of the property in lots to different purchasers. After the date of the contract, H. A. S. executed a conveyance to trustees, upon trust to convey to the different purchasers, and to invest part of the purchase money in the funds as an indemnity against the jointure and portions and to pay the residue to himself. Subsequently to the deed of trust H. A. S. acknowledged a judgment. Mr. Serj. Hill was consulted on the part of the trustees, whether they would be safe in paying the money to H. A. S., as against the judgment of which they had notice, and also as against judgments, if any, of which they had no notice. The opinion was as follows: "As to the judgment of which the trustees had notice, though, to many purposes, the estate agreed to be sold is from the time of the contract the estate of the purchaser; yet I think the vendor is not before payment of the money to be considered a mere trustee, for the estate continues his at law, and even in equity he has a right to detain it until payment of the purchase money; and, therefore, the judgment creditor hath a right to so much of the purchase money as is sufficient to satisfy the judgment; and the trustees having notice of his right ought to pay it, if the money is in their hands. As to the judgments, if any, of which the trustees have no notice, I think a Court of equity will not make them pay the money over again, if they apply it according to the deed of trust, because I think equity in the case of a judgment creditor and a bonâ fide purchaser or a trustee without notice, will not interpose on either side, but will leave the law to take its course" (a). Serjeant Hill's opinion.

And Sir J. Leach appears to have concurred in this opinion, that the vendor's interest after the contract was bound by a judgment; for in Forth v. The Duke of Norfolk (b), where a person had mortgaged an estate in fee, and then contracted to sell, and afterwards, before the conveyance, acknowledged a judgment, Sir J. Leach said, "An assignee for valuable consideration is discharged of the claim of the judgment creditor, unless he had notice of it before the consideration paid. If A., before the actual conveyance to him, had received notice of the judgment, then, being a purchaser of an equitable interest in a freehold Sir J. Leach's opinion.

estate from the debtor, and not having paid his purchase money, he would have been equally affected with the judgment as the debtor himself: and if he had afterwards paid the whole purchase money to the debtor, he would have still remained liable to the judgment creditor."

Dictum of Sir L. Shadwell.

But in a subsequent case Sir L. Shadwell said "he should not have given the opinion which the learned Serjeant had done, for it appeared to him that from the time H. A. S. entered into binding contracts to sell the lands, he not having judgments against him at that time, the purchasers had a right to file a bill against him and have the legal estate conveyed" (a). And it may be argued that if the vendor die after the contract, but before the conveyance, the purchase money would go to the executor (b); and that if the contract work a notional conversion of the land into money in respect of the vendor's representatives, the same consequence ought to follow in respect of the vendor's judgment creditors.

Whether in case of conveyance upon trust to sell or mortgage, with power of sale, surplus proceeds are bound by a judgment.

9. The case became still more difficult where A. conveyed to trustees upon trust to sell for the discharge of incumbrances, and to pay the surplus to himself, and before sale, a judgment was entered up against A. (c); or where a mortgage was given with power of sale to the mortgagee and a judgment was entered up against the mortgagor before sale (d). It was clear that in either case the power of giving receipts was binding as against the judgment creditor, so that a purchaser from the trustee or mortgagee was not concerned to see that the judgments were satisfied (e); but this still left open the question whether the judgment was or not a lien or charge on the proceeds in the hands of the mortgagee or trustee.

How much of the estate may be taken in execution.

10. The question whether under the old law the lien of the judgment creditor extended to the whole or a moiety of the trust estate was also one of considerable difficulty, and the authorities can only be reconciled by the aid of a somewhat subtle distinction.

On what grounds a judgment creditor may apply to a Court of equity.

A judgment creditor might have come into a Court of equity

(a) Lodge v. Lyseley, 4 Sim. 75; and see Craddock v. Piper, 14 Sim. 310, where, however, it does not appear whether the judgments were entered up before the actual sale or the decree for sale.

upon two grounds. First, upon a legal title, where he either sought to remove an impediment to the execution of his legal elegit, or, after the death of his conusor, sued for payment of his debt out of the conusor's personal assets, and, if they should be insufficient, then by sale (a) of the real estate; or, Secondly, upon an equitable elegit, on the ground that he had no legal lien, and therefore could have no legal process (b).

Execution of a moiety only of a trust estate.

As the extent of relief ought in both these cases to be the same, and the Court never attempted to make a difference, the authorities determined upon either head may be relied upon as applicable to the other. The result of the cases upon this principle, notwithstanding an early authority to the contrary (c), appears to be that a judgment creditor could under the old law sue an equitable elegit of a moiety only of a trust estate (d).

Execution of the whole of an equity of redemption.

11. An equity of redemption was, however, governed by a different rule. If A., seised of an estate, mortgaged it to B. in fee, and then confessed a judgment to C., it was clear that C. had a lien which entitled him to redeem B. But should he redeem the whole or a moiety? So far as the judgment creditor had any claim of his own, a moiety only; but as B. could not be compelled to part with the smallest fraction of the estate until he had been satisfied his whole debt, C. was under the necessity of redeeming the entirety. Again, when C. had taken a transfer of the security, it followed, that as mortgagee with a judgment against the mortgagor he had a right to tack, and no one could

(a) An elegit would at law give the possession of the lands till the satisfaction of the debt, but equity assumes the jurisdiction of facilitating the remedy by a sale. See Barnewall v. Barnewall, 3 Ridg. 61; O'Fallon v. Dillon, 2 Sch & Lef. 19; O'Gorman v. Comyn, Ib. 139; Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 610; but see Bedford v. Leigh, 2 Dick. 709; Neate v. Duke of Marlborough, 3 M. & Cr. 417.

(b) These grounds of suit still subsist, in addition to that conferred by the 13th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, giving the judgment creditor a charge in equity. [See Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies, 9 Ch. Div. 275.]

(c) Compton v. Compton, cited in Stileman v. Ashdown, Amb. 15; Reg. Lib. A. 1711, f. 134. The authority of this case cannot, however, have much weight, for, as was observed by Lord Hardwicke (Stileman v. Ashdown, Amb. 17), the point whether the whole or a moiety should be sold appears not to have been discussed.

(d) Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 477, 608; Rowe v. Bant, Dick. 150; Reg. Lib. B. 1750, f. 427; Barnewall v. Barnewall, 3 Ridg. P. In O'Fallon v. Dillon, 2 Sch. & Lef. 13, the sale of the estate was not confined to a moiety; but there the creditor had entered up two judgments the same term, and then as both judgments were of the same date, the creditor might at law have taken both moieties in execution. See Attorney-General v. Andrew, Hard. 23.

redeem any part of the estate out of his hands until payment not only of the original mortgage debt but also of the judgment. Thus it arose from a kind of necessity, and not from any wanton violation of principle, that in the instance of an equity of redemption the judgment creditor was paid by a sale of the whole estate (a) (1).

In Stileman v. Ashdown (b), Lord Hardwicke, at the same time that he gave a judgment creditor a moiety only of the trust estate, ordered a sale of the whole of the lands in mortgage (c). So, where there were several incumbrancers by judgment upon an equity of redemption, and the Court decreed a sale, the first judgment creditor was not confined to a moiety of the estate, but the decree was, that the incumbrancers should be paid their full demands out of the proceeds of the sale, according to their priority (d).

Case of a trust by way of mortgage.

12. [The cases of a mortgage by way of trust or of an annuity deed, though the interests derived thereunder border closely upon the nature of an equity of redemption, yet present some features of distinction, for here the legal estate never becomes absolute in the mortgagee or grantee of the annuity but is held in trust for the mortgagor or grantor, and there is nothing to be redeemed, but merely a trust to be executed. However, even in the case of a conveyance of land to ordinary uses to secure an annuity, where the grantor] confessed a judgment, and the question was whether it should affect the whole or only a moiety of the estate, Sir L. Shadwell, on the ground that a judgment creditor might redeem the entirety of the lands in mortgage, held that the lien should extend to the whole (e).

Execution of a trust estate by elegit at law, under Statute of Frauds.

13. We come next to the provision in the 10th section of the Statute of Frauds (f), which enables a judgment creditor in certain cases to sue a writ of execution at law against an equitable estate.

(1) It was ruled, upon a similar principle, that, where freeholds and copyholds were blended in one mortgage, the equity of redemption of the whole was liable as assets to a bond creditor, though copyholds by themselves were not assets; Acton v. Pierce, 2 Vern. 480.

The 10th section enacts in substance that it "shall be lawful for the sheriff to deliver execution unto the party suing of all such lands and hereditaments as any other person may be in any manner of wise seised or possessed in trust for the party against whom execution is so sued, like as the sheriff might or ought to have done, if the said party against whom execution is so sued had been seised of such lands and hereditaments of such estate as they are seised of in trust for him at the time of the said execution sued."

14. Upon the construction of this section the following points have been resolved :—

α. As the statute, though using in one case the words seised or possessed, speaks elsewhere only of lands, &c., of which others are seised in trust for the debtor, it does not extend to trusts of chattels real of which the legal proprietor is said not to be seised, but possessed (a).

β. An equity of redemption is not within the terms of the Act (b).

γ. A bare and simple trust only is intended—not one of a complicated nature, where the interests of other parties are mixed up with the debtor's title (c).

δ. If after the judgment is entered up, but before actual execution, the estate has been disposed of to a purchaser, so that when execution is sued there is no trust for the debtor in esse, in that case the words of the statute fail to provide a remedy, and the judgment creditor cannot be put in possession (d).

Whether equitable elegit may be had where no legal elegit of a trust under the Statute.

The question has been much discussed whether in the last case, though the judgment creditor could not prosecute a legal execution, he might not subject the purchaser, if affected with notice, to an equitable elegit (e). It was said, that as there was no execution at law, and equity followed the law, the creditor was without redress; but in this argument the principle that equity followed the law seems to be wrongly applied. A judgment bound a legal estate, and, as equity followed the law, a judgment was therefore in equity a lien upon the trust. The Statute of Frauds introduced an additional remedy by enabling the judgment creditor, in certain cases, to take legal execution of a trust. But affirmative statutes do not abridge the common law (a), and therefore the creation of a legal remedy in certain cases provided for by the Act could not preclude the judgment creditor from prosecuting his equitable elegit in other cases for which the statute had made no provision. The enactment was clearly meant to be remedial, but the doctrine contended for would impress on it a restrictive character, and convert it into a disabling statute. The difficulty in the way of the relief was said to be, that no instance of it could be found after the most diligent search. The reason probably was, that judgments had only in modern times been held to bind equitable interests at all; the doctrine was certainly not established before the Statute of Frauds. But the system of trusts had from that period downwards been gradually maturing, and the principles which governed uses, and were thence transferred into trusts, had since, not indeed been abandoned, but received a much more enlarged and liberal application, and as judgments were acknowledged to be liens upon equitable interests, the consequence necessarily followed that a purchaser was bound by notice of a judgment, as he would be bound by notice of any other equitable incumbrance.

15. We now proceed to an examination of the more recent statutes.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. By the Act for extending the remedies of creditors (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110) it is enacted—(I.) By sect. 11, That execution at law may be had under an elegit of all such lands, including copyholds, as the debtor or any person in trust for him was seised or possessed of, or over which he had a disposing power which he might without the assent of any other person exercise for his own benefit (b), at the time of entering up the judgment or at any time afterwards. (II.) By section 13, That in equity a judgment shall operate as a charge upon the whole of the lands, freehold and copyhold, of which the debtor was seised or possessed for any estate or interest whatever at law or in equity, or over which he had a disposing power, at or subsequently to

(b) A trust for the separate use of a married woman was held not to be an estate over which she had a disposing power within the meaning of the Act; Digby v. Irvine, 6 Ir. Eq. Rep. 149. Neither is the power of the settlor to defeat a voluntary settlement by means of the 27 Eliz. c. 4, a disposing power within the Act of Vict.; Beavan v. Earl of Oxford, 6 De G. M. & G. 507.

the entering up of the judgment, with a proviso that the creditor shall not be entitled to proceed in equity to obtain the benefit of such charge until after the expiration of a year from the date of the judgment, and that the protection in equity of purchasers for valuable consideration without notice shall not be disturbed. (III.) By sect. 18, That decrees and orders of Courts of Equity, rules of Courts of Common Law, &c., whereby any sum of money, or any costs, charges or expenses, shall be payable to any person, shall have the effect of judgments (a). But, (IV.) By sect. 19, That no judgments, decrees, or orders, shall affect real estate by virtue of the Act, unless and until they have been registered with the senior master of the Court of Common Pleas (b).

Remarks on the Statute.

16. It is observable upon these clauses, that an equitable estate, whether of freehold or copyhold tenure, and whether of freehold or leasehold interest, and without any restriction to the time of execution sued, as in the 10th section of the Statute of Frauds, is subjected by the Act to execution at law by writ of elegit (s. 11), and to quasi execution in equity by way of charge (s. 13). In the latter case purchasers without notice are expressly protected (s. 13), but in the former case not: a purchaser, therefore, even of an equitable interest, after the commencement of the Act, was obliged by this statute to search the registry for judgments entered up against the vendor, and that whether before or subsequently to the Act, for the time for entering up the judgments was immaterial, provided they had been registered. It may be thought anomalous and inconsistent that a purchaser should not be protected at law by want of notice, while he was in equity; but the intention of the legislature probably was, in giving a remedy both at law and in equity, not to disturb the principles upon which the respective Courts acted, and therefore if the trust was a plain one, and so amenable to a legal elegit, the judgment creditor might take the lands in execution even against a purchaser without notice; but if the trust was so complicated as to oblige him to apply to a Court of equity, and treat the judgment as a charge,

(a) A decree for an account merely is not within the section; Chadwick v. Holt, 2 Jur. N. S. 918; [Widgery v. Tepper, 6 Ch. Div. 364.] Neither is a rule of a Court of Common Law which does not specify the sum to be paid; Jones v. Williams, 11 Ad. & Ell. 175; Doe v. Amey, 8 M. & W. 565; though, as respects costs, the case is different; Jones v. Williams, 8 M. & W. 349; Doe v. Barrell, 10 Q. the Court by the Act was not to disregard its established rules, but, as in all other cases, was to protect a purchaser without notice.

Estate or interest in land capable of being taken in execution.

17. The following cases have been decided upon this Act. A. was entitled to an annuity secured by a covenant and an assignment of leaseholds in trust to sell, and it was held that A.'s interest under the deed might, under the Act, be made available for payment of a judgment debt due from her (a). A testator gave real estate to trustees upon trust to levy and raise, during the life of A., an annuity of 400*l*., and directed the annuity to be held upon trust for the support, clothing, and maintenance of A., and the Court, having previously decided that the trust was one for the benefit of A. generally (b), held that a judgment creditor of A. was entitled to a charge on the annuity under the Act (c). A person covenanted to pay A. 5000*l*., and that the sum should be a charge on certain land, and it was held that a judgment creditor of A. was entitled to a charge on the land in respect of A.'s interest therein (d). A mortgage was executed with a power of sale, and the surplus made payable to the mortgagor, his heirs, appointees, or assigns, and before a sale judgment was entered up against the mortgagor, who was subsequently discharged under the Insolvent Act, and after such discharge the mortgagee sold under the power of sale, and it was held that the judgment creditor was entitled to the surplus proceeds of sale (e). A. was tenant for life of one-third of a trust fund, which at the time was invested on real securities, and it was held, though the trustees had a power of varying the securities, that A.'s interest was bound by the judgment (f). A feme, trustee for sale with a power of signing receipts, married, and then with the concurrence of her husband contracted to sell, and the purchaser objected that, as the feme covert was beneficially entitled to one-third of the produce, and the judgments were entered up, but after the contract, against the husband, the wife could not make a title; however, the Court held that the judgments could not neutralize or prejudice the power of sale and signing receipts (g). Where a testator devised an estate to his wife for life, with remainder upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds amongst the testator's sons for life, of whom James was one, it was held by V. C. Kindersley that the share of James was not "any estate or interest in land" within the meaning of the statute (a). But it is observable that of the several previous decisions one only (Harris v. Davison) appears to have been brought to the attention of the Court.

Proviso against suing in equity until a year after judgment.

18. The object of the proviso in sect. 13, restraining the creditor from suing for a year, is not obvious; but most probably the framers of the Act considered, that since he would obtain, as incident to his charge, a right to a sale in equity, while under the elegit he could only hold the land and take the rents and profits, some delay might reasonably be interposed before the exercise of the larger statutory remedy. And, notwithstanding the proviso, it has been held that the judgment creditor is entitled to have the interest of his debtor at once secured for the creditor's protection (b); and as between two judgment creditors the one who first obtains the charging order has priority (c).

Consideration of the Charging Order provisions.

19. The 14th section of the Act, which introduces a species of execution against stock and shares in public funds and public companies, which before were not liable, deserves a separate consideration. By that section it is enacted that if any person against whom any judgment (d) shall have been entered up in any of Her Majesty's superior Courts at Westminster, shall have any Government stock, funds, or annuities, or any stock or shares of or in any company in England, standing in his name in his own right (e), or in the name of any person in trust for

(d) Extended to Decrees, &c., by sect. 18; and by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1, the property intended to be embraced by this section is further defined, so as to include any interest (as a life estate) in stock or shares.

[(e) Where shares in a company had been transferred by a father without consideration into the name of his son in order to qualify the son to be a director of the company, to be retransferred to the father upon request, it was held that the shares were not standing in the son's name in his own right within the meaning of the Act; Re Blakely Ordnance Company, Frederick Coates's case, 46 L. J. N.S. Ch. 367; but see Jeffryes v. Reynolds, 52 L. J. N.S. C. L. 55; 48 L. T. N.S. 358. The section does not extend to cash, but by way of equitable execution and in aid of the power conferred by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, of taking money, &c., under a fieri facias, a charging order on cash in court standing to the credit of a judgment debtor can be made under the general jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery him, it shall be lawful for the Judge of one of the superior Courts, on the application of any judgment creditor, to order, that such stock, &c., shall stand charged with the payment of the amount for which judgment may have been recovered, and such order shall entitle the judgment creditor to all such remedies as he would have been entitled to if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment debtor, provided that no proceedings shall be taken to have the benefit of such charge until after the expiration of six calendar months from the date of such order; and by the next following section of the Act it is provided that the order of the Judge shall be ex parte in the first instance, and shall restrain the Bank or Company from permitting a transfer of the Government stock, funds, annuities, stock, or shares affected by the order, and that no disposition of the judgment debtor in the meantime shall be valid as against the judgment creditor, [and that unless the judgment debtor shall within a time to be mentioned in the order show cause, the order shall be made absolute, but the Judge may, upon the application of the judgment debtor or any person interested, discharge or vary the order (a).]

20. The leading points decided with reference to this new species of execution are the following:—

By whom charging order should be made.

a. [Under the old practice it was held that] in the ordinary case of a judgment at law, the application for the charging order must be made to one of the Common Law Judges, even though the stock to be charged were standing in the name of the Paymaster-General (b). But where a charging order was to be made in furtherance of a decree of the Court of Chancery, it could properly be made by a Judge of the Court of Chancery (c). [But now the charging order may be made by any Divisional Court or by any Judge (d).] The charging order is made ex parte and nisi in the first instance, but when confirmed absolute it operates from the order nisi (e).

Charging order will be made at law without deciding the quantum of interest charged.

β. Where stocks or funds are vested in trustees, and a judgment debtor appears to be interested therein, the charging order will be made at law, so as to affect the interest of the judgment debtor, whatever it may be, leaving it to the trustees, if the precise amount of the debtor's interest is not sufficiently defined, to say they will not act except under the direction of the Court (a). [But a charging order cannot be made affecting stocks and shares forming part of a residuary estate in which the debtor is interested, but which are meanwhile subject to a direction for conversion (b), and a charging order on a fund standing to the credit of a lunatic ought to be an unconditional order on a specified amount of the fund, and not an order directing that the amount to be charged should be determined by the Lords Justices (c).]

Bank or public company bound to pay dividends to trustee, notwithstanding charging order on interest of cestui que trust.

γ. Where a charging order is made upon the partial interest of a cestui que trust in stock or shares standing in the names of trustees, the Bank or public company whose stock or shares are affected by the charging order, is not concerned with questions arising between the judgment creditor and other persons interested in the trust fund, but is bound, in like manner as before the charging order, to pay the dividends to the trustees (d).

[Judgment payable in futuro.]

[δ. A charging order may be made in respect of a judgment made payable on a future day (e), but not of a mere order for an account of what is due in respect of an annuity and for payment, while the account is still pending (f), nor an order for payment of money to the credit of an action (g).]

Proviso at the end of sect. 14 does not forbid suit for protecting interest of judgment creditor.

ε. The proviso at the end of the 14th section, forbidding proceedings until after six calendar months, applies only to proceedings for enforcing immediate payment of the debt by realizing the security, and does not prevent the judgment creditor from taking steps to prevent the security given him by the statute from being in the meantime defeated or diminished. Thus, where the funds are standing in the name of the Paymaster-General, the judgment creditor may, within the six months, apply for a stop order to restrain the debtor from receiving dividends accruing within the six months (h).

As to effect of charging order in reference to other incumbrances.

ζ. It must be considered as now settled, notwithstanding a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench to the contrary (a), that a judgment creditor who obtains a charging order against stock vested in a trustee is only entitled to such interest therein as the debtor has, and must take subject to all specific charges, whether notice thereof may or not have been given to the trustee before he has notice of the charging order (b).

Where debt void.

η. And a charging order has no greater effect than an instrument of charge executed by the judgment debtor would have had, so that, if the debt on which the judgment and charging order were founded was void, the charging order is inoperative (c); [but this limitation has reference to the extent and priority of the charge, and not to the capacity of the judgment debtor, so that a charging order on stock of a lunatic is binding as against his representatives (d).

[Remedies under charging order.]

θ. The judgment creditor is entitled under the charging order to such and the same remedies as he would have had if the charge had been created by contract between himself and the debtor; and must therefore, to enforce the charge, institute fresh proceedings for foreclosure or sale, without which the Court has no jurisdiction to order a sale of the shares (e).

[Order absolute cannot be discharged.]

ι. After the order has been made absolute, it cannot be discharged, even upon the application of a person who shows that the shares were standing in the name of the judgment debtor as a mere trustee for the applicant (f).

λ. [Forfeiture on alienation.]

μ. A charging order is not a contract, and therefore a person desiring to enforce it cannot, under the Rules of Court, obtain leave for service out of the jurisdiction (d).] [Service out of jurisdiction.]

21. The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, was soon followed by another statute (2 & 3 Vict. c. 11), by which it was enacted:—(I.) By section 2, that no judgment whatsoever should affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless previously registered according to the provisions of the Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. (II.) By section 4, that all judgments, decrees, rules, and orders registered, or to be registered, according to the provisions of the Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, should, at the expiration of five years, be null and void against lands, tenements, and hereditaments, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors (e), unless they should have again been registered within five years before the right, title, estate, or interest of such purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors accrued (f). (f) And see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15, s. 6.

section 5, that as against purchasers and mortgagees without notice, no judgment, decree, or order should have a greater effect than a judgment would have had against such purchaser or mortgagee before the passing of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. (IV.) By section 8, that judgments, statutes, and recognizances to the Crown should not bind purchasers or mortgagees unless registered as Crown debts (a). By virtue of the above clauses the execution that might under the former statute have been taken out at law against an equitable interest in the hands of a purchaser for value without notice was, in common with every other advantage given by the former statute against such purchaser, recalled, and the purchaser was relieved from the necessity of carrying his search back beyond the period of five years; except as regarded Crown debts, to which the enactment requiring re-registration did not apply.

Old law still applicable in case of purchase for value without notice.

A singular result of the 5th section was, that in the occasional, though rarely occurring case of a purchase or mortgage without notice of a previously registered judgment, the old law, as it existed before 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, was resorted to for guidance. Thus, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, judgments were a lien upon leaseholds, but by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 5, if a purchaser or mortgagee had no notice of a registered judgment (for registration is not notice per se), he was not bound by the judgment unless at the time of the purchase or mortgage an elegit had been issued, for by the old law a judgment did not become a lien upon chattels until the writ of execution was lodged in the hands of the sheriff (b).

3 & 4 Vict. c. 82. Notice ineffectual without registration.

22. This Act, however, still left open the question whether, by analogy to the cases under the Registry Acts, a purchaser, mortgagee, or creditor, if he had actual notice of an unregistered judgment, was not bound by it; and a subsequent Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, was passed to obviate this. It was thereby enacted, by the second section, that no judgment, decree, order, or rule (not mentioning Crown debts) should, by virtue of the said Act (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), affect any lands at law or in equity as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, until registration (c) under

(a) The Act speaks only of recognizances to the Crown, and not of recognizances in general, as on receiverships, which are also liens on real property. The 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 1, extends to recognizances generally; but the Act is not retrospective, and therefore does not apply to recognizances entered up before the passing of the Act, 29th July, 1864. Recognizances to the Crown are further provided for by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104, s. 48.

(b) Westbrook v. Blythe, 3 Ell. & Bl. 737.

(c) The framer of this Act appears the said Act, any notice of such judgment, decree, order, or rule to any purchaser, mortgagee, or creditor, in anywise notwithstanding.

18 & 19 Vict. c. 15.

23. It being, however, doubted whether this Act protected a purchaser, mortgagee, or creditor from the effect of notice as to any remedy against him which the judgment creditor had before, independently of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, or whether its effect was not limited to protection against the additional remedy given to the judgment creditor by that Act (a), it was, in order to obviate this inconvenience, enacted generally, by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15, s. 4, that no judgment, decree, order, or rule (b), which might be registered under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, should affect any lands, &c., at law or in equity, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until the memorandum, &c., should have been left with the proper officer, any notice of any such judgment, decree, &c., to any such purchaser, mortgagee, or creditor, in anywise notwithstanding.

22 & 23 Vict. c. 35. Crown Debts.

24. The 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 22, put Crown debts on the same footing as judgments as regards the necessity of re-registration from time to time, thus reducing the period over which the search for Crown debts should extend to five years, as in the case of judgments, &c.

23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. Issue and registration of writ of execution required.

25. By the Law of Property Amendment Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 1, freehold, copyhold and leasehold estates, were, in respect of judgments (c), statutes and recognizances, as against purchasers and mortgagees, placed upon the same footing, and no such judgments, &c., entered up after the date of the Act (23*rd July*, 1860), were to affect lands in the hands of purchasers or mortgagees, unless a writ of execution should have been issued and registered before the conveyance or mortgage, and unless execution should be put in force within three calendar months from the registration. A purchaser, therefore, was thus precluded from objecting to the title on the ground of his having notice of a judgment entered up after the Act, and registered at the Common Pleas, but upon which no execution had been issued (d).

to have overlooked the intermediate Act of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, and to have left it doubtful whether re-registration within five years was necessary to exclude the title of a purchaser with notice. This doubt is now set at rest by sect. 5 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15.

Who are purchasers.

26. As to the meaning of the word purchasers, it has been held that a wife and children are purchasers under a marriage settlement of the interests limited to them out of the husband's estate, but the husband as to a life-interest limited to himself out of his own estate is not a purchaser, and a judgment therefore would attach upon it just as if it were not the subject of settlement (a).

Construction of the Acts.

27. And the construction of the Acts extending the remedies of the judgment creditor, is that as to equitable interests they are to receive the same construction as the Statute of Frauds, and consequently that simple trusts only can be taken in execution at law (b).

27 & 28 Vict. c. 112.

28. We now come to the more recent Act, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, which enacts, by the first section, that no judgment, statute or recognizance to be entered up after 29th July, 1864, shall affect any land until actual delivery of the land in execution by a writ of elegit or other lawful authority (c). And by the third section, that every writ or other process of execution must be registered in the name of the debtor. And by the fourth section, that the creditor to whom any land shall have been actually delivered in execution (d), is entitled forthwith to obtain from the Court of Chancery, upon petition, an order to be served upon the debtor only for the sale of the debtor's interest in the land; and thereupon inquiries are to be directed as to the nature and particulars of such debtor's interest (e). And by the fifth section, that if it be found that the land is charged with any other debt due on any judgment, statute, or recognizance, whether prior or subsequent to the charge of the petitioner, such other creditor is to be served with notice of the order for sale, and is to be at liberty to attend the proceedings; and the proceeds of sale are then to be distributed amongst the parties entitled according to their priorities. It is to be noticed also that judgments are made by the second section to comprise "registered decrees, orders of the Courts of equity and bankruptcy, and other orders having the operation of a judgment."

The Act as affecting equitable interests.

29. This Act has a most important bearing upon equitable interests. The object of it, as expressed in the preamble, was "to assimilate the law affecting freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates to that affecting pure personal estates," and it extends to land "or any interests therein," and therefore comprises all equitable interests. For the future, therefore, judgments are not to affect any equitable interest "until actual delivery of the land in execution by a writ of elegit or other lawful authority." But the words "actual delivery" are to be construed in a liberal sense, for incorporeal hereditaments and equities are not capable of manual delivery, and yet are included in the Act. Indeed, as Lord Justice Mellish observed, "The sheriff (as to a legal elegit) does not give the creditor actual possession of the land itself, but the effect of his return is to vest the legal estate in the creditor, who can then bring an ejectment" (a). The Act speaks of delivery of possession, not only by writ of elegit, but "by other lawful authority," and this has been held to mean, "any lawful authority which could cause such a delivery in execution as the subject matter is capable of, and where a judgment creditor comes into equity to remove a legal impediment, the relief given is substantially a delivery in possession whether in form it be a writ of assistance or of sequestration, or the appointment of a receiver" (b).

Present state of the law.

A judgment creditor, therefore, who comes under the operation of the Act may still obtain equitable execution against an equitable interest, but the judgment forms no lien upon the equitable interest until the creditor has reached some process in equity corresponding to actual execution at law, such as sequestration, or the appointment of a receiver, or an order for sale. Thus a creditor having a judgment against a mortgagor may obtain equitable execution against him by the appointment of a receiver, subject to the right of the mortgagee (c), or he may take proceedings against the mortgagor and mortgagee for redemption of the mortgage and foreclosure of the mortgagor (d).

[Appointment of receiver by way of equitable execution, when and how obtainable.]

[So a judgment creditor may obtain the appointment of a receiver of a reversionary interest in a trust estate (a), or of a life interest in settled funds (b), or of a debt or sum of money payable to the judgment debtor, to which garnishee proceedings are not applicable (c), and the appointment of a receiver may be made ex parte upon an interlocutory application immediately after the institution of the action (d), or without the institution of a fresh action on an interlocutory application in the action in which the judgment was obtained (e). The appointment, though made conditional upon the receiver's giving security, operates as an immediate equitable execution (f); and if the property is already in the hands of a receiver, the Court may appoint another receiver but not to act until the earlier receiver has been discharged, which will amount to equitable execution (g); and where a receiver of a partnership had been appointed in a Chancery action, the Court gave a judgment creditor of the firm a charge for his debt and costs on all the partnership moneys come or coming to the receiver, the creditor undertaking to deal with the charge according to the order of the Court (h). If the appointment of the receiver is merely for the purpose of giving a charge, and it is not intended that he should go into possession, the Court will make the appointment without security, on the judgment creditor and the receiver undertaking that the receiver shall not act without the leave of the Court (i).] But equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver will not be granted where there is no legal impediment to obtaining execution in the ordinary course of law by fieri facias or attachment of debt, unless special circumstances are shown such as will satisfy the Court that it is "just and convenient" to appoint a receiver within the meaning of the Judicature Act, 1873, sect. 25, sub-s. 8 (j), and such relief, though styled "equitable execution," is subject to the ordinary rule that equitable relief can be granted only when proper parties are before the Court. Therefore a receiver by way of equitable execution of the property of a deceased person cannot be appointed in the absence of any person to represent the estate (a).

Proceedings before equitable execution, when premature.

Should a judgment creditor, without taking proceedings for equitable execution, present a petition in a summary way under the Act for sale of the equitable interest, the petition would be dismissed, as the creditor has no lien by virtue of the judgment itself, and the Court has not yet awarded any equitable execution (b); and so, if a creditor having a judgment against a mortgagor bring an action for execution against the equity of redemption, and, before the Court has made any order amounting to equitable execution, the mortgagor becomes bankrupt, the action must be dismissed, for previously to the bankruptcy, which vested the property in the trustees for the benefit of all the creditors equally, no lien had attached (c).

Property not capable of actual delivery.

Where the subject matter is not in possession, and therefore is in its nature not capable of actual delivery by the sheriff, as in the case of a remainder expectant on a particular estate, there, although the sheriff may have made a return of actual delivery, yet, as such return is false in law and therefore null, a petition for sale under the Act founded upon such return cannot be sustained (d).

An elegit need not be actually sued out.

30. The mode of proceeding in equity appears to be this: if the creditor seek to remove some impediment to the legal execution of the judgment, he must lay a foundation for the interference of equity [by showing that the legal remedies have been exhausted. For this purpose it was, prior to the Judicature Act, necessary for the creditor to sue] out an elegit at law (e); and the same rule prevailed where the judgment was merely an equitable lien (f); but the elegit need not have been returned (g); and where the trust estates were in three counties an elegit in one was held to be sufficient (h). it is not necessary to sue out an elegit if it can be otherwise shown that there is no property of the debtor against which the elegit could be issued for the purpose of satisfying the judgment, and where an affidavit to that effect was made by the creditor, a receiver was appointed although no elegit had issued (a); and a judgment creditor may in the same action establish a charge and enforce it (b).

[Registration not necessary to give priority where land actually delivered in execution.]

[But necessary before sale.]

31. If land has been actually delivered in execution to a creditor it is not necessary to register the judgment, writ, or other process of execution in order to give the creditor a charge on the land in priority to persons claiming under the debtor, including a purchaser for value without notice (c). But the writ or other process of execution must be registered before a summary order for sale can be obtained under sect. 4 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112 (d).]

Fi. fa. sufficient in case of equitable chattel real.

32. When the interest sought to be affected is an equitable chattel real, it is sufficient to sue out a writ of fieri facias (e). And when the assistance of the Court is sought in favour of a County Court judgment against an equitable chattel real, it is sufficient to pursue the analogous step of placing a writ of execution in the hands of the high bailiff, pursuant to the County Court Act (f).

Redemption of a mortgage.

33. A judgment creditor may redeem a mortgage without suing out an elegit; for inasmuch as the Court finds the creditor in a condition to acquire a power over the estate by suing out a writ, it gives to the party the right to come in and redeem other incumbrancers upon the property (g).

Whether the judgment be legal or equitable, if the creditor take proceedings in equity after the death of the conusor for satisfaction of his claim out of the personal assets, and in case of their deficiency, by a sale of the real estate, an actual elegit is not an essential requisite (h).

the time, although it need not be then due. Therefore, where a judgment debtor was entitled for life to the income of a trust fund payable half-yearly, and the trustees had duly made the last half-yearly payment and had no money representing income in their hands, it was held that there was nothing to attach. The proper course in such a case is to obtain equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver (a).

36. A creditor who has issued execution against the goods or lands of a debtor, or has attached any debt due to him, is not entitled to retain the benefit of the execution or attachment against the trustee in bankruptcy of the debtor, unless he has completed the execution or attachment before the date of the receiving order, and before notice of the presentation of any bankruptcy petition by or against the debtor, or of the commission of any available act of bankruptcy by the debtor. And an execution against goods is completed by seizure and sale; an attachment of a debt by receipt of the debt; and an execution against land by seizure, or, in the case of equitable interest, by the appointment of a receiver (b).]

Case of lands lying in a register county.

37. The law as to priority of judgments in the case of lands lying in a register county is, as to judgments which have been entered up on or before 29th July, 1864 (the date of the last Act), by the combined effect of the County Register Acts and of the Acts of the Queen before referred to, in a singular position.

Judgment postponed to subsequent purchase or mortgage without notice, unless registered both in County Register and at the Common Pleas.

It is clearly settled that the County Register Acts are still in force, and consequently, in order to give a locus standi to a judgment creditor over a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee without notice, his judgment must be registered both in the County Register and in the Common Pleas (or Central Office), before the completion of the purchase or mortgage (c).

Rights of two judgment creditors inter se.

38. But the doctrine of notice does not apply as between two judgment creditors; and therefore a judgment creditor who, by first registering in Middlesex, has gained priority at law over a judgment of previous date duly registered in the Common Pleas, but not in Middlesex, will not be postponed in equity because he had, at the time of so registering, notice of the prior judgment (a). And, therefore, generally, as between two judgment creditors, the one who first registers in the County Register obtains precedence over one who registers afterwards in the County Register, though he may not have registered first at the Common Pleas (b).

Case where subsequent purchaser or mortgagee has notice.

39. Where the subsequent purchaser or mortgagee has notice of a prior judgment, the question is, whether the judgment was registered at the Common Pleas before the completion of the purchase or mortgage, since, as we have before seen, unless so registered it cannot bind, notwithstanding the notice. But if duly registered in the Common Pleas, then notice to the purchaser or mortgagee will, in equity, though not in law, supply the want of registration in the county (c).

27 & 28 Vict. c. 112.

40. As to judgments entered up since 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112 (29th July, 1864), there must now be not only registration at the Common Pleas (or Central Office), in addition to the County Registry, but also actual delivery of the land in execution under the writ (d).

SECTION VIII.

OF EXTENTS FROM THE CROWN.

Extent binds trust.

1. THE equitable interest of a term, or of a freehold held in trust, is liable to an extent from the Crown (e); and this not by the effect of any legislative enactment, but per cursum scaccarii at common law (f). The words of the writ issued to the sheriff are to hold inquest of the lands whereof the debtor, not seisitus fuit, but habuit vel seisitus fuit, and a person might be said to have lands, when by subpœna in Chancery he might exercise any dominion over them (g).

Sale of the lands extended.

a sale of the lands, but only the perception of the rents and profits, until the amount of the debt was levied (a). This defect was supplied partially by a statute of Elizabeth (b), and more effectually by 25 G. 3. c. 35. It is by the latter statute enacted, that "it shall be lawful for the Court of Exchequer, and the same Court is thereby authorized, on the application of the Attorney-General (c) in a summary way by motion (d) to the same Court, to order that the right, title, estate, and interest of any debtor to the Crown, and the right, title, estate, and interest of the heirs and assigns of such debtor, which have been or shall be extended under or by virtue of any extent or diem clausit extremum, shall be sold as the Court shall direct, and the conveyance shall be made by the Remembrancer in the said Court of Exchequer or his deputy, under the direction of the said Court, by a deed of bargain and sale to be inrolled in the said Court."

Equity of redemption.

3. By the effect of this enactment, a trust or equity of redemption (e) of a Crown debtor may now be sold upon summary application to the Queen's Bench Division by motion.

SECTION IX.

OF FORFEITURE.

Trust not forfeitable at common law for attainder.

1. A TRUST of lands was never forfeitable at common law for attainder of either treason or felony (f); for forfeiture worked only upon tenure, and a trust was holden of nobody. The ground of the forfeiture at law was that all estates were held upon condition of duty and fidelity to the lord, and upon breach of allegiance they returned to the Crown, from whom they originally proceeded (g).

26 H. 8. c. 13.

2. The exemption of the use from forfeiture was remedied in the case of treason, by 26 H. 8. c. 13, s. 5, whereby it was enacted, that, "every offender convicted of high treason by presentment, confession, or process of outlawry, should forfeit to the King all such lands, &c., which such offender should have of any estate of inheritance in use or possession."

27 H. 8. c. 10.

3. The following year was passed the 27 H. 8. c. 10, by which uses were abolished, and, as the trust which grew up in the place of the use was held to be an interest sui generis, and not within reach of the statutes directed against uses, the legislature was again called upon to interpose by special enactment to remedy the defect.

33 H. 8. c. 20.

4. The 33 H. 8. c. 20, s. 2, declared, that "if any person or persons should be attainted of high treason by the course of the common laws or statutes of the realm, every such attainder by the common law (a) should be of as good strength, value, force, and effect, as if it had been done by authority of Parliament; and that the King's Majesty, his heirs and successors, should have as much benefit and advantage by such attainder, as well of uses, rights, entries, conditions, as possessions, reversions, remainders, and all other things, as if it had been done and declared by authority of Parliament, and should be deemed and adjudged in actual and real possession of the lands, tenements, hereditaments, uses, goods, chattels, and all other things of the offenders so attainted, which his highness ought lawfully to have and which they, being so attainted, ought or might lawfully lose and forfeit, if the attainder had been done by authority of Parliament, without any office or inquisition to be found of the same."

King v. Daccombe.

5. Notwithstanding this statute, it was laid down extra-judicially in the reign of James I., and was said to have been so resolved previously (b), that the trust of a freehold was not forfeited upon attainder of treason; and it has been remarked by the highest legal authority, that this doctrine "may be thought to be founded on reason, because it is not pretended that the statute of 26 H. 8. can embrace trusts which have succeeded to uses, and it does not appear to have been the intention of the 33 H. 8. to create a forfeiture of any equitable estate which has sprung up since the former Act. The statute had other objects" (c).

Construction of 33 H. 8.

6. To understand the scope of the enactment it must be observed—1. That previously to 33 H. 8. it was only in the case of a person attainted by Act of Parliament, and then by a special proviso, that the King was put in immediate possession of the offender's lands, for in attainders by ordinary course of law, whether by common law or under a statute, the King was not in possession until office found. 2. That 26 H. 8. had extended the forfeiture to lands in use or possession, but not to rights, entries, or conditions; and now that 27 H. 8. had passed, the 26 H. 8. was not even applicable to uses, or, as they were henceforth to be called, trusts. 3. That 26 H. 8. had embraced attainders by presentment, confession, verdict, or process of outlawry, but had omitted other cases, as where the offender stood mute. The intention of the legislature, then, in passing 33 H. 8. was, as resolved in Dowtie's case (a),—1. To vest the actual possession in the King by the attainder without office; 2. To extend the forfeiture to rights, entries, conditions, &c., which had hitherto not been affected by attainder; and, 3. To apply the statutory provisions to all cases of attainder, including those which 26 H. 8. had accidentally omitted.

(a) This includes the general statutes of the realm, as opposed to a special Act attainting a particular individual.

(b) King v. Daccombe, Cro. Jac. 512.

Assuming the Act to have had a remedial scope, can it be supposed that, when "rights, entries, and conditions" were, for the first time, made forfeitable by virtue of this enactment, the word "uses," which occupies the first place in the series, should have been inserted as mere surplusage, remembering that uses, by having been turned into possessions by 27 H. 8. had escaped the forfeiture imposed upon them by 26 H. 8 ? The insertion of the word "uses" can be no argument that "trusts" were not intended, for at that day both words were employed indifferently, as terms perfectly synonymous.

In support of this reasoning may be cited the opinions expressed by Baron Turner and Lord Hale, in the well-considered case of Attorney-General v. Sands (b). And Lord Hale afterwards recurs to the subject in his Pleas of the Crown (c), and argues the point there with considerable strength of reasoning:— "By the statute of 27 H. 8.," he says, "all uses were drowned in the land; but there have succeeded certain equitable interests called trusts, which differ not in substance from uses; nay, by that very statute they come under the same name—viz. uses or trusts. By the statute 33 H. 8. there is a special clause that the person attainted shall forfeit all 'uses'; and what other uses there could be at the making of the statute 33 H. 8. but only trusts such as are now in practice and retained in Chancery, I know not. It was agreed in the Earl of Somerset's case, and so resolved in Abington's case, that a trust of a freehold was not forfeited by attainder of treason. But how this resolution in Abington's case can stand with the statute of 33 H. 8. I see not; for certainly the uses there mentioned could be no other than trusts; and therefore the equity or trust itself, in cases of attainder of treason, seems forfeited by the statute, though possibly the land itself be not in the King" (a).

Whether equities of redemption subject to forfeiture.

7. Equities of redemption appear to have been made forfeitable for attainder of treason by 33 H. 8. (b); for the statute enumerates conditions, and the interest of the mortgagor is a condition, which, though broken at law, is saved whole to him in a Court of equity.

Trusts of chattels forfeitable upon conviction.

8. Trusts of chattels, whether real or personal, were always forfeitable to the Crown upon conviction (c); and if a term was in trust for the wife of the felon, but not for her separate use, it seems the trust was affected by the forfeiture of the husband (d). But the wife would still be entitled to a provision under her equity to a settlement (e).

Crown entitled to subpœna.

9. In these cases the forfeiture did not reach the legal estate vested in the trustee, but entitled the Crown to sue a subpœna in equity (f).

No forfeiture of property to which a felon is entitled only contingently.

10. If a felon at the time of his conviction was only contingently entitled, and before the interest vested he had undergone his punishment, no forfeiture accrued (g). But otherwise, if the interest vested before the term of imprisonment expired (h). And it was held that where a felon was entitled to a share of proceeds from the sale of real estate, but the sale was not to be made till after the death of A., and the felon had undergone his punishment in the lifetime of A., in this case, as the Crown had no equity during the life of A. to compel a conversion, the Crown was not entitled; otherwise, where the time of sale had arrived and the sale had been actually made before the felon had suffered his punishment (a). Money liable to be laid out in the purchase of land was regarded as land and so protected from being forfeited as personal estate (b).

(a) In Attorney-General v. Sands, it was laid down, according to Nelson's report (p. 131), that the estate was executed in the King by force of the statute; but, according to Freeman (p. 130), that the estate was to be executed in the King by a Court of equity, which seems the better opinion.

11. Now by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, it is enacted that "from and after the passing of the Act (4th July, 1870), no confession, verdict, inquest, conviction, or judgment of or for any treason, or felony, or felo de se shall cause any attainder or corruption of blood, or any forfeiture or escheat; provided that nothing in the Act shall affect the law of forfeiture consequent upon outlawry" (c). 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23.

12. At law a tenant for life might, until a modern statute (d), by certain tortious acts, as by a feoffment of the fee-simple, have forfeited his estate to the remainderman (e); but had an equitable tenant for life affected to dispose of the equitable fee, no forfeiture would have accrued, for nothing passed beyond the grantor's actual interest (f). By the Act above referred to all conveyances are now innocent, that is, they pass nothing but what the grantor can lawfully part with. Of forfeiture by equitable tenant for life.

SECTION X.

OF ESCHEAT.

1. [UNTIL the Intestates Estates Act, 1884 (g)] a trust in fee of lands was not subject to escheat (h). This was determined in the great case of Burgess v. Wheate (i), before Lord Northington, assisted by Lord Mansfield and Sir T. Clarke. The arguments of these eminent judges will amply repay a very careful perusal. It may be mentioned generally, that Sir T. Clarke and Lord Trust formerly not subject to escheat. Burgess v. Wheate.

Mansfield, while they pursued different lines of reasoning, carried their principles to too great an excess. Sir Thomas Clarke contended that trusts must be governed strictly by uses, and, therefore, as no escheat in equity was of a use, there could be none of a trust. But this position is too large; for trusts do not follow absolutely the law of uses: for then no curtesy would be of a trust, the judgment creditor would have no lien, and equitable interests would not be assets. Lord Mansfield, on the other hand, advanced the doctrine that, as lands escheat at law, so trusts must escheat in equity: that trusts, since the statute of H. 8., are not regulated by uses, but the maxim is "Equity follows law,"—"The trust is the estate." But to this it must be answered that a trust has always been recognised as a thing sui generis, and not as identical with the legal fee: it binds not, for instance, a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. The intermediate opinions of Lord Northington are to be regarded as those most in accordance with the general system: trusts, he thought, were to be administered on the footing of uses; but not, as Sir Thomas Clarke maintained, to the exclusion of the improvements adopted subsequently to the statute of H. 8.: he agreed with Lord Mansfield, that trusts imitated the legal possession; but he added the qualification, as between the privies to the trust only, and not as respected strangers: his objection to the claim of the lord was, that it was for the execution of a trust that did not exist: where there was a trust, it should be considered in that Court as the real estate between the cestui que trust and the trustee, and all claiming by or under them; and the trustee should take no beneficial interest that the cestui que trust could enjoy; but he knew no instance where that Court ever permitted the creation of a trust to affect the right of a third person (a).

Trustee retained the estate.

2. The result of the determination in Burgess v. Wheate, as followed in more recent cases, was, that where the owner of the equitable fee died intestate without heirs the trustee retained the estate (b).

Principle applied to equity of redemption.

3. The same principle was applied by Sir John Romilly, M.R.,

And where a trust of real estate was created in favour of an alien, the Crown was entitled to the benefit of the trust as against both the trustee and the heir at law of the settlor; Barrow v. Wadkin, 24 Beav. 1; and see p. 44, supra.

to an equity of redemption; and his Honour decided, that, where there was a mortgage in fee and then the mortgagor died intestate without heirs, the equity of redemption did not escheat to the Crown, but belonged to the mortgagee, subject to the mortgagor's debts (a).

[4. Where a testatrix, who died without heirs, devised copyholds in trust for one for life with remainder to charitable uses which were void, so that there was a resulting trust for the testatrix, the customary heiress of the survivor of the trustees of the will appointed by the Court was held entitled to be admitted as tenant for her own benefit (b). [Copyholds.]

5. Now by "The Intestates' Estates Act, 1884" (c), where after the passing of that Act (14th August, 1884) a person dies without an heir and intestate as to any equitable estate or interest in any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, whether devised or not devised to trustees by the will of such person, the law of escheat shall apply in the same manner as if the estate or interest were a legal estate in corporeal hereditaments.] [Trust estate now subject to escheat.]

SECTION XI.

THE DESCENT OF THE TRUST.

1. A TRUST is governed by the same rules of descent as the legal estate is on which the trust is engrafted, and that whether the legal estate descends according to the course of common law, or is subject to a lex loci. Trust descends as the legal estate.

2. If one seised of land ex parte maternâ convey to a person in fee upon trust, and no trust is expressed, the resulting interest is part of the original estate, and will descend in the maternal line, and, failing the heirs on the part of the mother, would rather absolutely determine, than pass into the paternal line (d). But if one seised ex parte maternâ devise to A. and his heirs upon trust for a person for life, and then in trust to convey to Seisin ex parte maternâ.

the testator's heir at law, this breaks the descent, and the heir ex parte paternâ is entitled to the equitable remainder (a).

Gavelkind.

3. If the land be subject to gavelkind, borough English, or other custom, the equitable interest will follow the same course of inheritance (b).

Copyholds.

4. And a trust of copyholds as well as of freeholds is governed by the descent of the legal estate (c).

Possessio fratris.

5. The analogy to law is so strictly preserved that, until an Act of 1834, if the last cestui que trust had no seisin of the equitable estate corresponding to possessio fratris at law, the trust would have descended to the brother of the half blood, not to the sister of the whole blood (d). By the Act referred to, the half blood is now in all cases (but subject to the preferable claim of the whole blood) capable of inheriting estates, whether legal or equitable (e).

Proceeds from sale of gavelkind lands.

6. If a settlement contain a power of sale, with a trust to reinvest the proceeds in a purchase to the same uses, and the lands are sold, but the proceeds are not reinvested, though the bulk of the estate sold was of gavelkind tenure, yet if one of the uses be to A. and his heirs, the proceeds of the sale will descend to the heirs of A. at common law, and not to the heirs by the custom of gavelkind (f).

Limitation to heirs as purchasers.

7. And if gavelkind or borough English lands (g) be limited to a person's heirs as purchasers, the common law heirs and not the customary heirs are entitled; as, where a testator directed trustees to stand seised of gavelkind lands for the separate use of A. for life, and so as her husband should not intermeddle therewith, and after her death upon trust to convey to the heirs of her body for ever, Lord Hardwicke held that the trust was executory, and that the Court must therefore look to the intention, which was to give a life-estate to A., and the remainder to the heirs as purchasers (h); for, as the husband was not to intermeddle therewith, his curtesy was to be excluded, which would not be the case if A. were tenant

SECTION XII.

OF ASSETS.

THE general law relating to assets, as it stood previously to the Statute of Frauds may be thus stated.

Legal assets.

1. The executor or administrator of the deceased was bound to apply his personal estate in payment of his debts; and this in the order of their legal priorities, as first of judgments, then of specialties, and then of simple contract debts; or, as it was expressed, the personal estate was legal assets.

Assets by descent.

2. Again, where the deceased had executed an instrument binding himself and his heirs, the heir to the extent of the real estate (except copyholds) which came to him, was bound to satisfy this obligation of his ancestor, or, in other words, the lands so inherited were assets by descent.

Equitable assets.

3. The 32 Henry 8. c. 15, which first gave the power of devising lands, inadvertently opened a door to fraud, since it was held that if the owner of land devised it away, a creditor claiming by bond or other instrument binding the heir could not sue the devisee, and if he sued the heir, the latter might plead he had no land by descent. Where, however, the owner had by his will charged his lands with or devised them subject to the payment of debts, a Court of equity viewed the creditors as cestuis que trust, and made the land available in satisfaction of the debts; and in doing this it paid all the creditors pari passu without reference to their legal priorities, that is, the lands so charged or devised were equitable assets.

Equitable interests.

4. With these prefatory remarks we proceed to the consideration of equitable interests as assets before the Statute of Frauds.

Trusts of chattels are assets.

5. The trust of a chattel was always accounted assets in equity (a); by which is meant, not equitable assets, but assets for the due application of which in payment of debts the personal representative was responsible in equity, if not at law.

(a) Roberts v. Dixwell, 1 Atk. 607; 90; Sladen v. Sladen, 2 J. & H. 369. and see Thorp v. Owen, 2 Sm. & G.

Trusts of a freehold.

6. But whether the trust of a freehold should be assets in the hands of the heir for payment of debts by specialty in which the heirs were bound was for a long time vexata quæstio. On the one hand it was argued, that the trust ought to follow the use, and that the use was not liable to a bond creditor; on the other hand it was said, that trusts since the Statute of Uses had been conducted by the Courts on more liberal principles, and, as the legal fee was available to the discharge of specialty debts at law, so a Court of equity ought to adopt the same rule in the administration of trusts.

Bennet v. Box.

It was determined by Lord Hale, Chief Justice Hyde, and Justice Windham, in the case of Bennet v. Box, that a trust in fee should not be assets (b); and Lord Keeper Bridgman afterwards felt himself bound by the authority of this decision in respect of a trust (c), though he doubted somewhat as to an equity of redemption (d); and so the law as to a trust was laid down by Lord Hale in Attorney-General v. Sands (e).

Grey v. Colvile.

The question was renewed before Lord Nottingham in Grey v. Colvile (f), when trust estates were declared to be assets in equity. The case was afterwards reheard before Lord Guildford, and is reported by Vernon under the title of Creed v. Colvile (g), and his Lordship said, he "should be much governed by the case of Bennet v. Box, unless they could show that the latter precedents had been otherwise," and directed them to attend him with precedents towards the latter end of the term. The cause was brought on again the December following, and the Court ordered that the parties should attend the two Chief Justices and the Lord Chief Baron, who were desired to certify their opinion on the question (h). In Michaelmas term the next year, upon the motion of the defendants, it was ordered, that, unless plaintiffs, the creditors, procured the certificate of the Lords Chief Justices' and Lord Chief Baron's opinion by the first day of the next term, the bill should be dismissed without further motion (i). No further proceedings appear in the case; and, therefore, it must be concluded that the bill was dismissed. There can be no doubt, however, that Lord Nottingham's decision was correct, and in Goffe v. Whalley (a) the question was renewed, but the result does not appear, unless the overruling of the heir at law's demurrer to the creditor's bill was on the ground that the Court held the trust to be assets.

Statute of Frauds.

7. Thus stood the law before the Statute of Frauds (b). By the 10th section of that Act a trust in fee-simple was declared to be assets by descent. But the enactment was taken to embrace simple trusts only, and not complicated trusts (c), or equities of redemption (d), so that the question still remained whether such interests as were not within the statute might not still, upon the general principles of equity, be treated as assets by analogy to law. This was expressly so decided as to equities of redemption in Plucknet v. Kirk (e) and other cases (f); and upon principle, the rule governing equities of redemption ought equally to be applied to every other equitable interest.

3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104.

8. The question is now of little importance, as it was enacted by 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104 (g), that all a person's "estate or interest" (which must include any trust) in lands, tenements or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, or other real estate, whether freehold, customaryhold, or copyhold, should be assets for the payment of debts as well on simple contract as on specialty.

Whether a trust is legal or equitable assets.

9. There remains to be considered the question, whether a trust shall, as to persons who died before 1*st January*, 1870 (h), be administered as legal or equitable assets.

Trust of a chattel.

10. It has in some cases been considered that the mere circumstance that property was equitable at the testator's death, was sufficient to make it equitable assets (i), but this is clearly erroneous, the question being, not whether the assets can be recovered at law or in equity, but whether the creditor can obtain payment thereout only from a Court of equity (j). Now if an executor recover money in that character under a trust or other equitable right, the proceeds, when actually come to his hands, will be legal assets, even in a Court of law (a); and it would be an inconsistency to say, that if the property has been reduced into possession, a Court of equity shall administer it as legal assets, but if it be outstanding at the time when the creditor institutes proceedings in equity, it shall be administered as equitable assets. Upon this principle it has at length been established, after much fluctuation (b), that equitable interests in personal estate are to be distributed as legal assets (c). "Whether," observed Sir R. Kindersley, "the assets are such that the executor can recover them in a Court of law or in a Court of equity only is immaterial. The true test is, whether he recovers them "virtute officii." If the assets come to his hands as executor, a Court of law would treat them as assets and they are to be administered (in equity) as legal assets" (d).

Trust in fee in the hands of the heir.

11. A trust in fee stands in a very different light from the trust of a chattel in the hands of the executor. As regards the inheritance, until modern Acts (e), it was only in respect of creditors by specialty in which the heirs were bound, that the question of legal or equitable assets could in fact have arisen, for specialties in which the heirs were not bound, and simple-contract debts, were not payable out of real estate, and statutes and judgments though liens, to a partial extent, upon the equitable fee, were not payable as debts, but as incumbrances. In respect then of specialties in which the heirs were bound, a plain and simple trust was made assets in a Court of law in the hands of the heir by the Statute of Frauds, and therefore was legal assets in equity (f); but complicated trusts, and equities of redemption, were not touched by the statute; and it would seem, upon principle, that as equity subjected the trust to specialty creditors by analogy only to law, the Court ought, by observing the analogy throughout, to adopt the legal course of administration.

In the case of Grey v. Colvile, before referred to, in which bond-creditors, had, after the debtor's decease, entered up judgments against the heir who took by descent; it appears to have been assumed by the litigants, and was decreed by Lord Nottingham, than whom no Chancellor had a more just conception of the true nature of trusts, that the creditors should be paid according to the priority of their judgments out of a trust in fee (a). Grey v. Colvile.

12. In the case of the devise of a trust in fee, the analogy presented by the case of the devise of a legal fee ought, it is conceived, to be pursued. By 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14, the power of the owner of the land to devise it away in fraud of his creditors (b) was first restrained, and a remedy was given against the heir and devisee jointly, in respect of the property so devised. The statute, however, expressly excepted from its operation, as do also the subsequent Acts enlarging the creditors' remedies (c), devises clothed with a trust or charge for payment of debts. It is conceived, that the true test whether an equitable estate in fee devised shall be legal or equitable assets, is, whether the estate if legal and devised in similar terms would have constituted legal or equitable assets (d). Whether trust in fee devised is legal or equitable assets.

13. By 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104, it was enacted that when any person should die seised of or entitled to any estate or interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, or other real estate, whether freehold, customaryhold, or copyhold, which he should not by his last will have charged with, or devised subject to the payment of his debts, the same should be assets, to be administered in Courts of equity for the payment of the just debts of such person, as well debts due on simple contract as on specialty; and that the heir or heirs at law, customary heir or heirs, devisee or devisees of such debtor, should be liable to all the same suits in equity at the suit of any of the creditors of such debtor, whether creditors by simple contract or by specialty, as the heir or heirs at law, devisee or devisees of any person or persons, who died seised of freehold estates, was or were before the passing of that Act liable to in respect of such freehold estates, at the suit of creditors by specialty in which the heirs 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104.

were bound: provided always that in the administration of assets under and by virtue of that Act all creditors by specialty in which the heirs were bound should be paid the full amount of the debts due to them before any of the creditors, by simple contract, or by specialty in which the heirs were not bound, should be paid any of their demands.

Construction of the Act.

Upon the construction of this statute the following observations occur:—

a. The Act creates a general charge on the estate for the benefit of creditors (a), subject only to the right of alienation in the heir or devisee (b).

β. The words "assets to be administered in equity" mean only that the creditor's remedy shall be in equity, and not that the estate shall be administered as equitable assets, and [it would seem,] therefore, that the estate is to be administered as legal assets (c).

[γ. No right of retainer is given to the heir or devisee for a debt due to him on a simple contract. But it would seem that such a right of retainer in respect of a debt by specialty in which the heirs are bound is not taken away (d).]

δ. The express terms of the Act giving priority to creditors by specialty in which the heirs are bound over creditors by specialty in which the heirs are not bound, have, as a matter of course, had full effect given to them (e).

(a) Kinderley v. Jervis, 22 Beav. 1.

(b) See cases, p. 264, note (c).

(c) See Foster v. Handley, 1 Sim. N. S. 200; more fully reported, 15 Jur. 73; Re Burrell, 9 L. R. Eq. 443, where it was held that creditors by specialty in which the heirs were bound were entitled to priority as against an equity of redemption in copyholds. In Re Illidge, 24 Ch. D. 654, in which however the earlier cases were not cited, it seems to have been assumed by Chitty, J., that the assets were to be administered as equitable assets; and see S. C. on appeal, 27 Ch. Div. 478, 484.

[(d) Re Illidge, 24 Ch. D. 654; 27 Ch. Div. 478; explaining Ferguson v. Gibson, 14 L. R. Eq. 379. The foundation of the rule, allowing the right of retainer out of the real estate to an heir at law or devisee being a creditor by specialty in which the heirs were bound, was, that he might not be under a disadvantage by not being able to sue himself; since, if he could not retain, other like creditors might have obtained priority over him by suing him. But a simple contract creditor or creditor by specialty in which the heirs were not bound, could not get a judgment giving him priority, and so the rule had no application in his case. There appears to be nothing in 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104, or in 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46 to take away from a creditor by specialty in which the heir is bound the old right of action against the heir or devisee, and it seems to follow that although the former statute makes real estate liable to be administered by Courts of equity, the right of the heir or devisee to retain is no more taken away, than the power of Courts of equity to administer personal estate takes away an executor's right of retainer; Re Illidge, ubi supra.]

(e) Richardson v. Jenkins, 1 Drew. 477.

ε. The Act makes no mention of debts by judgment or by decree of a Court of equity, so that the remedies for the recovery of these out of the real estate may perhaps be viewed as still depending upon the general law (a).

14. As regards the administration of estates of persons who may have died on or after the 1*st January*, 1870, the legislature has now abolished the distinction between specialty and simple contract debts, and has directed all specialty and simple contract debts to be paid pari passu (b). [But this does not interfere with or enlarge the right of the executor to retain his own debt, as against creditors in equal degree with himself, except in so far as it increases the fund available for payment of simple contract creditors (c); nor does it affect his right of preferring one creditor to another (d). 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46.

(a) Judgments against the testator or intestate and decrees in equity against the testator or intestate are paid out of the personal estate pari passu. Decrees (if for payment of money or costs) were by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18 (though they were not formerly; Bligh v. Darnley, 2 P. W. 619; Mildred v. Robinson, 19 Ves. 585,) liens upon the real estate; and they always ranked as of equal degree with judgments in the administration of personal estate, and therefore above specialty or simple contract debts; Searle v. Lane, 2 Vern. 37, Foly's case, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 459; Stasby v. Powell, 1 Freem. 333; Peploe v. Swinburn, Bunb. 48. Judgments and decrees against the personal representative are paid out of legal assets in the order of their dates; Dollond v. Johnson, 2 Sm. & G. 301, and cases cited, Ib. When dockets were in use, a judgment against a person had no priority in the administration of his assets over other debts unless it was docketed; Hickey v. Hayter, 6 T. R. 384; Landon v. Ferguson, 3 Russ. 349. But when the docket was closed the judgment had priority per se, and the executor or administrator was bound by that priority though he had no notice, and no means of obtaining notice of the judgments; Fuller v. Redman, 26 Beav. 600. To remedy this inconvenience it was in effect enacted by Lord St. Leonard's Law of Property Amendment Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, ss. 3, 4, that judgments should have no priority in the administration of assets unless they were registered; Van Gheluive v. Nerinckx, 21 Ch. D. 189. But the Act does not apply where the judgment is recovered against the executor or administrator, as in that case the personal representative has full notice necessarily, and no remedy is required; Jennings v. Rigby, 33 Beav. 198; Gaunt v. Taylor, 3 Man. & G. 886, and 3 Scott (N. S.) 700; Re Williams' Estate, 15 L. R. Eq. 270; Re Maggi, 20 Ch. D. 545. And the Act is retrospective, so that an unregistered judgment, though entered up against a debtor living at the date of the Act has no preference; Kemp v. Waddingham, 1 L. R. Q. B. 355. But otherwise, where the debtor was dead at the date of the Act, so that the creditor had acquired a vested right; Evans v. Williams, 2 Dr. & Sm. 324. [And the priority of judgment creditors in the administration of assets is not affected by s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875; Smith v. Morgan, 5 C. P. D. 337; Re Maggi, ubi sup.]

[Retainer by executor.]

15. Where there are specialty debts and simple contract debts, and the right of retainer of the executor is in respect of a simple contract debt, the assets should be apportioned on the footing of giving all the creditors an equal dividend. The dividend in respect of the specialty debts is payable to them in full, and out of the residue of the assets the executor will retain his debt, and the surplus, if any is divisible rateably among the other simple contract creditors (a).

[Administration in bankruptcy of estate of deceased debtor.]

16. By the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (b), sect. 125, and the Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (c), sect. 21, an order may be made in bankruptcy for the administration according to the law of bankruptcy of the estate of a deceased debtor. And where proceedings for administration of the debtor's estate have been instituted in another Court, such Court may, on proof that the estate is insufficient to pay its debts, transfer the proceedings to the Court exercising jurisdiction in bankruptcy, and thereupon that Court can make an order for the administration of the estate according to the law of bankruptcy. It is, however, in the discretion of the Court in which the estate is being administered to retain the administration (d), and where the estate was small, the number of creditors small, and considerable expense had been incurred in the administration before the application for transfer was made, an order for transfer was refused; and a doubt was expressed whether a creditor who had not proved his debt had any locus standi to apply for the transfer (e). And the circumstances that the executor has a right of retainer, and that he is not bound to plead the Statute of Limitations, are not grounds for directing a transfer (f). By sub-sect. (5) of sect. 125, upon an order being made for administration, the property of the debtor vests in the official receiver as trustee, and he is to realize and distribute it in accordance with the provisions of the Act. The provisions here referred to are those relating to the property of the debtor, not those relating to the property of other persons; thus, for instance, sect. 47, avoiding certain voluntary settlements executed by a bankrupt, has no application (g). By sub-sect. (7) the official receiver is to have regard to any claim by the legal personal representative of the deceased debtor to payment of the proper funeral and testamentary expenses incurred by him, and such claims are to be deemed a preferential debt, and paid in full out of the debtor's estate, in priority to all other debts. By sub-sect. (8) any surplus assets, after payment in full of all debts, costs of administration, and interest, are to be paid over to the legal personal representative of the debtor, or dealt with in such other manner as may be prescribed. By sub-sect. (9) notice to the legal personal representative of a deceased debtor of the presentation by a creditor of a petition under the section, if an order for administration is made thereon, is to be equivalent to notice of an act of bankruptcy, and after such notice no payment or transfer of property made by the legal personal representative is to operate as a discharge as between himself and the official receiver, but save as aforesaid nothing in the section is to invalidate any payment made or any act or thing done in good faith by the legal personal representative before the date of the order for administration.

If an order for administration be made under this section, it is conceived that the executor's right of retainer will, as from the time of his receiving notice of the petition, cease so far as regards any assets not actually retained at the date of the notice (a).]

CHAPTER XXVIII.

RELIEF OF THE CESTUI QUE TRUST AGAINST THE FAILURE OF THE TRUSTEE.

We have now pointed out in what the estate of the cestui que trust primarily consists. We have also examined what are the incidents and properties of it by analogy to estates at law or by statute. It follows next that we speak of certain collateral or subsidiary rights, by which the cestui que trust is supported in the enjoyment of his equitable interest against the various accidents to which an estate, not direct, but transmitted through the instrumentality of another, must necessarily be exposed. In the present chapter we shall consider the force of the maxim, "A trust shall not fail for want of a trustee."

Trust follows the estate.

1. It is a general rule that, whenever the intention of the settlor can be clearly collected, and there is no want of consideration, the Court will follow the estate into the hands of the legal owner, not being a purchaser for value without notice, and compel him to give effect to the trust by the execution of the proper assurance.

Trustee dying in testator's lifetime, or otherwise failing.

Thus, if a devisor or settlor appoints a trustee, who either dies in the testator's lifetime (a), or disclaims (b), or is incapable of taking the estate (c), or if the trustee otherwise fail (d), the trust is not thereby defeated, but fastens on the conscience of the person upon whom the legal estate has devolved. "I take it," said Lord Chief Justice Wilmot, "to be a first and fundamental principle in equity, that the trust follows the legal estate wheresoever it goes, except it comes into the hands of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. A Court of equity considers devises of trusts as distinct substantive devises, standing on their own basis, independent of the legal estate: and the legal estate is nothing but the shadow which always follows the trust estate in the eye of a Court of equity" (a).

Direction to sell, and no person to sell named.

2. If a testator direct a sale of his lands for certain purposes, but omits to name a person to sell, the trust attaches upon the conscience of the heir, and he is strictly bound in equity to give effect to the intention (b).

Direction for separate use and no trustee appointed.

3. So, if [before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882,] the lands were devised (c), or a sum of money was bequeathed (d) to a feme covert for her sole and separate use, but without the interposition of a trustee, the property vested at law in the husband, in her right, but in equity he held upon trust for the separate use of the wife.

Failure of trustee of a power imperative.

4. We have seen, in a former chapter, that powers are distributable into powers arbitrary and powers imperative, and that powers imperative do in reality partake of the nature of trusts. Upon this ground the Court protects a cestui que trust from the failure of the donee of a power imperative, as it would do from the failure of any other trustee. "If," said Lord Eldon, "the power be one which it is the duty of the party to execute —made his duty by the requisition of the will—put upon him as such by the testator, who has given him an interest extensive enough to enable him to discharge it, he is a trustee for the exercise of the power, and not as having a discretion whether he will exercise it or not; and the Court adopts the principle as to trusts, and will not permit his negligence, accident, or other circumstances to disappoint the interests of those for whose benefit he is called upon to execute it" (e). "As to the objection," said Lord Chief Justice Wilmot, "that these powers are personal to the trustees, and by their deaths become unexecutable, they are not powers, but trusts, and there is a very essential difference between them. Powers are never imperative—they leave the act to be done at the will of the party to whom they are given. Trusts are always imperative, and are obligatory upon the conscience of the party intrusted. This Court supplies the defective execution of powers, but never the non-execution of them, for the powers are meant to be optional. But the person who creates a trust means it should at all events be executed. The individuals named as trustees are only the nominal instruments to execute that intention, and if they fail, either by death, or by being under disability, or by refusing to act, the constitution has provided a trustee. Where no trustees are appointed at all, this Court assumes the office. There is some personality in every choice of trustees; but this personality is res unius ætatis, and, if the trust cannot be executed through the medium which was in the primary view of the testator, it must be executed through the medium which the constitution has substituted in its place. A college was to be founded under the eye of five trustees: that cannot be: the death of the trustees frustrates that medium. What then? Must the end be lost because the means are by the act of God become impossible? Suppose the question had been asked the testator, 'If the trustees die or refuse to act, do you mean no college at all, and the heirs to take the estate?' 'No: I trust them to execute my intention: I do not put it into their power whether my intention shall ever take place at all'" (a).

Trustee of a discretion dying in testator's lifetime, declining office, &c.

5. If trustees, then, have an imperative power committed to them, and they either die in the testator's lifetime (b), or decline the office (c), or disagree among themselves as to the mode of execution (d), or do not declare themselves before their death (e), or if from any other circumstance (f), the exercise of the power by the party intrusted with it becomes impossible, the Court will substitute itself in the place of the trustees, and will exercise the power by the most reasonable rule. And the Court assumes the jurisdiction of exercising the power retrospectively (g), and will take up the trust, whatever difficulties or impracticabilities may stand in the way (a); for, as Lord Kenyon laid down the rule strongly, if the trust can by any possibility be executed by the Court, the non-execution by the trustee shall not prejudice the cestuis que trust (b).

Mode of execution.

6. In what mode the Court will execute the power will vary according to the circumstances of the case.

Where the settlor has prescribed a rule, the Court will adopt it.

Where the discretion of the trustee is to be governed by some rule, or to be measured by a state of facts, which the Court can enquire into as effectually as a private person, then the Court can "look with the eyes of trustees," and will substitute its own judgment for that of the individual (c).

Gower v. Mainwaring.

Thus in Gower v. Mainwaring (d), John Mainwaring executed a trust deed, by which the trustees were to give the residue of the real and personal estate among the settlor's relations where they should see most necessity, and as they should think most equitable and just. Two of the trustees died, and, the third refusing to act, it was discussed, how far the discretion of the trustees could be vicariously exercised by the Court. Lord Hardwicke said, "What differs it from the cases mentioned is this, that here is a rule laid down for the trust. Wherever there is a trust or power—for this is a mixture of both—I do not know that the Court can put itself in the place of those trustees, and exercise that discretion. Where trustees have power to distribute generally according to their discretion without any object pointed out or rule laid down, the Court interposes not; unless in case of a charity, which is different, the Court exercising a discretion as having the general government and regulation of charity. But here is a rule laid down: the trustees are to judge of such necessity and occasions of the family: the Court can (e) judge of the necessity: that is a judgment to be made of facts existing, so that the Court can make the judgment as well as the trustees, and, when informed by evidence of the necessity, can judge what is equitable and just on this necessity," and his Lordship decreed a division among the relations (such relations to be restricted to those within the Statute of Distributions) according to their necessities and circumstances, which the Master should enquire into, and consider how it might be most equitably and justly divided (a) (1).

How the Court will exercise the power where the settlor has laid down no rule.

7. Where the settlor has given no rule or measure by which the discretion is to be governed, the Court cannot in that case act upon mere caprice, but will execute the power by the most reasonable and intelligible rule that the circumstances of the case will admit.

Equality is equity.

And upon ordinary occasions the Court proceeds upon the maxim, that equality is equity (b). Thus in Doyley v. Attorney-General (c),

(a) 2 Ves. 110; and see Liley v. Hey, 1 Hare, 580.

Construction of bequest to "poor relations."

(1) The execution of the power in this case in favour of the settlor's relations within the Statute of Distributions, according to their necessities, leads us to observe upon the construction of a direct bequest to a person's "poor or necessitous relations." It is commonly thought that the epithet "poor," "necessitous," or the like, is merely nugatory; but on examination there will appear to be considerable authority in favour of the contrary doctrine. It is perfectly settled, notwithstanding a case in which Lord Hardwicke is said to have held otherwise, (Attorney-General v. Buckland, cited 1 Ves. 231, Amb. 71,) that "relations," though accompanied with the words "poor," "necessitous," or the like, will be restricted to those within the Statute of Distributions. The only question, therefore, is whether as among those within the statute expressions of this kind will not be allowed their effect. In a case reported by Peere Williams (Anon. case, 1 P. W. 327), the bequest was to "poor relations," and the Countess of Winchelsea, one of the next of kin, was allowed a share, in regard the word "poor" was frequently used as a term of endearment and compassion rather than to signify indigence. It is evident that this case can have no application where the word "poor" is not of doubtful meaning, but is clearly to be taken in the sense of poverty and necessity. In Widmore v. Woodroffe, Amb. 636, the testator had given a third of the residue to be distributed "amongst the most necessitous of his relations." There was only one relation within the Statute of Distributions, and it was held that such relation was exclusively entitled. The only point decided, therefore, was, that the addition of the term "necessitous" would not extend the construction of the word "relations" to those out of the statute. Thus there appears to be no authority for holding the words to be nugatory as among the relations within the statute, while on the contrary side of the question there are, as we shall see, direct decisions. In Brunsden v. Woolredge, Amb. 507, a testator gave 500*l.* to be distributed amongst his mother's poor relations, and Sir T. Sewell directed the fund to be distributed amongst the poor relations of the mother within the statute who were objects of charity. In Mahon v. Savage, 1 Sch. & Lef. 111, a testator gave 1000*l.* to be distributed amongst his poor relations, or such other objects of charity as should be mentioned in his private instructions to his executors. No instructions were left, and Lord Redesdale held, that Lynam, one of the next of kin within the statute, was not entitled to a share, unless he was a poor person at the time of the payment of the legacy. We may also add the dictum of Lord Thurlow in Green v. Howard, 1 B. C. C. 33:—"The word 'relations,'" he said, "must be confined a testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to dispose thereof to such of his relations of his mother's side who were most deserving, and in such manner as they should think fit, and for such charitable uses and purposes as they should also think most proper and convenient: and the power having devolved upon the Court, Sir J. Jekyll directed that one moiety of the personal estate should go to the relations of the testator on the mother's side, and the other moiety to charitable uses, the known rule that Equality is equity being, he said, the best rule to go by. He had no rule of judging of the merits of the testator's relations, and could not enter into spirits, and therefore could not prefer the one to the other, but all should come in without distinction.

Words of gift and words of power distinguished.

8. With respect to the subject under consideration, the cases in which the donor's intention is expressed in the form of a gift, may admit of distinction from those in which it is expressed in the form of a power.

Upon trust for the children of A. as B. shall appoint.

If a fund be limited "upon trust for the children of A. as B. shall appoint," the construction is, that the children of A. take a vested interest by the gift, subject to be divested by the exercise of the power. Therefore, on failure of the power, the children, who were the objects of the power, become absolutely entitled, just as if the discretion had never been annexed (a). But the gift is subject to the exercise of the power, and, therefore, if the power be testamentary, the donee of the power may well appoint in favour of those who may be living at his death, to the exclusion of those who may have predeceased him (b). [And where the will creating the power of appointment contained a recital that the testator had already provided for his children (who were the objects of the power), and did not intend thereby to make any further provision for them, it was held that the

to the statute, but not always in the proportions of the statute: where the testator has said, to relations according to their greater need, the Court has shown particular favour to one." The argument that the Court cannot distinguish between the degrees of poverty as amongst the relations within the statute is also answered by the case of Gower v. Mainwaring, cited in the text, in which a direction for such a distinction was actually made.

power was not a power coupled with a trust, and that the children were not entitled in default of appointment (a).]

Upon trust to dispose amongst the children of A.

Where an estate is vested in trustees "upon trust to dispose thereof among the children of A.," in this case the children take nothing by way of gift, but the transmission of their interest must be through the medium of the power. If the trust be to distribute equally among the objects, the bequest, though in the form of a power, must be tantamount to a simple gift (b); and if the trustees be at liberty to distribute unequally, and make no distribution, the Court itself executes the power, and divides the fund equally amongst the objects of it (c).

Discretion as to objects of the power.

9. But, further, a discretion may be given to the trustee, not only in respect of the proportions to be appointed, but also in respect of the objects to whom the appointment is to be made; as where a fund is bequeathed to trustees with a discretionary power of distribution to such of a class as the trustees shall think fit.

Whether to be regarded as a trust or power.

In the last case the question first to be resolved is, Did the settlor intend to communicate a mere power or to create a trust?

Harding v. Glyn.

In Harding v. Glyn (d), a testator gave to Elizabeth his wife a house and certain goods and chattels, "but desired her at or before her death to give the same unto and among such of the testator's relations as she should think most deserving and approve of." The wife died without having made any appointment, and the Court considered a trust was created, and divided the estate equally amongst the testator's relations living at the time of the wife's death.

Marlborough v. Godolphin.

In The Duke of Marlborough v. Lord Godolphin (e), Lord Hardwicke held, in a similar case, that there was merely a power and no trust.

Brown v. Higgs.

In Brown v. Higgs (f), on the contrary, where the introductory words used were, "I authorize and empower," Lord Alvanley decided that there was a trust. The cause was reheard before his Lordship, and, after grave consideration on the subject, he decreed as before (a). The decree was afterwards affirmed on appeal by Lord Eldon (b), and again affirmed in the House of Lords (c).

The doctrine of Harding v. Glyn has since been affirmed by other authorities (d), and may be now viewed as established. The rule has been thus laid down by Lord Cottenham: "When there appears a general intention in favour of individuals of a class to be selected by another person, and the particular intention fails from that selection not being made, the Court will carry into effect the general intention in favour of the class" (e).

The doctrine of Harding v. Glyn now established.

10. The question in favour of what objects a power imperative, whether of distribution merely, or of selection, will be executed by the Court, viz., whether in favour of those living at the death of the testator, or those living at the death of the donee of the power, remains to be considered; and it is conceived that, in reference to this question, the following results may be deduced from the authorities:—

In favour of what objects the Court will exercise a power imperative.

First. Where a testator bequeaths property with a power imperative in favour of a class, whether of children, relations, or others, and it appears to be the intention that the distribution or selection should take place as soon as conveniently may be after the testator's death, then the Court will execute the power in favour of the class as existing at the date of the testator's death (f).

Case where an immediate exercise of the power is contemplated.

Secondly. Where the frame of the will does not of necessity point to an immediate exercise of the power, as where the donee of the power takes a life estate expressly, or by implication, the nature of the power given to the donee has to be taken into consideration:

Where an immediate exercise not contemplated.

a. If the devise or bequest be in the form not of a gift, but of a power to be exercised by will only, then, inasmuch as the objects of the power are necessarily those only living at the death of the donee, the Court executes the power in favour of

The result will, of course, be the same where a life estate being given to the donee of the power, the donee dies in the testator's lifetime; see Penny v. Turner, 2 Ph. 493; Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 13 Ir. those members of the class only who are in esse at the death of the donee (a). But the rule applies only where the class takes through the medium of a power, for if there be a gift to them in the first instance, in such shares, &c., as the donee of the power shall appoint by will, then, in default of exercise of the power, the whole class take, whether they survive the donee of the power or not (b).

Where power not merely testamentary.

β. Where the power given to the tenant for life is not merely testamentary, but may be exercised either by deed or will, the question, whether the class to take is to be ascertained at the death of the testator or of the donee of the power, is involved in still further difficulty. The decisions which support an execution of the power in favour of the class of objects as existing at the death of the donee (c), and those which support an execution in favour of the class as existing at the death of the original testator (d), are almost evenly balanced; but the apparent absence of any full consideration of the question, and the circumstance that in some of the cases the power, though not expressly limited to an exercise by will, did not in terms authorize an execution by deed or writing, and may perhaps have been viewed by the Court as testamentary, detract from their value as authorities upon this point.

Upon principle, too, as well as upon authority, the question is attended with difficulty. On the one hand, the power may be properly exercised by the donee at any time before his death, and there is no obligation to exercise it earlier, and if any members of the class die before the power is exercised, they, according to the ordinary rule, cease to be objects of it. The donee of the power has an undoubted right to postpone the execution of it until the last moment of his life, and the only default which the Court has to supply, is the non-exercise just before the death, and that default must, therefore, be supplied in favour of those who were objects at the date of the death of the donee (a). On the other hand, the donee of the power may exercise it in favour of the class existing at the time of exercise, to the exclusion of those who have died before, and, also, where the power is one of selection, to the exclusion of those who may come into esse subsequently, but the Court cannot act arbitrarily, and cannot show any favour, but must observe equality towards all. Who, then, are the objects of the power? As it was not the duty of the donee of the power to exercise it at one time more than another, the only objects of the power must be all those who might by possibility have taken a benefit under it, that is, those living at the death of the testator, and those who come into being during the continuance of the life estate (b); otherwise, should all the class predecease the tenant for life (an event not improbable, where children or some limited class of relations are the objects), there would be a power imperative which is construed as a trust, and no cestui que trust, a result which, it is conceived, the Court would be somewhat unwilling to adopt.

[In a recent case where there was a residuary bequest to A. with a direction that "the whole principal at her death was to be divided amongst her children, if she had any, in such proportions as she should think fit," the late M. R. held, (1), that A. had a power of appointment, either by instrument inter vivos, or by will; and (2), that, as she did not exercise the power, her surviving child and the representatives of her children who had died in her lifetime were entitled to participate in the property (c). It is observable that the power in this case was only one of distribution; but in a still later case (d), where the power was one of selection and distribution, the objects who had died in the lifetime of the donee of the power were held entitled to participate; but the decision in the latter case was also based upon other grounds. The cases in which an intention appears that there should be a personal enjoyment by the objects of the power stand on a different footing, and in these cases there is good ground for holding that the object must survive the donee of the power in order to participate (e); but apart from any such indication it is conceived that the governing principle should be that all persons in whose favour the power could at any time have been exercised are objects, and that they all are equally entitled to participate.]

(a) See also observation by V. C. Wood in Re White's Trusts, Johns. 659, 660, a case different, however, from any of those discussed in the text, the donees of the power being trustees, who both died before the tenant for life.

Whole purview of instrument must be regarded.

γ. It is clear that where the donee tenant for life may exercise the power by deed or will, the members of the class in existence at the date of the death of the donee will alone take, if, upon the purview of the original instrument, they alone appear to be the objects of the power (a).

Construction of the word "relations."

Power of selection and power of distribution.

11. Where there is a power of appointment in favour of "relations," the donee of the discretion, if he have a power of selection, may appoint to relations in any degree (b), and it is only in those cases where he has a mere power of distribution that he must confine himself to the relations within the Statute of Distribution of Intestate's Estates (c). But the Court, except where the bequest is for the benefit of poor relations by way of founding a charity (d), or the testator has furnished some intelligible rule by which the relations out of the statute may be easily ascertained (e), must in all cases appoint to the relations within the statute; for as on the one hand the Court cannot act arbitrarily by selecting particular objects, so on the other it cannot execute the power in favour of relations in general, for this would lead ad infinitum (f).

Sewell seems (contrary to his opinion in Supple v. Lowson, ubi supra) to have confined the trustees to relations within the statute.

(c) Isaac v. Defriez, Amb. 595; but see the case stated from Reg. Lib., Attorney-General v. Price, 17 Ves. 373, note (a); Carr v. Bedford, 2 Ch. Rep. 146; Lawlor v. Henderson, 10 Ir. R. Eq. 150; Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Mer. 689. The last case, and Forbes v. Ball, 3 Mer. 437, were both decided by Sir W. Grant, but appear to be contradictory; however, in the latter case the question raised was, not whether the donee had exceeded her power, but whether the discretion was a power or a trust; for if a power, and it had not been executed by the will, the fund would have sunk into the residue, and the plaintiff have been entitled as residuary legatee. Note, a power of selection will be implied in a case of "relations," where it would not have been implied in the case of "children;" Spring v. Biles, cited 1 T. R. 435, note (f); Mahon v. Savage, 1 Sch. & Lef. 111; Salusbury v. Denton, 3 K. & J. 536. In the last two cases the words were "amongst the relations," but see Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Mer. 689, where the expression was similar.

(e) Bennett v. Honywood, Amb. 708.

(f) Thus in Bennett v. Honywood,

Whether relations shall take per stirpes or per capita.

12. A further point open to discussion is, in what shares such relations shall take,—whether those who in case of intestacy would have claimed by representation shall under the execution of the power by the Court take per stirpes or per capita.

Now, the rule that those are deemed relations who would take a distributive share under the statute was adopted on the ground, that, unless some line were drawn for restricting the meaning of the word, a bequest to relations would be void for uncertainty. As this was the sole foundation for appealing to the statute at all, it is evident the single enquiry for the Court is, who would take a distributive share: in what proportions they would take is wholly beside the question, and in fact beside the Court's jurisdiction; for, when the class has been ascertained, the testator himself has determined the proportions by devising to the objects in words creating a joint tenancy (a). No distinction can be taken between real and personal estate; yet it could scarcely be held, that if lands were devised to the testator's "relations," the kindred within the statute would take in unequal proportions.

Principle to be extracted from the cases.

The result of the authorities would seem to accord with what is correct upon principle, viz., that in a gift to "relations" (whether the testator has added the words "equally to be divided" or not), the distribution among the relations within the statute must be made per capita, and not per stirpes (b). The question can no longer arise where the gift is to "next of kin:" for by the decision of Elmsley v. Young, upon appeal from Sir J. Leach to the Lords Commissioners (c), the words "next of kin" must be construed to mean "nearest of kin," to the exclusion of those who would take under the statute by representation.

Subject of the gift incapable of division.

13. We have stated that, as a general principle, the Court will execute the power among the objects equally; but it sometimes happens that the subject of the gift is incapable of division, or the settlor has expressly directed the whole to be bestowed on one object to be selected by the trustee. In such cases the Court still acts upon the maxim, that, if by any possibility the power can be executed the Court will do it.

Moseley v. Moseley.

In Moseley v. Moseley (a), a very early case, an estate was devised to trustees upon trust to settle on such (i.e. on such one) of the sons of N. as the trustees should think fit. The trustees having neglected to comply with the direction, the sons of N. filed a bill to have the benefit of the trust, and the Court decreed the trustees, within a fortnight next after the entry of the order, to nominate such one of the plaintiffs as they should think fit, upon whom to settle the lands of the testator; and if the trustees should fail to nominate within that time, or there should be any difference between them concerning such nomination, then the Court would nominate one of the plaintiffs, it being the testator's intent that his estate should not be divided, but settled upon one person.

Richardson v. Chapman.

In Richardson v. Chapman (b), Dr. Potter, Archbishop of Canterbury, gave all his options to trustees upon trust, that in disposing thereof "regard should be had according to their discretion to his eldest son, his sons in law, his present and former chaplains, and others his domestics, particularly Dr. T., his chaplain, and Dr. H., his librarian; also to his worthy friends and acquaintance, particularly to Dr. Richardson." The trustee tried first to give the option in question to himself. He then fixed upon a person, with whom he appeared to have made an underhand bargain. When this failed, he, in breach of his duty, presented a Mr. Venner. On a bill filed to set aside the presentation, Lord Northington considered the trust to be of a kind that the Court could not execute, and dismissed the bill. Dr. Richardson appealed against this decision to the House of Lords, and the other person, who stood prior to him, not appearing, the House reversed the decree, and ordered the presentation to be made to the appellant. "This case," says Lord Alvanley "shows, that however difficult it may be to select the persons intended, and though it must depend from the nature of the trust upon the opinion of the trustees as to the merit of the persons who are the objects, yet the Court will execute even a trust of that nature, if the trustee shall either neglect to execute, or be disabled from executing, or shows by his conduct any intention not to execute it as the testator intended he should. When one reads the nature of this trust, how difficult it was to make the selection, it is decisive to show the Court must do it, though the trust is in its nature so discretionary" (a).

(a) Brown v. Higgs, 5 Ves. 504. In this case (see 4 Ves. 718, 719; 5 Ves. 508), an estate was devised "to one of the sons of Samuel Brown as John Brown should direct by a conveyance in his lifetime, or by his last will and testament;" and John Brown not having executed the power, Lord Alvanley was inclined to think, though he would not decide the point, that the children of Samuel Brown could not establish a claim; but the ground of this opinion was not that a trust had been created which the Court could not execute, but that the intention of the testator as collected from the will was to communicate a mere power.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE RIGHTS OF A CESTUI QUE TRUST IN PREVENTION OF BREACH OF TRUST.

As the estate of the cestui que trust depends for its continuance upon the faith and integrity of the trustee, it is reasonable that the cestui que trust, whose interest is thus materially concerned, should be allowed by all practicable means to secure himself against the occurrence of any act of misconduct. We shall, therefore, next consider the rights of the cestui que trust that are calculated to arm him with this protection.

Cestui que trust entitled to appointment of proper trustees.

First.—The cestui que trust is entitled to have the custody and administration of the estate confided to the care both of proper persons and of a proper number of such persons.

Trustee dying in testator's lifetime.

1. Thus, if the trustee originally appointed by a will happen to die in the testator's lifetime, the cestui que trust, where such a course would be for his interest, may have the property better secured by a conveyance to an express trustee for himself; and where a testator did not appoint a trustee at all, but only appointed executors, the Court asserted an inherent jurisdiction of its own to appoint trustees to take charge of the fund (a).

Death of trustees after having acted.

2. So, where the original number of trustees has become reduced by deaths, the cestui que trust may restore the property to its original security by calling for the appointment of new trustees in the place of the trustees deceased (b); and even a cestui que trust in remainder may take proceedings to have the proper number of trustees filled up (c), and under the new practice the Court has appointed new trustees upon an action by infant cestuis que trust without any statement of claim upon an admission in the statement of defence by the sole trustee that she was willing to retire (a).

Trustee refusing to act, becoming incapable, or misconducting himself, &c.

3. If a trustee refuse to act (b), or become so circumstanced that he cannot effectually execute the office (as where a trustee goes abroad to reside permanently (c), or the trustees of a chapel entertain opinions contrary to the founder's intention (d)), or if a trustee of money become bankrupt (e), or if a trustee misconduct himself in any manner (f) (as by dealing with the trust property for his own personal advancement (g), by suffering a co-trustee to commit a breach of trust (h), or by absconding on a charge of forgery (i)); in these and the like cases the cestui que trust may have the old trustee removed, and a new trustee appointed in his room. And in such a suit it will not be scandalous or impertinent to challenge a trustee for misconduct, or to impute to him any corrupt or improper motive in the execution of the trust, or to allege that his behaviour is the vindictive consequence of some act on the part of the cestui que trust, or of some change in his situation; but it will be impertinent, and may be scandalous, to state circumstances of general malice or personal hostility (j). And if the old trustee be removed on the ground of misconduct, he must bear the expense of the appointment of a new trustee, as an act necessitated by himself (a).

D. 43, in which case M.R. observed: "It is the duty of the Court to remove a bankrupt who has trust money to receive or deal with, so that he can misappropriate it. There may be exceptions under special circumstances to that general rule. And it may also be, that where a trustee has no money to receive, he ought not to be removed merely because he has become bankrupt, but I consider the general rule to be as I have stated. The reason is obvious. A necessitous man is more likely to be tempted to misappropriate than one who is wealthy; and, besides, a man who has not shown prudence in managing his own affairs, is not likely to be successful in managing those of other people." An exception to the general rule was made in Re Bridgman, 1 Dr. & Sm. 164, where a trustee became bankrupt, but without any imputation on his moral character, and had been honorably unfortunate, and but for an accident would have been solvent, and had been treated by all parties since his bankruptcy as a proper person to manage the trust. If the trustee compound with his creditors, the same rule applies as in bankruptcy, for the cestuis que trust have equally a right to have the administration of the trust estate committed to responsible persons; [Re Adam's Trust, 12 Ch. D. 634; and see Re Hopkins, 19 Ch. Div. 61; Re Foster's Trusts, 55 L. T. N.S. 479.]

[But where the instrument creating the trust contemplates the possibility of a single trustee being appointed to act alone, and the power of appointing new trustees is given to the trustees or trustee for the time being, it is not a breach of trust in the last surviving trustee to refuse to appoint another trustee to act with himself, and an action to compel him to do so, if not sustainable on other grounds, will be dismissed with costs (b).

[Trustee removed where it is to the advantage of the trust.]

4. The jurisdiction of a Court of equity to remove a trustee is ancillary to its principal duty, to see that the trusts are properly executed. And therefore, though charges of misconduct are not made out, or are greatly exaggerated, the Court may, if satisfied that the continuance of the trustee would prevent the trusts being properly executed, remove the trustee, as trustees exist for the benefit of those to whom the creator of the trust has given the trust estate (c).]

Trust property under administration by the Court.

5. If the trust property be under administration by the Court, and the surviving trustee dies, the appointment of other trustees is not matter of course, but rests in the discretion of the Court, having regard to the state of the trust at the time (d); and if liberty has been given by a former order to apply at chambers, and the parties present a petition instead of applying at chambers for the appointment of new trustees, the petitioners will be disallowed their costs (e).

Trustees required to be "inhabitants."

6. If the settlement require the trustees of a charity to be inhabitants of a particular place, it is irregular to appoint persons trustees who do not answer that description, provided at the time of the election there be any inhabitants proper to be trustees (f). But where it has been the custom to appoint trustees not being inhabitants, the Court will not remove the existing trustees, though it will take care that the founder's directions shall be better observed for the future (g); and generally, though trustees may have been appointed irregularly in the first instance, their removal cannot be demanded after acquiescence for a great number of years (a). And in the selection of trustees of charities the Court inquires whether the parties proposed are proper persons, not whether they are the most proper that could be found (b).

[7. Where the administration of a charity had been committed by the settlor to the lord provost and town council of Edinburgh and the ministers of the burgh, but for a long period the administration had been solely in the hands of the provost and council, it was held that, notwithstanding the length of time during which a contrary practice had prevailed, the ministers must in future be admitted as joint administrators of the charity (c).] [Proper mode of administration of charity restored.]

8. The Court will not dismiss a trustee for the mere caprice of the cestui que trust without any reasonable cause shown (d), or because the trustee has refused from honest motives to exercise a power at the request of a tenant for life (e), or because a dissension has arisen between the trustee and one of the cestuis que trust (f), or because a cestui que trust puts forward a claim, which may be unfounded, that property of the trustee ought to be brought into the settlement (g), or because the trustee has transgressed the strict line of his duty, provided there was no wilful default, but merely a misunderstanding (h). Where, however, a trustee pertinaciously insisted on being continued in the office, though his co-trustees were unwilling to act with him, Lord Nottingham said, "He liked not that a man should be ambitious of a trust when he could get nothing but trouble by it," and without any reflection on the conduct of the trustee, declared he should meddle no further in the trust (i). Trustee not to be dismissed from caprice.

9. As the substitution of a trustee by the Court proceeds upon a full consideration of the case, and is never made unless the Court is satisfied as to the fitness of the person proposed, it In appointing new trustees the Court will not give them a power of appointing other trustees.

cannot be expected that the Court should, when appointing new trustees and directing the trust property to be conveyed to them, authorize the insertion of a power in the conveyance, enabling the new trustees to nominate other trustees in their stead as often as occasion may require: this would plainly be an abandonment by the Court of its own jurisdiction—a delegation of it to the care and judgment of individuals. Accordingly, notwithstanding some previous fluctuation in the practice (a), it is now settled that, except in charity cases (b), the Court will not authorize the insertion of such a power in the deed of conveyance (c).

Rules for selecting new trustees.

10. In appointing new trustees the Court does not act arbitrarily, but upon certain general principles. First, the Court has regard to the wishes of the author of the trust, whether actually expressed in the instrument, or plainly deducible from it; and if he has declared a particular person not fit to be appointed a trustee, the Court will refrain from appointing him. Secondly, the Court will not appoint a new trustee with a view to the interest of some of the parties beneficially interested, in opposition to the wishes of others; for a trustee ought to hold an even hand as between all parties, and not favour a particular class. And, thirdly, the Court has regard to the nature of the trust, and the question by whose instrumentality it can best be carried into execution (d).

Statutory powers.

11. The exercise by the cestui que trust of his right to have the custody of the trust estate confided to a proper number of duly qualified trustees has been greatly facilitated by various statutes enabling him to obtain, in certain cases, the removal of unfit trustees, and the appointment of others in their room, and also the appointment of new trustees where the office is merely vacant; and this by a cheaper and more summary proceeding than by action.

[12. By the Bankruptcy Act, 46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, s. 147, which in substance re-enacted the 117th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, it is enacted, that "where a bankrupt is a trustee within the Trustee Act, 1850, sect. 32 of that Act shall have effect so as to authorize the appointment of a new trustee in substitution for the bankrupt (whether voluntarily resigning or not) if it appears expedient so to do" (a). Under this section the Court will, as a general rule, remove a trustee where the bankruptcy is recent, and it is not shown that the bankrupt is of good character, and has since his bankruptcy acquired means (b).]

13. By 2 Wm. 4. c. 57, s. 3, it was enacted that in case of the death of the trustee in whom any real property might have been vested in trust for any charity, the Court of Chancery might upon petition appoint new trustees, and direct the estate to be vested in them upon the charitable trusts. 2 W. 4. c. 57, s. 3.

14. By 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 76, s. 71 (the Municipal Corporations Act), it was enacted that in every borough in which the body corporate, or any one or more of the members of such body corporate in his or their corporate capacity then stood solely or together with any person or persons elected solely by such body corporate, or by any members thereof, seised or possessed for any estate or interest whatsoever of any hereditaments or personal estate whatsoever, in whole or in part, in trust for any charitable trusts, all the estate and interest, and all the powers of such body corporate or of such members thereof, should, from and after the 1st day of August, 1836, utterly cease; with a proviso that if Parliament should not otherwise direct, on or before the said 1st day of August, 1836 (which was not done), the Lord Chancellor should make such orders as he should see fit for the administration of such trust estates. 5 & 6 W. 4 c. 76, s. 71.

Under the authority "to make orders," the Court of Chancery from time to time appointed trustees for the due management of the charity property in the place of the corporation. The jurisdiction of the Court, however, was held not to apply to a case where no estate was vested in the old corporation, but the charity property was vested in trustees, and the corporation was merely the visitor with powers of nomination (c). charity corporation substantially, though not identically, the same in its component parts as the municipal corporation, the case was held to be within the spirit if not the letter of the section above referred to (a).

Legal estate.

The appointment of trustees by the Court under this Act, though it made them custodians of the property, could not of course transfer to them the legal estate, which, it was decided, notwithstanding the strong negative words used in the statute, remained in the corporation (b).

16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, s. 65.

15. But by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, s. 65, the legal estate was vested, without any actual conveyance, in the trustees appointed by the Court, and upon the death, resignation or removal, of any of the trustees, and the appointment of any new trustee or trustees, the legal estate transferred itself to the trustees for the time being without any conveyance.

Petitions for appointment of new trustees of charities.

16. [It was held that] petitions for filling up vacancies in the number of trustees of charities, in substitution for a corporation, ought to be presented under Sir S. Romilly's Act (52 Geo. 3. c. 101), as well as the Municipal Corporations Act (c), and that the Attorney-General's fiat should be obtained to such a petition (d); though this rule does not appear to have been uniformly adhered to (e).

[45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 133.]

[17. By the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (f), which repealed the previous Municipal Corporations Act, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, s. 65, without prejudice to anything done under those Acts respectively, the provision for the transfer of the legal estate without conveyance on the appointment of new trustees is, by sect. 133, re-enacted. It is to be observed that the section does not continue the power to make orders for the administration of trust estates, but the appointment of trustees can still be made under Sir S. Romilly's Act, though it will seldom be necessary to resort to it for the purpose.]

Appointment of trustees of charities under the Charitable Trusts Act.

chambers, and the Court has power at the same time to make an order under the Trustee Act, without petition, vesting the estates in the new trustees (a). But the sanction of the Charity Commissioners, under the 17th section, must first be obtained. And by a more recent Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 136, s. 2), the Charity Commissioners are empowered upon the application of the trustees or a majority of them, under their hands or common seal, to make the like orders for the appointment of new trustees of charities as could have been made by a judge at chambers; and this power extends even to contentious cases (b).

Peto's Act.

19. By 13 & 14 Vict. c. 28, "Wherever freehold, leasehold, copyhold, or customary property in England or Wales, has been or shall be acquired by any congregation, or society, or body of persons associated for religious purposes or for the promotion of education, as a chapel, meeting-house," &c., "and wherever the conveyance, assignment, or other assurance of such property has been or may be taken" to trustees duly appointed, such conveyance, assignment, or other assurance shall not only vest the property in the parties named, but also in their successors from time to time, and where there is no power to appoint new trustees, the society may, for the purpose of vesting the estate, appoint new trustees; [but every] such appointment [whether under a power in the trust deed or by virtue of the Act] must be evidenced by deed under the hand and seal of the chairman and attested by two witnesses. The primary, if not the only object of this enactment obviously was to make the trust estate devolve upon the trustees of the society from time to time without conveyance, and it is doubtful whether the new trustees to be thus appointed by the society [in the absence of any special direction in the trust deed] succeed generally to all the powers of the old trustees, or take the legal estate only (c).

[32 & 33 Vict. c. 26.]

[Trustees Appointment Act, 1890.]

By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 26 the provisions of Peto's Act were extended to burial-grounds, and by the Trustees' Appointment Act, 1890 (d) are made to "apply to and include any land acquired by trustees in connection with any society or body of persons comprising several congregations or other sections or divisions

The power of appointing new trustees conferred by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, or any other statutory power for the same purpose for the time being in force, is to apply to all land acquired and held on trust for any purpose to which Peto's Act or the Act of 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 26) applies, and any such statutory power may be exercised either by the persons and in manner therein provided, or by the persons and in the mode in which, under the instrument creating the trust, or any other instrument, the appointment of a new trustee in place of a deceased trustee can be effected (a). The vesting clause in Peto's Act is extended to the case of trustees appointed under any power conferred by the Act of 1890, or under any other statutory power (b), and where an appointment of a trustee can be made under a power in an instrument as well as under a statutory power, the latter power is not to be exercised until twelve months from the date of the vacancy to be filled up has expired (c); and provision is made whereby purchasers and mortgagees from trustees invalidly appointed are protected, if no proceedings are taken or effectively prosecuted to set aside the appointment within six months from its date (d). It is further provided that where trustees, or the major part of them, or other persons present at a meeting duly constituted, are empowered to appoint trustees by resolution, a memorandum of the appointment of any trustee which states that the meeting was duly constituted and is otherwise in the form indicated by Peto's Act, shall be sufficient and conclusive evidence that the appointment appearing by the memorandum was duly made (e).

13 & 14 Vict. c. 60.

22. Amongst the various provisions of the Trustee Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), it is enacted (by s. 32) that whenever it shall be expedient to appoint a new trustee or trustees, and it shall be found inexpedient, difficult, or impracticable, so to do without the assistance of the Court, the Court may appoint a new trustee or trustees, either in substitution for or in addition to any existing trustee or trustees (c). The effect of this section will be considered more particularly in the Appendix, in treating of the provisions of the Act generally.

Trustee may be compelled to any act of duty.

Secondly, The cestui que trust is entitled to bring an action against his trustee, and compel him to the execution of any particular act of duty.

Maintenance of right at law.

1. Thus, if the legal estate in the hands of the trustee be disturbed by a stranger, the cestui que trust, though he may not institute legal proceedings in the name of a trustee without his authority (d), may oblige the trustee, on giving him a proper indemnity, to lend his name for asserting the legal right (a). If the trustee of a covenant, even a voluntary one, will not sue upon it, the cestui que trust may compel the trustee on a proper indemnity to lend his name to the cestui que trust, to enable him to sue (b). Otherwise, should the trust property be lost, and the trustee himself become insolvent, the cestui que trust's equitable interest would be absolutely destroyed. [But the mere refusal by the trustee to sue will not entitle the cestui que trust to sue in his own name (c): to justify such a course special circumstances must be shown tending to disable the trustee from suing (as where his acts and conduct with reference to the estate are impeached), or rendering it inconvenient that he should do so (d).]

Tenant for life of renewable leaseholds neglecting to renew.

2. If a tenant for life of leaseholds be bound to renew, and by his threats or acts manifest an intention not to renew, the remainderman may institute proceedings and have a receiver appointed for the purpose of providing the renewal fine out of the rents and profits of the estate; and if the period of renewal has already expired, a receiver may be appointed on proof of the tenant for life's default (e).

Trustee giving security.

3. In one case, where a suspicion was entertained that the trustee would not fairly execute his trust, the Court required of him, if he continued in the office, to enter into securities for his good faith (f).

Cestui que trust may have a contingent interest secured.

4. And generally a cestui que trust, who can allege an existing interest, however minute or remote, may, upon reasonable cause shown, apply to the Court to have his interest properly secured.

interest, whether vested or contingent, and the mere possibility of a future event, which, if it occurs, may give birth to an interest. Thus where a one-fifteenth share of a residue was bequeathed to Isaac for life, if he married Esther, and after his death for Isaac's eldest or only child living at his decease, and who should attain twenty-one, with a gift over in case Isaac should not marry Esther, and Isaac married Isabella while Esther was still living, it was held by M. R. (a), and affirmed by Lord Westbury (b), that the eldest child of Isaac, an infant, as his interest was preceded by the condition that Isaac should survive his present wife, and then marry Esther, a possibility upon a possibility, could not sustain a suit for having his interest secured. Had Isaac survived his wife and then married Esther, the interest of the child would still have been contingent, and in that case M. R. appears to have thought that the child would have had no locus standi in Court, but L. C. was of a different opinion. And in another case, where a house was devised to trustees in trust for tenants for life, and after their respective deceases for their children then living, and the issue of such of them as should be dead, and failing such children and issue in trust for a class, and, there being issue of one of the tenants for life but not of the others, some of the class presented a petition for the appointment of new trustees, on the footing that they were "persons beneficially interested" under the 37th section of the Trustee Act, 1850, M. R. dismissed the petition with costs (c), but on appeal the order below was reversed, and the L. JJ. held that the petitioners were persons beneficially interested (d).

Trustee may be restrained from violating his duty.

Thirdly. As the cestui que trust may compel the trustee to the observance of his duty, so, on the other hand, if the cestui que trust have reason to suppose, and can satisfy the Court, that the trustee is about to proceed to an act not authorized by the true scope of the trust, he may obtain an injunction from the Court to restrain the trustee from such a wanton exercise of his legal power (e).

So a mortgagee with a power of sale will proceed at his peril to sell the mortgaged estate after tender of principal and interest, though costs be not included, if the security be sufficient; and a purchaser with notice cannot shelter himself under a clause in the mortgage deed exempting the purchaser from the necessity of seeing to

Though the damage would not be irreparable.

1. It is clear that the cestui que trust would be entitled to an injunction where the act in contemplation would, if done, be irremediable (a); but in Pechel v. Fowler (b), a case in the Exchequer while it was a Court of equity, it is said to have been held, that a cestui que trust could not restrain an improvident sale by the trustee, because the cestui que trust might proceed against the trustee for the consequential damage to the trust estate, and so the injury was not irreparable; but Sir J. Leach, under similar circumstances, granted an injunction (c); and other authorities are not wanting in support of so just and reasonable a right which may now be considered as established (d).

Partial owner may obtain injunction.

2. And not only a person exclusively interested in a trust fund, and therefore the absolute owner, may obtain an injunction against the disposition of it, which is almost matter of course; but one who has only a common interest with others in the trust estate, is entitled on behalf of himself and those others to have the property secured (e).

Injunction against bankrupt or insolvent trustee.

3. An injunction against the disposition of the fund may be obtained against an insolvent trustee (f) and à fortiori against one who is actually a bankrupt (g), and the Court will grant an injunction against the administration of the assets by an executor who is proved to be of bad character, drunken habits, and great poverty (h). [But the Court will not thus interfere in favour of a creditor, unless it is shewn that the assets are being wasted, and in a creditor's action for administration a receiver will not be appointed merely because the executor will probably exercise his legal right of retaining his own debt or of preferring a particular creditor (i)], nor will the Court interfere merely because an executor is poor (j).

CHAPTER XXX.

THE REMEDIES OF THE CESTUI QUE TRUST IN THE EVENT OF A BREACH OF TRUST.

Upon the subject of the cestui que trust's remedies for a breach of trust, we shall consider, First. The right of the cestui que trust to follow the specific estate into the hands of a stranger, to whom it has been tortiously conveyed; Secondly. The right of attaching the property into which the trust estate has been wrongfully converted; Thirdly. The remedy against the trustee personally, by way of compensation for the mischievous consequences of the act; and Fourthly. The mode and extent of redress in breaches of trust committed by trustees of charities.

SECTION I.

OF FOLLOWING THE ESTATE INTO THE HANDS OF A STRANGER.

The questions that suggest themselves upon this subject are, First. Into whose hands the estate may be followed; Secondly. Within what limits of time; Thirdly. What account the Court will direct of the mesne rents and profits.

First. Into whose hands the estate may be followed.

Where alienee is a volunteer estate may be followed.

1. If the alienee be a volunteer, then (subject to any bar arising out of the Statute of Limitations) the estate may be followed into his hands, whether he had notice of the trust (a), or not (b); for though he had no actual notice, yet the Court will imply it against him where he paid no consideration. But if the alienee be a purchaser of the estate at its full value, then (subject as aforesaid) if he take with notice of the trust, whether the notice be actual or constructive (a), he is bound to the same extent and in the same manner as the person of whom he purchased (b), even though the conveyance was made to him by fine with non-claim (c); for, knowing another's right to the property, he throws away his money voluntarily, and of his own free will (d). And the rule applies not only to the case of a trust, properly so called, but to purchasers with notice of any equitable incumbrance, as of a covenant or agreement affecting the estate (e), or a lien for purchase-money (f). But, if a bonâ fide purchaser have not notice, either expressly or constructively, he then merits the full protection of the Court, and his title, even in equity, cannot be impeached (g).

Purchaser without notice cannot protect himself by getting in legal estate from an express trustee.

2. If the purchaser have no notice of the trust at the time of the purchase, but afterwards discovers the trust and obtains a conveyance from the trustee, he cannot protect himself by taking shelter under the legal estate; for this is not like getting in a first mortgage, which the first mortgagee has a right to transfer to whomsoever he will (a); but here notice of the trust converts the purchaser into a trustee, and he must not, to get a plank to save himself, be guilty of a breach of trust (b). [But the plaintiff who seeks to deprive another of the benefit of the legal estate must rely on an equity of his own, not on that of a stranger (c).]

Purchaser without notice from purchaser with notice.

3. A purchaser without notice from a purchaser with notice is not liable, for his own bona fides is a good defence in itself, and the mala fides of the vendor ought not to invalidate it (d); and a purchaser taking the legal estate without actual notice of the trust, but taking it from a person in whom it vested by an instrument which disclosed the trust, but of which instrument the purchaser was ignorant at the time of purchase, can still protect himself as a purchaser without notice (e).

But the rule does not apply to the case of a charitable use, for it has been ruled that a purchaser without notice from a purchaser with notice shall be bound by the claim of charity (f). In other respects the principles of equity as to the doctrine of notice are applicable to charities in the same manner as between private persons (g).

Shares in a company.

Where a trustee of shares of a company within the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act transferred them to a stranger without notice, but who had notice before the transfer was registered, the purchaser was protected; for he had no notice when he paid his money, and it was like a conveyance where the legal estate was to become vested on the performance of some condition, such as making a demand or the like, and the registration involved no breach of trust by the trustee (h).

4. A purchaser with notice from a purchaser without notice is exempt from the trust, not from the merits of the second purchaser, but of the first; for if an innocent purchaser were prevented from disposing of the beneficial interest, the necessary result would be a stagnation of property (b). But if the trustee sell the lands to a bonâ fide purchaser without notice, and afterwards himself become the owner of the lands, though for a good and valuable consideration, the trust as to him revives again, and he shall restore the land to the trust (c); and in this respect equity follows the law; for, if a trespasser of goods sell them in the market overt, the owner's title is barred; but if they come to the trespasser again, the owner may seize them (d). ["The only exception to the rule which protects a purchaser with notice taking from a purchaser without notice is that which prevents a trustee buying back trust property which he has sold, or a fraudulent man who has acquired property by fraud saying he sold it to a bonâ fide purchaser without notice, and has got it back again" (e).] Purchaser with notice from purchaser without notice.

which are uncertain in themselves, and the meaning of which often depends on their locality." And Sir W. Grant observed, "There may be such a doubtful equity that a purchaser is not to be taken to know what will be the decision, and that is all Lord Camden (a) means; but in this case the equity is clear" (b).

Notice of "heirs of the body."

6. The rule, that "heirs of the body" in articles shall be construed "first and other sons," does not appear to have been fully established till about the year 1720 (c): Lord Hardwicke therefore said, that notice of ancient articles, that is, of articles before the doctrine was well settled, should not bind a bonâ fide purchaser (d). And afterwards, in a case of both articles and settlement before marriage, the settlement reciting the articles, Lord Hardwicke thought that, as the equity in this instance rested upon a single authority (e), and that one in which the question arose between the parties and their representatives and mere volunteers, the purchaser ought not to be bound by the claim of the issue (f). But notice of modern articles, that is, of articles entered into since the clear establishment of the rule, will affect a purchaser (g); but, even then, the articles themselves must be produced, that the Court may judge from the whole instrument; for the true construction depends upon the words, and other parts of the deed may be material to find out their meaning (h).

Lord St. Leonards' observations on Cordwell v. Mackrill.

Lord St. Leonards observed, that Cordwell v. Mackrill was of no great authority, though decided by a great Judge; and conceived the true rule to be that, where upon the whole articles it is plain what construction the Court would have put upon them, had it been called upon to execute them at the time they were made, they should be enforced however difficult the construction might be, even as against a purchaser with notice, but not after a lapse of time where there was anything so equivocal or ambiguous in them as to render it doubtful how they ought to be effectuated (i).

in fee, and then the heir of the testator recovered the land by ejectment and mortgaged it, and the residuary legatee, having neglected to assert his title to the possession for nine years, at the end of that period filed a bill in Chancery, and established his claim, it was determined that the mortgagee of the heir after the ejectment was not called upon to notice the right of the residuary legatee; for it was not that "clear, broad, plain, equity" which should affect a purchaser (a).

Separate use.

8. A testator had given a leasehold estate to his daughter to her sole and separate use, but without the interposition of a trustee (b), and the husband, supposing himself absolutely entitled, entered into possession, and afterwards mortgaged the premises; and it was held that the mortgagee was bound to notice the equitable construction of the will, as a doctrine well understood (c); and, the husband having obtained a reversionary lease and mortgaged it, the mortgagee was of course held cognizant of the rule, that leases obtained under cover of the tenant right would be subject to the equity of the original term (d).

[Conveyancing Act, 1882.]

[9. By the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (e), sect. 3, it is provided that "a purchaser shall not be prejudicially affected by notice of any instrument, fact, or thing, unless (i.) it is within his own knowledge, or would have come to his knowledge if such inquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by him; or (ii.) in the same transaction with respect to which a question of notice to the purchaser arises, it has come to the knowledge of his counsel, as such, or of his solicitor or other agent, as such, or would have come to the knowledge of his solicitor or other agent, as such, if such inquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by the solicitor or other agent." The section is not to exempt a purchaser from any liability under any covenant or provision contained in the instrument under which his title is derived mediately or immediately, but it applies to purchases made either before or after the commencement of the Act.

The section does not affect the ordinary rule that a purchaser cannot avoid constructive notice by omitting to investigate the title to the property (f), or set up the legal estate as against the Choses en action.

10. As regards choses en action, and other personal estate not transferable at law, which may have been purchased from a trustee, the purchaser, whatever amount may have been paid by him, cannot stand on a better footing than the person of whom he purchases, but must (in conformity with the established rule governing assignments of choses en action) hold them subject to the same equities to which the trustee held them (d).

Equitable mortgage by trustee.

11. So a trustee who has the legal estate cannot without a transfer of the legal estate create an equity, in breach of his duty; as if a trustee holding a mortgage were wrongfully to deposit the deeds by way of security, the depositee could not hold the deeds as against the cestuis que trust, for the transaction being inequitable in itself could not give birth to an equity (e).

[Equity of cestui que trust prevails over subsequent equities however arising.]

[12. So, where trust money was improperly laid out in the purchase of an estate, which was conveyed to A. and mortgaged by him to several persons in succession without notice of the breach of trust, of whom the first only had the legal estate, it was held that the claim of the cestuis que trust against the title, will not relieve the purchaser from the obligation of investigation), and cases there cited.]

property was an equitable estate of the same quality as the estates of the equitable mortgagees, and had priority over them as being prior in time (a). And where a lease was surrendered by an executor, and a new lease including additional property was taken by him in his own name and at an increased rent, and was deposited by him as a security for an advance made to him, it was held that the cestuis que trust had priority over the equitable mortgagee (b).]

Improper loans of trust money.

13. And if a trustee in breach of his duty lend trust money, and the borrower, with notice of the trust, applies it to his own use, the conscience of the latter is affected, and he cannot separate the loan from the trust, and insist that, when the loan would as a loan have been barred, the trust is barred (c).

General rule.

14. And it may be laid down generally that the rules of the Court are the rules of honesty and fair dealing, that no party to an illegal or fraudulent contract can derive any benefit from it, and that all persons who obtain possession of trust funds with a knowledge that their title is derived from a breach of trust, will be compelled to restore such trust funds (d).

15. By 37 and 38 Vict. c. 78, s. 7, no priority or protection by reason of the legal estate was allowed even to a purchaser for value without notice; but any priority or protection so acquired before the commencement of the Act was not to be taken away; and the Act was not to apply to Scotland. But the 7th section of the Act has since been repealed by 38 and 39 Vict. c. 87, s. 129. [A similar provision has, however, been since re-enacted as to the lands in Yorkshire by the 16th section of the Yorkshire Registries Act, 1884 (e).]

Secondly. Within what limits of time the suit must be instituted.

Time no bar in a direct trust, otherwise in a constructive trust.

1. It is a well-known rule, that, as between cestuis que trust and trustee in the case of a direct trust, no length of time is a bar; for, from the privity existing between them, the possession of the one is the possession of the other, and there is no adverse title (a). It has hence been argued, that as the person into whose hands the estate is followed is also by construction of law a trustee, the cestui que trust is entitled to the benefit of the rule, and is not precluded by mere lapse of time from establishing his claim. But the authorities show that this doctrine cannot be maintained (b).

"It is certainly true," said Sir W. Grant, "that no time bars a direct trust; but if it is meant to be asserted that a Court of equity allows a man to make out a case of constructive trust at any distance of time after the facts and circumstances happened out of which it arises, I am not aware that there is any ground for a doctrine so fatal to the security of property as that would be: so far from it, that not only in circumstances where the length of time would render it extremely difficult to ascertain the true state of the fact, but, where the true state of the fact is easily ascertained, and where it is perfectly clear that relief would originally have been given upon the ground of constructive trust, it is refused to the party who, after long acquiescence, comes into a Court of equity to seek that relief" (c). And Lord Redesdale observed, "The position that trust and fraud are not within the statute must be thus qualified: that if a trustee is in possession, and does not execute his trust, the possession of the trustee is the possession of the cestui que trust; and if the only circumstance is, that he does not perform his trust, his possession operates nothing as a bar, because his possession is according to his title. But the question of fraud is of a very different description; that is a case where a person who is in possession by virtue of the fraud is not, in the ordinary sense of the word, a trustee, but is to be constituted a trustee by a decree of a Court of equity, founded on the fraud; and his possession in the meantime is adverse to the title of the person who impeaches a transaction on the ground of fraud" (a).

General operation of lapse of time.

2. For more clearly understanding how lapse of time operates in reference to the remedy of the cestui que trust in the event of a wrongful alienation of the trust estate by the trustee, it may be useful to consider the effect of lapse of time upon suits for equitable relief generally.

Three bars to equitable relief.

To claims in equity there appear to be three bars arising from lapse of time:—I. A statute of limitation; II. The presumption of something done which, if done, is subversive of the plaintiff's right; III. The ground of public policy or inconvenience of the relief.

Bar by analogy to a statute.

I. Where there is a statutable bar at law, the same period was always, either by analogy or in obedience to the statute, adopted as a bar in equity in reference to equitable claims (b).

Lord Camden's views.

(1) The language of Lord Camden upon this subject has been admired as peculiarly energetic. "As a Court of equity," he said, "has no legislative authority, it cannot properly define the time of bar by a positive rule to an hour, a minute, or a year: it is governed by circumstances. But as often as Parliament has limited the time of actions and remedies to a certain period in legal proceedings, the Court of Chancery has adopted that rule, and applied it to similar cases in equity; for when the legislature has fixed a time at law, it would be preposterous for equity, which by its own proper authority always maintained a limitation, to countenance laches beyond the period that law is confined to by Parliament; and therefore in all cases, where the legal right has been barred by Parliament, the equitable right to the same thing has been concluded by the same bar" (c).

Lord Redesdale's views.

Lord Redesdale, in a case before him, observed, "It is said that Courts of equity are not within the statutes of limitations. This is true in one respect; they are not within the words of the statutes, because the words apply to particular legal remedies; but they are within the spirit and meaning of the statutes, and have been always so considered. I think it is a mistake in point of language to say that Courts of equity act merely by analogy to the statutes; they act in obedience to them" (a). And again, "I think the statute must be taken virtually to include Courts of equity; for when the legislature has by statute limited the proceedings at law in certain cases, and provided no express limitation for proceedings in equity, it must be taken to have contemplated that equity followed law; and therefore it must be taken to have virtually enacted in the same cases a limitation for Courts of equity also" (b). And the same doctrines have been repeatedly recognized by the highest authorities, amongst whom may be mentioned Lord Manners (c), Sir T. Plumer (d), Lord Lyndhurst (e), and Lord Westbury (f).

Limitation of twenty years.

(2) Upon these principles, then, an equitable claim to lands could never have been enforced after a lapse of twenty years; for though to writs of right and to formedons much longer periods were allowed at law, yet equity always looked upon these as peculiar and excepted cases, and guided itself rather by analogy to the statute of James, which fixed the limitation to the prosecution of rights of entry (g).

Bills to redeem.

(3) At law the remainderman's right always ran only from the determination of the particular estate, but in the case of a bill to redeem filed by the person entitled in remainder to the equity of redemption, twenty years' possession by the mortgagee without account or admission of title, though partly or wholly during the lifetime of the tenant for life, barred the remainderman; the ground for the distinction apparently being, that the remainderman might have filed a bill to redeem during a continuance of the life estate (h). But where the mortgagee is also tenant for life of the equity of redemption, [so that the same person is entitled to the rents and the interest,] the time does not run against the remainderman until the death of the tenant for life (a); [and the fact that the rents are payable to one set of trustees and the interest to another does not alter the case where the cestui que trust is the same (b),] and the same rule applies where the mortgagee is tenant in common with others of the equity of redemption (c).

Fine.

(4) Where a fine, with proclamations, was levied by a person claiming adversely, though a volunteer, without actual notice or other imputation of fraud, a constructive trust was held to be barred after a lapse of five years (d).

Statutory bar not avoided by ignorance, poverty, &c.

(5) In the case of a statutory bar the limited period affords a substantial insuperable obstacle to the plaintiff's claim, and no plea of poverty, ignorance, or mistake, can be of any avail. However clear and indisputable the title, could the merits be enquired into, the limited time has elapsed, and the door of justice is closed (e). If the Court could relieve after twenty years on the ground of distress, or any similar plea, so might it after thirty, forty, or fifty; there would be no limitation, and property would be thrown into confusion (f).

Effect of forbearance of the trustee to sue.

(6) Sir Joseph Jekyll is reported on one occasion to have laid down the rule that, "the forbearance of the trustees in not doing what it was their office to have done should in no sort prejudice the cestuis que trust" (g); and hence it has been inferred that a right gained by a stranger through the neglect of the trustee shall be no bar in equity to the claim of the cestui que trust; but this is not the case generally as regards the operation of the Statutes of Limitations. "The rule, that the Statute of Limitations does not bar a trust estate," said Lord Hardwicke, "holds only as between cestui que trust and trustee, not as between cestui que trust and trustee on the one side, and strangers on the other, for that would make the statute of no force at all, because there is hardly any estate of consequence without such trust, and so the Act would never take place. Therefore, where a cestui que trust and his trustee are both out of possession for the time limited, the party in possession has a good bar against them both" (a). "A cestui que trust," said Lord Redesdale, "is always barred by length of time operating against the trustee. If the trustee does not enter, and the cestui que trust does not compel him to enter, as to the person claiming paramount the cestui que trust is barred" (b). And Lord Manners observed, "The opinion of Sir J. Jekyll, if intended to apply to third persons, which I do not conceive it was, has often been denied, and is contrary to many decisions. If trustees neglect their duty, and suffer an adverse possession of twenty years to be held, I apprehend the Statute of Limitations is a bar to the cestui que trust" (c).

Case where cestui que trust is under disability, or is entitled in remainder.

(7) It results from the foregoing statements of the doctrine of the Court, that, as a general rule, where both cestui que trust and trustee are out of possession for the time prescribed by the Statutes of Limitations, the former suffers for the neglect of the latter and is barred. But the question still remains, whether in cases where the cestui que trust would, if his title were legal, have more than the ordinary time to sue (as where he is under disability or entitled in remainder only), he will be allowed the same extended period for suing in equity, notwithstanding that the trustee may be barred.

Where subject matter of trust is a debt.

(8) Where the subject matter of the trust is a debt, arising under a covenant or contract, it seems difficult to avoid the conclusion, that when the trustee is barred, the cestui que trust is barred also (d). But if the debtor borrowed the money as trust money, or knowing it to be such, he cannot set up the statute (e).

Where subject matter is land and possession is adverse.

(9) The same result would seem to follow where the subject matter of the trust is land, and the possession has been held adversely to both trustee and cestui que trust, without any species of privity, as when the trustee is disseised. Here there is generally no remedy in equity. The proper course for the cestui que trust is to bring ejectment in the name of the trustee. The rare instance of a person entering without privity or authority upon lands belonging in equity to an infant may perhaps constitute an exception, the rule being that he who so enters must, whether the infant is legally or equitably entitled, be regarded as a bailiff or receiver for the infant (a). But no such exception can be maintained where the infant has never been in possession by himself, his guardian, or agent, but the title was adverse to those through whom he claims (b). And even the existence of the objection itself cannot be viewed as free from doubt (c).

Where trust is of land and party in possession claims by conveyance from trustees.

(10) Where the subject matter of the trust is land, and the person in possession claims by conveyance from the trustee, here, unless the facts warrant the defence of purchase for value without notice, the right of the cestui que trust to fix the person in possession with the liability to perform the trust falls under an ordinary head of equitable jurisdiction. The cestui que trust is clearly entitled to proceed in equity against the legal owner, and the only question is within what time he must do so. In these cases, it is conceived, the cestui que trust (although the trustee may be barred from his action of ejectment) must, in the absence of any express statutory enactment applicable to the case (d), be entitled to sue in equity within the same extended period in reference to disability and accruer of right, as if his title were legal (e).

Fraud.

(11) No time will cover a fraud so long as it remains concealed; for, until discovery (or at all events until the fraud might with reasonable diligence have been discovered), the title to avoid the transaction does not properly arise (f). But, after discovery, the defendant may avail himself of the statute, for he has a right to say, "You shall not bring this matter under discussion at this distance of time; it is entirely your own neglect that you did not do so within the period limited by the statute" (a).

How defendant may take advantage of the statute.

(12) [The defendant may avail himself of the Statute of Limitations, by pleading it himself (b); but, if he neglect to do so,] he cannot shelter himself under the statute at the time of the hearing (c); though it seems the Court itself may still, in its own discretion, refuse to grant relief after the limited period (d).

In cases of fraud.

(13) Even when the plaintiff charges fraud, the defendant may plead [the statute] (e). If the plaintiff allege that he only discovered the fraud within the period limited by the statute, the defendant must either deny the fraud, or insist that the plaintiff had knowledge of it (f).

Bar from presumption.

II. The Court, after great length of time, will presume some act to have been done, which, if done, is a bar to the demand (g).

At what time presumption is raised.

(1) The period at which the Court raises the presumption depends upon the circumstances of the case. As a general rule, the Court presumes after a lapse of twenty years (1), but where there is a statutable bar at law, and of a different period, the

(1) In Harmood v. Oglander, 6 Ves. 199, 8 Ves. 106, the bill was filed after a lapse of thirty-two years, yet neither Lord Alvanley nor Lord Eldon considered the length of time to bar the plaintiff's demand; but in this case the parties were equitable tenants in common, and as between them the presumption of ouster did not arise.

Court will not entertain a presumption within a less time than the period fixed by the statute (a).

Ground of the presumption.

(2) Presumptions are made, not necessarily because the Court really believes what is presumed, but in the absence of evidence, for the purpose of quieting the possession (b). Lord Erskine observed, "It is said you cannot presume unless you believe. It is because there are no means of creating belief or disbelief, that such general presumptions are raised" (c). Where positive evidence can be presented to the Court, the fact may be presumed after a period much shorter than the usual one. And, on the other hand, though the distance of time may be far greater than the ordinary limit of presumption, yet if there appear any positive evidence to negative the fact, the legal inference cannot be sustained, for the rule is stabit præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. But the Court has judged it better, for the ends of justice, that presumptions should be favoured in law, and should not be rebutted by slight evidence in contradiction (d).

Ignorance, mistake, and distress.

(3) The Court cannot presume a person to have abandoned his right so long as he remains in ignorance of it, or labours under a mistake (e); and the distress of a person, so far as it accounts for his laches, will pro tanto weaken the foundation of the presumption (f). So a release of right cannot with the same force be presumed against a class of persons, as against an individual; for it is not likely that a person having only an aliquot share in the property, should pursue his remedy with the same spirit as if he were the exclusive proprietor (g).

Bar from public or private inconvenience.

III. Though the plaintiff's demand cannot be met by an absolute bar, and no release of right can be presumed; yet, thirdly, relief will not be granted where, if administered, it would lead to great public or private inconvenience (a).

In action for account a settlement may be presumed.

(1) Thus in an action for an account against an executor or administrator, who is in equity a trustee, and was formerly not protected by any statute of limitations (b), though the presumption of a final settlement may be rebutted by positive evidence, the Court will not open the account at any distance of time, when it is probable that most of the parties are dead, and the vouchers and receipts are lost (c).

Instances of great delay.

(2) Where a suit was prosecuted after a delay of threescore and two years, Lord Keeper Wright said, that "the cause being now within one year of the grand climacteric, it was fit it should be at rest" (d). But bills have been dismissed at the end of twenty-seven years (e), and a much shorter period would be a sufficient bar, should the Court see a difficulty in granting the relief: every case must be determined with reference to its own particular circumstances (f).

Pickering v. Stamford.

(3) In Pickering v. Lord Stamford (g) a testator gave the residue of his personal estate to a charity, and thirty-five years after his decease, the next of kin filed their bill for an account, and prayed that such part as consisted of money upon mortgage or other real securities, might be declared a void bequest, and distributable, subject to debts, &c., among the testator's next of kin. Lord Alvanley said: "I know no rule that has established that mere length of time will bar. Therefore, that being the case, I am to say whether under the circumstances a bar can be presumed" (h). And for facilitating the question of presumption, his Lordship directed certain previous enquiries by the Master; and it appearing from the report, that no release or assignment of their interest by the next of kin for the purposes of the charity could, under the circumstances, be presumed, his Lordship then had recourse to the ground of Inconvenience. The question, he observed, in all these cases is, whether there are motives of public policy or private inconvenience, to induce the Court to say, the suit ought not to be entertained. "If," said his Lordship, "from the plaintiff's lying by, it is impossible for the defendants to render the accounts he calls for, or it will subject them to great inconvenience, he must suffer; or the Court will oppose, what I think the best ground, Public convenience. The plaintiffs are so conscious of this, that they do not call on the trustees to account for what has been disbursed before any demand made. It appears that the trustees, who by their conduct have done themselves great credit, have kept such accounts that there is no difficulty in finding the personal estate at the death of the testator. Therefore, desiring to be understood by no means to give any countenance to these stale demands, but upon the circumstances that there is nothing inducing great public or private inconvenience, that the accounts are found, and that the trustees are not called on to account for what has been disbursed, I am bound to decide in favour of the plaintiffs" (a).

Bar from length of time.

(4) The doctrine laid down by Lord Alvanley in the case referred to, that mere length of time will not bar, requires some qualification. Lapse of time or delay in suing, unaccounted for by disability or other circumstances, constitutes per se in the eye of a Court of equity, laches disentitling the plaintiff, in certain classes of cases at least, to relief from the Court. Thus where a plaintiff cestui que trust seeks to impeach a purchase by a trustee, a delay of less than twenty years may bar his title to relief (b). So where a plaintiff seeks to set aside a purchase from him by his solicitor (c), or of a reversionary interest (d), or to fix a defendant with a constructive trust (e), or to call a person to account for acts of waste (f), or comes to a Court of equity alleging a case of fraud as a ground for avoiding the operation of the Statute of Limitations (g). So where an account was sought by a surviving partner against the estate of a deceased partner, the Court, even assuming such case to fall within the exception as to merchants' accounts in the Statute of Limitations, refused its aid after a delay of thirteen years (h). And where the assistance of the Court is sought in a suit for specific performance (a), or in one partaking of that character (b), the rule is extremely strict. It is difficult to refer the refusal of the relief by the Court, in the instances mentioned, to any one general principle. In the cases of purchases by trustees, or of claims founded upon constructive trust, the probability of alteration of circumstances in regard to the property, and the unfairness of the plaintiff in lying by, have weighed with the Court. Perhaps the nearest approach to general principle will be found under the head of "Public Convenience;" Expedit Reipublicæ ut sit finis litium" (c).

Bar from laches, where there is a Statute of Limitations.

(5) It has been pointed out that in certain special cases a delay of less than twenty years operates as a bar; and the Court in these instances departs still further from the analogy offered by the Statute of Limitations, by taking into account partly time which may have elapsed while the plaintiff's interest was reversionary (d). The question remains whether, in general, laches can be relied upon as a bar to a mere dry equitable demand falling within the purview of some or one of the Statutes of Limitations; and it seems the legislature itself having prescribed a term of limitation which it deems sufficiently short, the Court ought not further to abridge that term (e).

Acquiescence.

(6) Besides the bars which have been enumerated arising from the effect of time, a plaintiff may also be precluded from relief on the ground of acquiescence. This is of two kinds:—First, direct, where the act complained of was done with the full knowledge and express approbation of another, in which case a Court of equity will not allow that other to seek relief against the very transaction to which he was himself a party (f). Secondly, indirect, where a person, having a right to set aside a transaction, stands by and sees another dealing with property in a manner inconsistent with that right, and makes no objection; when also a Court of equity will not relieve (a). But in the latter case, the Court not only looks to the conduct of the person who stands by, but also considers how far the person in possession of the property has any just claims to the protection of the Court. Where, for instance, the possessor lays out his money, with a full knowledge that the property which he improves belongs to another, then it is said he makes the outlay to his own cost. "If," observed L. J. Turner, "a man places his property on the land of another with full knowledge of that person's title, how can the fact that the landowner assented to its being placed there give an equity to have it restored? If it did, the doctrine would come to this, that whenever a man lays out money on another person's land with the consent of the owner, he has an equity to have it repaid" (b).

[Where, however, the act complained of has been completed without any knowledge or assent on the part of the person seeking relief, there can be no acquiescence in the strict sense of the word, which has been "defined as quiescence under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred from it," and is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel by words or conduct. When once the act is completed without any knowledge or assent upon the part of the person whose right is infringed, a right of action has vested in him, which, at all events as a general rule, cannot be divested without accord and satisfaction or release under seal. Mere submission to the injury for any time short of the period limited by statute for the enforcement of the right of action cannot take away such right, although, under the name of laches, it may afford a ground for refusing relief under some particular circumstances (c).]

Limitation Acts.

We may now introduce the Acts for the limitation of actions and suits.

4. The 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27, enacts as follows:—

Lands and rents. Sect. 24: "No person claiming any land or rent in equity shall bring any suit to recover the same, but within the period, during which by virtue of the provisions hereinbefore contained (a), he might have made an entry or distress, or brought an action to recover the same respectively, if he had been entitled at law to such estate, interest, or right in or to the same as he shall claim therein in equity" (b).

Express trusts. Sect. 25: "When any land or rent shall be vested in a trustee upon any express trust, the right of the cestui que trust, or any person claiming through him, to bring a suit against the trustee, or any person claiming through him (c), to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued, according to the meaning of this Act at, and not before, the time at which such land or rent shall have been conveyed to a purchaser for valuable consideration, and shall then be deemed to have accrued only as against such purchaser, and any person claiming through him" (d).

Fraud. Sect. 26: "In every case of a concealed fraud the right of any person to bring a suit in equity for the recovery of any land or rent of which he, or any person through whom he claims, may have been deprived by such fraud, shall be deemed to have first accrued at, and not before, the time at which such fraud shall or with reasonable diligence might, have been first known or discovered" (e).

Acquiescence. Sect. 27: "Nothing in the Act contained shall be deemed to Arrears of rent or interest.

Sect. 42: "No arrears of rent or of interest in respect of any sum of money charged upon, or payable out of, any land or rent, shall be recovered by any action or suit, but within six years next after the same shall have become due, or after an acknowledgment of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same is payable or his agent."

37 & 38 Vict. c. 57.

5. And the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), enacts, that from and after 1*st January*, 1879:—

Sect. 1. No action or suit shall be brought to recover any land or rent but within twelve years from the time when the right first accrued.

Sect. 2. The right, as to reversions, remainders, and future estates shall be deemed to first accrue when they fall into possession (a). But if the person entitled to the particular estate on which the future estate was expectant shall not have been in possession when his interest determined, the action or suit must be brought within twelve years from the time the first right accrued to the owner of the particular estate, or within six years from the time when the estate of the person becoming entitled in possession became vested in possession, whichever of those two periods shall be the longer.

Sect. 3. In cases of disability, six years from the cesser of the disability or from the death of the person under disability shall be allowed, notwithstanding the expiration of the twelve years.

Sect. 4. No extension of time shall be allowed for absence beyond seas.

Sect. 5. No action or suit to recover any land shall be brought but within thirty years from the time when the right first accrued, notwithstanding the existence of any disability or succession of disabilities.

Result of the Acts.

6. It results from these Acts that since 1st January, 1879, twelve years' possession is made a statutory bar to suits in equity in respect of equitable interests, as in the case of actions at law

(a) Thus in the case of an equitable mortgage or charge of a contingent reversionary interest time does not begin to run until the interest falls into possession: Hugill v. Wilkinson, 38 Ch. D. 480; and see Re Hancock, 57 L. J. Ch. 793; 36 W. R. 710; 59 L. T. N.S. 197.]

upon legal rights (a), but in case of disability a term of six years is allowed next after the cesser of the disability, subject to the proviso that no suit is to be brought after the lapse of thirty years from the accruer of the right, whatever disabilities may have existed.

In case of express trust time runs from conveyance for value only.

7. In cases falling within the 25th section of 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27 (b), the effect of that section is that as between the trustee and any person claiming through him, and the cestui que trust and any person claiming through him, time does not run until there has been a conveyance to a purchaser for valuable consideration. The trust estate may, therefore, be followed by the cestui que trust, notwithstanding acquiescence by him (c), not only as against the trustee, but as against all volunteers claiming under him (d); but so soon as the estate is conveyed to a purchaser for valuable consideration (as if it be made the subject of a marriage settlement), the time will begin to run (e); and a lease for value is pro tanto a conveyance within the meaning of the Act (f). No possession, however, by a purchaser for valuable consideration short of the statutory period will be a bar (g).

And not even then as against persons under disability, &c.

8. The question whether a lapse of the statutory period from the time of a conveyance for value by a trustee will bar cestuis que trust, who, by reason of disability, or their rights being reversionary, would otherwise be entitled to sue after such period, is not free from difficulty. The 25th section of 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, enacts affirmatively that the right is to be deemed to have accrued at the time of conveyance, and this, in strict construction, would seem to work an independent bar. But this section is merely a proviso on the 24th section, which is in effect an enactment restraining the right to sue in equity within the limits allowed for suits at law; and the 25th section would appear to be not a further restraint of the right to sue, but an enlargement, by way of modification of the restriction previously, introduced by the 24th section. The decisions and dicta accord with this view and point to the conclusion that a cestui que trust, who is a remainderman, or under disability, is entitled to the full statutory period from the accruer of the right in possession, or from the cesser of the disability, as the case may be, notwithstanding the trustee may have conveyed away the estate for value, and the twenty or twelve years, as the case may be, may have elapsed from the date of conveyance, but in no case must the period allowed now exceed thirty years, from the accruer of the right in possession (a).

Express trusts.

9. The 25th section applies only to express trusts; it is therefore necessary to ascertain with precision what is meant by this phrase. Trusts, as regards the provisions of the statute, may be considered as divided into express trusts and constructive trusts; the former arising upon the language of some written instrument (b), and the latter such as are elicited by the principles of a Court of equity from the acts of parties.

Word "trust" not necessary to constitute an express trust.

10. It is not necessary to use the word trust in order to create an express trust within the meaning of the statute (c), but any language that would in equity raise or imply a trust will be deemed an express trust. If, therefore, land be devised to a person upon trust to receive the rents and thereout to pay certain annuities, the surplus rents result to the heir-at-law upon the face of the instrument, and this being an express trust, the heir-at-law, in a case falling within the section, will not be barred by any length of possession by the trustee (d).

Ir. 321;] and see Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Wybrants, 2 Jon. & Lat. 196; 7 Ir. Eq. Rep. 580; Mutlow v. Bigg, 18 L. R. Eq. 246, [reversed on other grounds, 1 Ch. Div. 385; Churcher v. Martin, 42 Ch. D. 312, 319.] In Lord St. John v. Boughton, 9 Sim. 223, where there was an express trust to sell and pay debts, the late V. C. E. thought that as no part of the produce of the sale had been set apart for debts, the case was not within the exception of the 25th section, but fell under the 40th section (relating to charges, vide post, p. 1000), and that if there had been no subsequent acknowledgment of the debt, it could not have been recovered. This, it is conceived, cannot be maintained. However, it was a dictum only, as the bonds were directed to be paid on the ground of acknowledgment; see Watson v. Saul, 1 Giff. 197.

Constructive trusts not saved.

11. But trusts arising by the construction of a Court of equity from the acts of parties, or to be made out by circumstances, or to be proved by evidence, will not be saved by the clause relating to express trusts, as if the devisee for life of a leasehold estate renew in his own name, the statute will begin to run from the time of the renewal (a). So if a trust fund be lent to A., and thereupon B., as surety, with notice of the trust, gives a mortgage of his estate to secure the fund, here B. is not an express trustee; and if no interest be paid for the statutable period, the cestui que trust is barred (b). [So where the first mortgagee of a ship sold the ship under the power conferred by the Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), it was held that he was not an express trustee of the surplus proceeds of sale for the subsequent mortgagee (c). And where real estate was conveyed to trustees upon charitable trusts by a deed which was void for non-compliance with 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, s. 3, the trustees were held not to be express trustees for persons claiming under the grantor (d).] But if there be an express trustee, and another person with full knowledge of the trust and in collusion with the trustee, and therefore by active fraud, appropriates the property to his own use, he stands in the place of the trustee, and while the fraud remains concealed the statute does not run (e). If a person act as the trustee of a settlement containing express trusts, though he assume the character by mistake, he will be deemed, so far as he acts, an express trustee (f).

Charges.

12. Mere charges might have been held to fall under the description of express trusts, but that they are dealt with under a separate section, viz., the 40th of 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27 (for which as from 1st January, 1879, is now substituted the 8th section of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), a circumstance which shows that they were meant to be distinguished from express trusts. If, therefore, a testator, having two properties, A. and B., charged all his real estate with his debts, and devised estate A. to trustees upon trust to pays his debts, the statute as to estate B. [was] made a bar under 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27, after twenty years, (and under 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, [is a bar] after twelve years (a), but as to estate A. it [did] not [before 1st January, 1879] begin to run until a conveyance to a purchaser, for valuable consideration (b); [but by the 10th section of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, the time for recovering any money payable out of land is made the same, whether it is secured by an express trust or not.] So, if an estate be devised to A., charged with 1000*l.* in favour of B., or "A. paying 1000*l.* to B.," [or "on the condition of A. well and truly paying 1000*l.* to B." (c),] although a suit may be sustained in equity to have the sum raised on the footing of a trust, yet it is not an express trust within the meaning of the statute, and [an action by B. in such a case would have been barred at the end of twenty years, and will now under 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57 be barred at the end of twelve years, independently of sect. 10 of that Act (d).] And if a testator charge his debts and direct his executors to raise them by mortgage or otherwise, the direction adds nothing to the charge (which per se authorized the raising of the debts by mortgage or otherwise), and no express trust, but only a charge, is created (e).

Charge coupled with a duty.

13. But a charge in form may be an express trust in fact. Thus where an estate in Ireland was devised to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to convey to J. W. for life, charged with annuities to certain corporations for charitable purposes, although the corporations were interposed as trustees, yet, as the devisees were bound to execute a settlement, so as to secure the annuities and retain the legal estate in the meantime, they were, until the settlement had been executed, trustees for the charity (f). So, though a simple charge of the testator's debts fell within the 40th section of 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, and the creditor was barred after twenty years (g), yet, if the will was so worded as to impose on the devisees subject to the charge the personal obligation of exerting themselves actively in paying the debts, it became an express trust and fell within the exception of the 25th section (a).

Charge and express trust in same matter.

14. A charge upon an estate may under the same instrument be a mere charge as between some parties, while it is an express trust within the 25th section as between other parties. If, for instance, an estate be devised to A. and his heirs, subject to a charge of 500*l.* to B. and C. upon certain trusts, this, as between A. and the two trustees, is a mere charge, and would be barred after twenty or twelve years, as the case may be, but, as between the two trustees and their cestuis que trust, the charge when raised will be an express trust, and the time of the bar as between them will be extended accordingly.

Case of charge secured by a term of years.

15. If a term of years be limited to the trustees for the purpose of securing the charge, the rights of the cestuis que trust will not be barred so long as the term vested in their trustees remains unbarred (b).

Mortgage by way of trust.

16. A mortgage by way of trust for sale is [for the purpose now under consideration] nothing more than a mortgage with a power of sale, and does not come under the description of an express trust within the meaning of the 25th section (c). [A mortgagee, after his mortgage debt has been fully paid, is not an express trustee of the mortgaged property until reconveyance (d)].

Charge must be presently raisable.

17. To make the Act operate as a bar to a charge there must be a hand to receive, and capable of signing a receipt; as if 400*l.* be charged by deed on an estate, and by the same deed it is assigned to trustees upon trust for A. and B. for their lives, and after the death of the survivor for their children, but no power of signing receipts is given to the trustees, and, on the contrary, the Court collects the intention that the trustees are not to raise the money till after the death of the surviving tenant for life, the statute does not begin to run until the latter period (e).

Persons claiming through the trustee.

18. It will be observed that, by the 25th section of 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27, the cestui que trust and any person claiming through him may enforce the trust against the trustee and any person claiming through him (a), but both trustee and cestui que trust may be ousted by the intrusion of a third title, and if so, the statute will begin to run from the dispossession of the trustee and cestui que trust. Thus, in 1810, a legal estate was vested in trustees upon trust for five tenants in common, but from 1819 to the filing of the bill in 1842, four of the tenants in common received the rents to the exclusion of their co-tenant and of the trustees, who never executed their duty; and it was held that there had been an ouster of both trustees and cestui que trust, and that the right of such cestui que trust was barred by the statute (b).

Possession by one of the cestuis que trust.

19. A cestui que trust in actual possession is tenant at will to his trustee (c), and the 7th section of the Act enacts that "when any person shall be in possession as tenant at will, the right of the person entitled subject thereto to make an entry shall be deemed to have first accrued at the determination of such tenancy, or at the expiration of one year from the commencement of such tenancy. Provided that no cestui que trust shall be deemed to be a tenant at will within the meaning of the clause to his trustee." The exception was introduced in relief of the trustee that he might not be obliged to take active steps lest the tenancy at will should be deemed to have expired, and so the statute should begin to run. In other words, the tenancy should not be determined at the end of one year (d). The statute, therefore, does not run against the trustee so long as the cestui que trust is in actual possession. [A mortgagor, where the mortgage debt has been fully paid but no reconveyance has been made, is a tenant at will of the mortgagee, but is not a cestui que trust of the mortgagee within the meaning of the proviso, and time therefore runs against the mortgagee, and after more than thirteen years his legal estate will be extinguished (e).]

And it has been laid down, that if the cestui que trust be let into possession as tenant at will to the trustee, the tenancy is not determined by the cestui que trust sub-letting to an under-tenant, unless the trustee had notice of such underletting, for, though the general rule is that a tenancy at will is not assignable, yet the rule is subject to the qualification that a tenant at will cannot determine his tenancy by transferring his interest to a third party without notice to his landlord (a).

But if the cestui que trust be not the actual occupier, but only in receipt of the rents and profits, he is not tenant at will to the trustee, but the possession remains with the trustee, and the cestui que trust is the trustee's bailiff or agent for the management of the estate, and therefore if the cestui que trust allow any tenant of the trust estate to hold for twelve years, without paying rent or other acknowledgment of title, the statute runs against the trustee through the default of his bailiff or agent (b). The trustee, therefore, who puts a cestui que trust in receipt of the rents and profits has still a duty to perform, and may be held responsible for a loss accruing through neglect in not looking after his bailiff or agent.

Cestui que trust in possession by mistake.

20. If actual possession be held by the trustee of an express trust who has the legal estate, but who mistakes his cestui que trust and pays the rents to a wrong person, the possession of the trustee is the possession of the rightful cestui que trust, and the wrongful recipient of the rents does not acquire a title by adverse possession under the statute (c); and this principle is of very extensive application, for, as we have seen, where a cestui que trust is put into receipt of the rents and profits, the possession is still that of the trustee, and the cestui que trust is regarded in the light of the bailiff or agent of the trustee. But it is always a question for the jury, or the Court sitting as a jury, to say whether the cestui que trust was in receipt of the rents as bailiff or agent of the trustee, or was in receipt of the rents as claiming the beneficial ownership independently of the trustee. In the former case, the statute of limitations would not run, but in the latter case it would (d).

the will to a trustee, and eventually the true owner is barred, the legal estate gained by the disseisin vests in the trustee of the will, under colour of which the possession was taken, and not in the cestui que trust (a).

22. The 42nd section of the Act of 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27, limiting the recovery of arrears of rent or interest to the last six years only, has no application to cases of express trusts within the 25th section, but the cestui que trust could, prior to the 1st of January, 1879, have recovered from his trustees the whole arrearages from the commencement of the title (b). 42nd section.

23. And where there was a subsisting term not barred, upon which the trustee might obtain possession, the whole arrearages [could, prior to the 1st of January, 1879, have been] recovered (c). [Subsisting term.]

Thus, in Cox v. Dolman (d), a testator devised his lands to the use of trustees for ninety-nine years upon trust to pay certain annuities, and subject thereto to the use of S. Cox for life, with remainder over; and after the death of S. Cox, one of the annuitants filed a bill to have the arrears of the annuity raised out of the estate. The executors of S. Cox pleaded the statute as a bar to more than six years' arrears, but the Court held that it was the case of an express trust, that the tenant for life had taken possession subject to the trust, and that the term was a subsisting one, upon which the trustees might at any time have recovered, and the plaintiff was declared entitled to the whole arrears, which were to be paid out of the assets of the tenant for life up to the day of his death, and since his death by the remainderman. The direct remedy was, no doubt, to have the whole arrears raised by sale or mortgage of the term, but as the remainderman would be entitled to recover the arrears that accrued in the lifetime of the tenant for life from his estate, the Court, to avoid circuity, decreed payment at once out of the tenant for life's assets. brought to recover any sum of money or legacy charged upon or payable out of any land or rent, at law or in equity, and secured by an express trust, or to recover any arrears of rent or of interest in respect of any sum of money or legacy so charged or payable, and so secured, or any damages in respect of such arrears, except within the time within which the same would be recoverable if there were not any such trust" (a). Thus where an annuity which was secured by an express trust had been unpaid for twenty-five years, and no claim of any sort was made in respect of the annuity during that period, it was held that no arrears of the annuity, accrued before a claim for the annuity was made, could be recovered from the property charged; for the remedy for the arrears was the same as if there had been no express trust, in which case they would have been irrecoverable; but the section did not affect the right to future payments of the annuity (b).

Charities.

25. It was at first doubted whether charities were not altogether unaffected by the Act of 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, inasmuch as, by a special exception in their favour, Courts of equity did not oppose to charitable, as they did to ordinary equitable claims, a bar by analogy to the old Statute of Limitation, and the Act of W. 4. contained no express mention of charities (c); but it was afterwards held that they were within the operation

[(b) Hughes v. Coles, 27 Ch. D. 231. In the last edition of this work a doubt was expressed whether this case was correctly decided, as the annuity itself was admittedly still subsisting, and by the 42nd section of 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, six years' arrears of such an annuity are recoverable without any express trust; while the 10th section of the Act of 1874 contemplates the existence of some period during which the arrears could have been recovered. The intention of the section, it was said, seems to have been to limit the period during which the arrears are to be recoverable, and not to destroy the right to recover any arrears, and it hardly seems to justify the argument that as, in the absence of an express trust, the annuity itself would have been barred by the statute, and therefore no arrears of the annuity could have been recoverable, no arrears are recoverable, though the annuity is still subsisting.

There is great force in these observations, especially in reference to the intention of the section. But it is to be noticed that the section says expressly that no action for the arrears is to be brought except within the time within which they would have been recoverable if there were no express trust. Thus the application of the section to the case of arrears involves the assumption that there is no express trust; but it is on the contrary basis, namely, that there is an express trust, that the annuity is subsisting and recoverable. If there were no express trust, then if the action were brought within twelve years from the time when the right of action first accrued six years' arrears would be recoverable, but if the action were brought after the twelve years, no arrears would be recoverable. In the case under consideration the action was brought after the twelve years.

of the 24th section, though they might be protected by the 25th section relating to express trusts (a); and the law was ultimately so settled in the case of Attorney-General v. Magdalen College (b) on appeal to the House of Lords.

Legacy.

26. A legacy cannot be recovered under 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, after twelve years; [and neither the fact that the executor has assented to the legacy nor that the legacy is coupled with an implied trust, will prevent the operation of the statute (c). But if an express trust of a legacy is declared, and] the executor by setting the legacy apart has assumed the character of a trustee, the statute does not run (d); and where the legacy was coupled with a trust for the separate use of a feme covert, the executor, after assent to the trust, was held to be converted into a trustee (e); [but an executor by merely signing a residuary account, and so assenting to the bequest of residue, does not constitute himself a trustee of the fund (f).] Where a legacy was given to A. for life with remainder to his children, and the circumstances were such that during the life of A. there was no hand entitled to receive it, the time was held not to run against the children during the life of A. (g).

Residue or share of residue.

27. The 8th section of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, is, as from 1st January, 1879, substituted for the 40th section of 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, and it is presumed that under the substituted as under the original section the limited period will by a liberal construction of the word legacy be held to be a bar to suits also in respect of a residue or share of residue (h).

Intestacy. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 13.

28. The 40th section of 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, did not extend to the case of intestacy, and by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 13, no suit or other proceeding can be brought to recover personal estate or any share thereof from the personal representative of any intestate but within twenty years after the accruer of the right, unless there has been part payment or some acknowledgment in writing. Assets subsequently received.

29. The right of the legatee or next of kin may be barred as to assets received more than the prescribed period before the commencement of the suit, but not barred as to assets received since (b).

36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25.

30. By 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25, sub-s. 2, it is enacted that "no claim of a cestui que trust against his trustee (c) for any property held on an express trust, or in respect of any breach of such trust, shall be held to be barred by any statute of limitations." The 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 10, enacts that from 1st January, 1879, no money or legacy charged on any land or rent shall, though secured by an express trust, be recoverable, except within the time within which it might have been recovered had there been no express trust.

37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 10.

The first-mentioned enactment applies as between trustee and cestui que trust, while the 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 10 applies as between the land charged (though secured by way of trust) and the persons entitled to the charge (d).

[Trustee Act, 1888.]

[31. The Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59) provides by section 8 as follows:—

"(1) In any action or other proceeding against a trustee or any person claiming through him, except where the claim is founded upon any fraud or fraudulent breach of trust to which the trustee was party or privy, or is to recover trust property, or the proceeds thereof still retained by the trustee, or previously received by the trustee and converted to his use, the following provisions shall apply:—

shall be entitled to the benefit of and be at liberty to plead the lapse of time as a bar to such action or other proceeding in the like manner and to the like extent as if the claim had been against him in an action of debt for money had and received, but so nevertheless that the statute shall run against a married woman entitled in possession for her separate use, whether with or without a restraint upon anticipation, but shall not begin to run against any beneficiary unless and until the interest of such beneficiary shall be an interest in possession.

"(2) No beneficiary as against whom there would be a good defence by virtue of this section, shall derive any greater or other benefit from a judgment or order obtained by another beneficiary than he could have obtained if he had brought such action or other proceeding and this section had been pleaded.

"(3) This section shall apply only to actions or other proceedings commenced after the 1st day of January, 1890, and shall not deprive any executor or administrator of any right or defence to which he is entitled under any existing statute of limitations."

By section 1 "Trustee" is to be deemed to include an executor or administrator, and a trustee whose trust arises by construction or implication of law, as well as an express trustee, but not the official trustee of charitable funds; and the provisions of the Act relating to a trustee are to apply as well to several joint trustees as to a sole trustee.

This enactment is obscurely worded, and it will probably require much judicial interpretation before its full meaning is apprehended, and the exact nature of the protection afforded by it is ascertained; but the general effect of it appears to be that in future whenever an action is brought by a cestui que trust against a trustee or any person claiming through him, whether in respect of land or money, and whether the defendant is sought to be charged under an express or a constructive trust, there the defendant will be entitled to the protection which the section gives, unless the plaintiff can prove either (1) fraud or fraudulent breach of trust, or (2) that at the time of action brought the trust property which is the subject matter of the action, or the proceeds thereof are still retained by the trustee, or (3) that previously to the bringing of the action, such property or proceeds were received by the trustee and converted to his use. If the plaintiff bring his case within one of these three categories, the old law will still apply; if not, the section will take effect.

General effect of section 8.

In view of the established rule that when a trustee is proved to have trust property in his possession he must be considered as continuing in possession for the benefit of the cestui que trust until he discharges himself by showing that the property has been duly applied in accordance with the trust (a), cases under the second head would seem to present most difficulty. If the rule is regarded merely as a rule of evidence, there appears to be no reason why it should not still be applicable; but so far as the rule is one of law, the applicability of it for the purpose under consideration is open to question; as the wording of the section indicates that a plaintiff, in order to take his case out of it, must show as against the trustee an actual retainer in fact, and not a mere retainer by construction of law.

The expression "converted to his use" may also require some consideration. In a recent case where money was received by a firm of solicitors for the purpose of investment, but was never invested, and the firm paid interest on the money as though it were invested, and credited themselves in their books with the interest so paid, Stirling, J., was of opinion (though he did not decide the point) that the money was converted to the use of the firm within the meaning of the section (b).

It may be anticipated, therefore, that while the old law will still, by virtue of the exception contained in the opening clause of the section, govern a large number of cases, the operation of the section will extend principally to cases in which the relief sought against the trustee is in the nature of damages for breach of duty by him in the conduct of the trust, as, for example, where the object of the action is to fix him with the loss arising from an improper investment (c), or from neglect to call in trust funds, or otherwise to render him chargeable in respect of property which he has not, but which he ought to have, received.

[Nature of the protection afforded by the statute.]

In considering the character of the protection which the new enactment confers, the construction of sub-sect. 1, clause (A) presents great difficulty; indeed, it is open to doubt whether that clause can have any operation at all. An action by a cestui que trust against his trustee is necessarily grounded on the fiduciary relation existing between them, and upon the hypothesis which,

[(a) See Metropolitan Bank v. Heiron, 5 Ex. Div. 319, 325, per Cotton, L.J.; Blyth v. Fladgate, (1891) 1 Ch. 337, 351, per Stirling, J.]

in applying the Statutes of Limitation, the Court is required to make, viz. that the defendant trustee is not a trustee, such an action could never have been brought at all, and consequently no rights and privileges conferred by any statute of limitations could be enjoyed in it (a). Thus where an action was brought to make trustees liable for losses in respect of investments negligently made on insufficient security more than six years previously, Fry, L.J., held that the case did not fall within clause (A), and in reference to that clause he observed that it was obvious that "if a person had not been a trustee, he could not be sued for a breach of trust;" and, further, that there was "no right or privilege, so far as he was aware, conferred by any statute of limitations in respect of a breach of trust," and that he should have great difficulty in applying the clause to the case before him (b). If the view thus indicated is correct, it is difficult to conceive of a case to which clause (A) can apply (c); and if this be so, it follows that clause (B) must be the operative part of the sub-section. Accordingly, in the case last referred to, Fry, L.J., held that clause (B) applied, seeing that if the action had been for debt for money had and received, and such debt had arisen more than six years previously, and there had been no acknowledgment of it in the meantime, the lapse of time would have afforded a good defence (d). In that case the action was brought by a trustee, and not by a beneficiary, and it was therefore held that the proviso at the end of clause (B) did not apply; but it would seem that if a beneficiary, originally interested in reversion, brought a similar action at any time within six years after the determination of the interest preceding

[(a) The construction of the section is not much assisted by the observation that the Court is only required to make the hypothesis for the purpose of applying the Statute of Limitations. For if the Court is to divest the defendant of his character of trustee, what character is it to attribute to him? It would be embarrassing if the Court were required to decide the merits of a case according to the actual facts, and then to apply the law to it according to an unreal and imaginary state of facts. The construction of the section which would refer the words "such action or other proceeding" to the form of the action and not to the action itself, does not (even in view of the somewhat loose use of the same expression in sub-section 2) seem admissible, and, if admitted, might lead to perplexity.]

[(b) Re Bowden, 45 Ch. D. 444.]

[(c) No doubt an action might be brought in which the plaintiff, though failing to establish the trusteeship of the defendant, would still be entitled to some relief, but to the extent of that relief such action would not, it is apprehended, be within the section at all.]

[(d) Even though the claim against the trustee be in the nature of a specialty debt, it would seem to be the intention of the Act that it should be treated as a simple contract debt capable of being barred under 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, s. 3, subject to the proviso as to disabilities contained in section 7 of that statute.]

his own, it could be maintained; but, by force of sub-sect. 2, the judgment obtained in such action would not enure for the benefit of any other beneficiary, as against whom there would be a good defence by virtue of the section. Thus, for example, though a tenant for life may be barred by the statute, the reversioner may still be in a position to sue to the extent of his interest.

[Liability arising out of law of agency and concealed fraud.]

In a recent case, a sum of money was paid, in or before the year 1874, by a client to one of a firm of solicitors for investment; the money was received by the firm, and representations were from time to time made to the client on behalf of the firm to the effect that the investments had been made, and interest was regularly paid to her until 1886, when it was discovered that the money had in fact never been invested. In an action against the representative of one of the partners, who was innocent of the fraud, it was held by Stirling, J., that the decision in Blair v. Bromley (a), which rested on principles of the law of partnership and not of those of trust, was applicable to the case, and was unaffected by the provisions of the recent Act, and that, in conformity with that decision, the innocent partner was deprived of the benefit of the statute by reason of the representations made, which were binding on him as a partner (b).]

Account of mesne rents and profits.

Thirdly. We have to enquire to what extent a Court of equity, upon recovery of the estate, will direct an account against the defendant of the mesne rents and profits.

The right of the cestui que trust to an account of mesne rents and profits cannot very well be treated of without entering generally into the principles upon which relief in a Court of equity, in respect of mesne rents and profits, is founded.

An account of rents and profits may be sought in equity, either (I.) Independently of relief respecting the corpus of the land, or (II.) As incident or collateral to it.

Account may be had against an express trustee without reference to the Statutes of Limitation.

First. Where the account is sought independently of other relief.

1. If the account be sought against an express trustee, then, as the Statutes of Limitation do not [unless the case falls within the provisions of section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, already referred to] run between trustee and cestui que trust, it will [independently of that enactment] be directed from the time the rents were withdrawn (a).

2. If the claim to the rents rest upon a legal title, the plaintiff has then a legal remedy, and under the old practice could not have come into a Court of equity at all (b); except in cases where, from the complicated nature of the accounts, or other particular circumstances, a Court of law would have afforded very inadequate relief (c). But an infant might have filed a bill for an account upon a legal title (d); as every person entering upon an infant's lands is regarded in the light of a bailiff or receiver for the infant (e); the rule, however, did not apply where the infant had never had possession, but it had been held by an adverse party (f). The jurisdiction against a person entering during the infant's minority remained, though the bill were not filed until after the infant attained twenty-one (g). But after six years the Statute of Limitations would be a bar (h). And generally all persons might have an account upon a legal title in respect of mines, which are a species of trade (i), but not of timber, without praying an injunction (j).

Account in equity could not be had in respect of a legal title.

Except the account were complicated, &c.

Or the plaintiff was an infant.

Or in the case of mines.

Timber.

3. Although where a remedy lay at law an account could not be had in equity against the pernor of the profits himself, yet, after his decease, the party entitled to the profits might have considered himself a creditor, and have filed a bill in equity for an account of the assets (k).

Whether after the death of the pernor an account might be had in equity against his executor.

The account in these cases confined to the legal limit.

4. Where, as in the preceding cases, a Court of equity assumed a concurrent jurisdiction with Courts of law, the account was not extended beyond the legal limit of six years, provided the statute were pleaded: it was otherwise, if the defendant did not avail himself of the statute by demurrer, plea, or answer (a).

[Present practice.]

[5. Now, by the recent Judicature Acts the several Divisions of the High Court of Justice have co-ordinate jurisdiction, and matters of account are assigned to the Chancery Division of the Court (b), and it is conceived that the same limit of time will apply to the account as formerly prevailed in the Court of Chancery, and the statute of limitations cannot be relied upon unless pleaded by the defendant (c).]

Where a legal remedy did exist but has expired, equity will not assist.

6. It often happens that a legal remedy did exist, but has since, by the death of a party or the determination of the estate, become extinguished. In such a case, as the right was not, but only is, without a remedy at law, there seems no ground in general for the interference of a Court of equity (d).

Unless there be mistake.

7. But if the remedy was lost through mistake, the Court upon that principle may interpose: as where a lease was held for the lives of A. and his two daughters B. and C., and A. afterwards married again, and had another daughter, who was also named B., and the landlord on the expiration of the lease by the death of the real cestui que vie, did not enter (B. the daughter by the second marriage being mistaken for B. the life named in the lease) Lord Macclesfield said, "Where one has title of entry, and neglects to enter or to bring his ejectment, but sleeps upon it for several years, as he has no remedy at law for the mesne profits, so neither has he in equity, for it was his own fault he did not enter, and he shall never come into a Court of equity for relief against his own negligence, or to make the tenant in possession who held over his lease to be but his bailiff or steward, whether he will or not; but in the present case, by reason of the circumstance of both daughters being of the same name, and the mistake consequent thereon, the defendant must account for the mesne profits from the expiration of the lease" (e).

(e) Duke of Bolton v. Deane, Pr. Ch. 516. (Note, in this case Lord

Or fraud.

8. So equity will relieve where the remedy was prevented by fraud: as where A. was entitled to a leasehold estate, but B., concealing the deeds, remained in possession until the term had expired, Lord King directed an account of the rents and profits from the time that A.'s title accrued, on the ground that A. had been kept in ignorance of his just rights through B.'s fraudulent concealment of the deed and counterpart (a).

Or some default in the defendant.

9. And generally the Court will in all cases lend its aid where the legal process has been lost, not by any delay on the part of the plaintiff, but through some default of the defendant (b).

Secondly. An account may be sought as incident or collateral to the relief. The doctrines upon this subject were very distinctly laid down by Lord Fitzgibbon, afterwards Lord Clare, in Barnewall v. Barnewall (c).

Plaintiff recovering the estate on an equitable title.

A.—1. "The general rule of equity," he said, "is, that if the suit for recovery of possession be properly cognisable in a Court of equity, and the plaintiff obtains a decree, the Court will direct an account of rents and profits, as incident to such relief."

Where cestui que trust follows trust estate into hands of a volunteer claiming under a trustee.

2. In the case of a cestui que trust, who is following the trust estate into the hands of a person claiming through the trustee, under such circumstances that the defendant is himself to be regarded as a trustee, it is clear that the cestui que trust, by establishing his claim to the land, has thereby established a right to the mesne rents and profits from the very commencement of his title (d). And à fortiori the rule is so where the plaintiff has been under the disability of infancy during the possession of the defendant, because then the latter is regarded as a bailiff or trustee for the former (e), or where there has been fraud or suppression on the part of the defendant.

Where plaintiff comes as equitable owner against one in bonâ fide adverse possession.

3. Where the case is that of a plaintiff coming forward not strictly as cestui que trust, but still as equitable owner to recover the estate against one in bonâ fide adverse possession, many of the older decisions and dicta point to the conclusion that, in the absence of special circumstances, the account will be directed Hardwicke thought a remedy still existed at law, Dormer v. Fortescue, Ridg. Rep. t. Hardwicke, 190: but Lord Macclesfield was evidently of a different opinion, and so was Lord Fitzgibbon, Barnewall v. Barnewall, 3 Ridg. P. C. 68.)

from the time of the accruer of the title (a), subject only to the qualification, that by analogy to the legal defence upon the Statute of Limitations, the account will not be carried back beyond six years before the institution of the suit (b). The more recent authorities seem, however, to establish that where there is no trust, no infancy, no fraud, and no suppression, where in short, there is a mere bonâ fide adverse possession, the practice of the Court is not to carry back the account beyond the institution of the suit (c); unless at least there was a demand of possession by the plaintiff or acts equivalent thereto before proceedings were taken, in which case the account will be carried back to the time of the demand or constructive demand (d).

Where defendant ignorant of his true character of trustee.

4. In one case, in which the plaintiff was an infant, and the defendant in fact a trustee, but ignorant of his true character, the account was limited to the filing of the bill, except as to money which had been paid into Court (e), but the decision is of doubtful authority (f).

Where there has been laches in suing.

5. If the cestui que trust or equitable owner be guilty of laches, the account will not [generally] be carried further back than to the time of the institution of the suit, for it was the plaintiff's own fault that he did not institute his suit at an earlier period (g); and if it be a case of great laches, the Court will show its displeasure by not directing an account beyond the date of the decree (h).

[But the Court will in its discretion allow the account to be carried back, where the circumstances of the case justify it, and the House of Lords has recently, in a case of great laches, carried the account back for six years prior to the institution of the suit (a).]

3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, not material.

6. It would seem that 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, has no bearing upon the question how far the account should be carried back, for the suit in these cases is not one for recovery of rent within the general purview of the Act (b); nor is it a suit within the meaning of the 42nd section for the recovery of arrears of rent, which must mean arrears of some definite reserved rent, and not mesne profits. If there be any Statute of Limitations applicable by analogy it must be the statute of James (c).

How the order for an account is worded.

7. The order to account for mesne rents and profits will not, except in a case of gross fraud (d), contain the words, "which, without neglect or default, the defendant might have received," and, on the other hand, a direction to make just allowances in taking the account will be inserted (e).

Who is the person to account.

8. The assignee who has had the perception of the rents and profits will, in the first instance, account for them, not, however, with interest (f). But if the assignee be insolvent, the trustee who tortiously assigned will then be answerable for the mesne rents and profits personally (g). The Court has also allowed distinct bills to be filed, first to recover the estate, and afterwards the mesne profits (h).

If a person have a legal title he cannot sue in equity either for the estate or the mesne rents and profits.

B.—1. "If a man," continued Lord Fitzgibbon, "have a mere legal title to the possession, he has no right to come into equity for the recovery of it; and if he has originally recovered the possession at law, he has no manner of right to proceed by bill for an account of rents and profits: as his title to the possession was at law, he must proceed for the whole there" (i).

Secus, a dowress, or an infant.

2. Upon this rule it must be remarked, that a dowress (j) and infant (k) are allowed to proceed in equity upon their legal title, and incidentally to the relief may pray an account of the mesne rent and profits. But by 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, s. 41, the arrears of dower are recoverable for six years only next preceding the commencement of the suit. And the account of an infant will be barred, if he do not institute a suit within six years after he has attained his majority (a).

If a person applied to equity to aid his action at law he might have come back for an account.

C.—1. "If a party," Lord Fitzgibbon proceeded, "be obliged to come into a Court of equity for aid to enable him to prosecute his title at law" (as where he could not recover in a legal action by reason of an outstanding term, or because the title deeds to the estate were in the hands of the defendant), "after possession recovered at law, there may be cases in which he may come back for an account of rents and profits in the suit depending in equity" (b). Or the plaintiff, being obliged to resort to equity on one ground, might, to prevent circuity, have asked complete relief in the first instance in that Court; and if his title were established, an account of the rents and profits would have been consequential upon the relief (c).

Or being obliged to come to equity on one ground, he might have obtained his whole relief there.

But the account in equity would be restricted to the legal limit, or to the institution of the suit.

2. In these cases the account ought upon principle to be restricted to the same period as that for which the mesne profits were recoverable at law; for the plaintiff recovers upon a legal title, and the circumstance of his being obliged to sue in equity ought not to vary his rights; and there is authority to support this view (d); but in a later case (e) Vice-Chancellor Wood stated the rule to be, that in an adverse suit in the nature of an ejectment suit the account is directed only from the filing of the bill; and there may be some difficulty in establishing a distinction between cases where the plaintiff sues upon a mere equitable title and cases where his title is rendered partially equitable, so to speak, by the existence of outstanding terms or estates.

Unless the defendant be guilty of fraud.

3. If the plaintiff has been kept out of the estate by the fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment of the defendant, the Court will suppose that, had the plaintiff known his just rights, he would have commenced his action at law on the first accruer of

SECTION II.

THE RIGHT OF ATTACHING THE PROPERTY INTO WHICH THE TRUST ESTATE HAS WRONGFULLY BEEN CONVERTED.

General rule.

1. If the trust estate has been tortiously disposed of by the trustee, the cestui que trust may attach and follow the property that has been substituted in the place of the trust estate, so long as the metamorphosis can be traced.

Tortious conversion.

In Taylor v. Plumer (b) it was argued that although, where the conversion was in pursuance of the trust, the newly acquired property would be bound by the original equity (c); yet where the conversion was tortious, then, as the property purchased was not in a form consistent with the trust, and the cestui que trust would be under no obligation to accept it in lieu of the rightful property, the cestui que trust should come in as a general creditor, and not be permitted to assert a specific lien. But the distinction was disallowed (d); for "An abuse of trust," said Lord Ellenborough, "can confer no rights on the party abusing it, nor on those who claim in privity with him" (e).

"Money has no ear-mark."

2. It was said by Lord King that "money had no earmark, insomuch that if a receiver of rents should lay out all the money in the purchase of land, or if an executor should realize all his testator's estate, and afterwards die insolvent, yet a Court of equity could not charge or follow the land" (f); and bank notes and negotiable bills have been represented as possessing the same quality. But the notion seems to have originated from some misconception, and cannot be supported. Lord Mansfield observed, "It has been quaintly said that the reason why money cannot be followed is because it has no earmark, but this is not true. The true reason is upon account of the currency of it—it cannot be recovered after it has passed in currency. Thus, in the case of money stolen, the true owner cannot recover it after it has been paid away fairly and honestly upon a valuable and bonâ fide consideration: but before the money has passed in currency an action may be brought for the money itself. Apply this to the case of a bank-note—an action may lie against the finder, it is true, but not after it has been paid away in currency" (a). And Lord Ellenborough observed, "The dictum that money has no earmark must be understood as predicted only of an undivided and undistinguishable mass of current money; but money kept in a bag, or otherwise kept apart from other money, guineas, or other coin marked (if the fact were so) for the purpose of being distinguished, are so far earmarked as to fall within the rule which applies to every other description of personal property, whilst it remains in the hands of the factor or his general legal representatives" (b). The only distinction, then, between money, notes, or bills, and other chattels, appears to be this—that the former, for the protection of commerce, cannot be pursued into the hands of a bonâ fide holder, to whom they have passed in circulation (c), whilst other chattels can be recovered even from a purchaser for valuable consideration, provided he did not buy them in market overt. Money (d), notes (e), and bills (f), may be followed by the rightful owner, where they have not been circulated or negotiated, or if the person to whom they passed had express notice of the trust (g). And the only difference to be taken between money on the one hand, and notes and bills on the other, is that money is not earmarked, and therefore cannot be traced except under particular circumstances, but notes and bills, from carrying a number or date, can in general be identified by the owner without difficulty (a).

(d) The same point has been viewed as not maintainable in several previous cases, as in Whitecomb v. Jacob, 1 Salk. 160; Lane v. Dighton, Amb. 409; Ryal v. Ryal, Ib. 413; Balgney v. Hamilton, Ib. 414. N.B. Wilson v. Foreman, 2 Dick. 593, is misreported; see Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. 519. The subsequent cases are Lord Chedworth v. Edwards, 8 Ves. 46; Greatley v. Noble, 3 Mad. 79; Buckeridge v. Glasse, Cr. & Ph. 126; Murray v. Pinkett, 12 Cl. & Fin. 784; Sheridan v. Joyce, 1 Jon. & Lat. 401; Trench v. Harrison, 17 Sim. 111; Harford v. Lloyd, 20 Beav. 310; Frith v. Cartland, 2 H. & M. 417.

Trust money mixed with the trustee's money.

3. We may here put the case of trust money mixed in the same heap with the trustee's money. It may be said, that the trust money has, like water, run into the general mass, and become amalgamated, and therefore the cestui que trust has no lien. But clearly this cannot be maintained, for suppose a trustee, partly with his own money and partly out of the trust fund, to have purchased an estate. It cannot be predicated of any particular part of the estate that it was purchased with the cestui que trust's money, and yet the cestui que trust has a lien upon the whole for the amount that was misemployed (b). And it follows in the other case, that though the identical pieces of coin cannot be ascertained, yet, as there is so much belonging to the trust in the general heap, the cestui que trust is entitled to take so much out (c).

Assets employed in trade.

4. Upon a similar principle, if a surviving partner, being the executor of a deceased partner, continue the testator's capital without authority in his trade, though the capital may consist only of the stock and debts of the partnership, and these may undergo a continual course of change and fluctuation, yet the Court follows the trust capital throughout all its ramifications, and gives to the beneficiaries of the deceased partner's estate the fruits derived from that capital so continually altered and changed (d).

Money followed through a bank.

5. And so if a trustee pay trust money into a bank to the account of himself, not in any way earmarked with the trust, and also keep private monies of his own to the same account, the Court will disentangle the account, and separate the trust from the private monies, and award the former specifically to the cestui que trust (e). [And the same rule will apply equally in the case of a person occupying a fiduciary position, although not an express trustee, as a factor, or agent (a); and has even been applied to the case of a person borrowing money for a specific purpose (e.g. for the purchase by him of property to be afterwards mortgaged to the lender), and not applying it for the purpose for which it was advanced (b). It was formerly held that] as against the cestui que trust the general rule must prevail that the sums drawn out must be attributed to the earliest deposits, according to the order in which they were paid in (c); [but, where the question is only between the cestui que trust and the trustee, the rule has been modified, and so long as the trustee has money of his own standing to the account, drawings by him for his private purposes will be attributed to his private money, leaving the trust money intact (d). This follows from the general principle that where a man does an act which may be rightfully performed, he cannot say that that act was intentionally, and in fact, done wrongly; so far as possible the honest intention of drawing out his own money must be attributed to the trustee. Where, however, the trustee has exhausted his own money, and the account at the bank is composed of moneys belonging to different trusts, the general rule will prevail, and the sums drawn out will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be attributed to the earliest deposits (e).] If trust money be paid into a bank to an account headed in such a way that the banker cannot fail to know, and must be taken to know that it was a trust account, though the bankers are not bound to enquire into the propriety of the trustee's cheques upon that account, yet if the trustee becomes bankrupt and has overdrawn his private account, the bank cannot apply the credit of the trust account by way of set-off against the debit of the private account (f).

[Trust money employed in business of partnership.]

6. By the Partnership Act, 1890 (c), section 13, if a partner, being a trustee, improperly employs trust property in the business or on account of the partnership, no other partner is liable for the trust property to the persons beneficially interested therein, but nothing in the section is to prevent trust money from being followed and recovered from the firm if still in its possession or under its control.

[Different trust funds intermixed.]

7. In a recent Scotch case where the funds of two charities had been intermixed and dealt with as a common fund, and part of the trust funds, which, however, could be traced as having originally belonged to one of the charities, had been invested in land which subsequently increased very largely in value, it was held that the profit must be taken to have been made by the whole trust, and must be apportioned between the charities in the proportions in which they were originally entitled to the common fund (d).]

Following money into land with reference to the Statute of Frauds.

8. In tracing money into land, the principal difficulty in the old cases arose from the Statute of Frauds (e), the 7th section enacting that all declarations of trusts of land should be manifested and proved by some writing. It was formerly held that parol evidence, to prove a state of circumstances from which a Court of equity would elicit a constructive trust, was inadmissible (f); but Lord Hardwicke, on the ground that constructive trusts were excepted out of the Statute of Frauds (g), ruled that parol evidence might be given (h); and Sir T. Clarke, in the leading case of Lane v. Dighton (a) (though had the point been res integra, he should have thought the evidence not admissible within the statute) followed the authority of Lord Hardwicke; and whatever doubts might formerly have been entertained upon the subject the law is now settled (b).

Trustee bound to invest a certain sum, and purchasing at that price.

9. The mere fact that a trustee has trust money in his hands when he makes a purchase, is not sufficient to attach the trust on lands bought by him (c). But if a trustee who is under an obligation to lay out money on land, purchase an estate at a price corresponding with the sum to be invested, the Court, independently of positive evidence, may presume the trust money to have been so applied (d). But no such presumption can be raised where it can be shown that the trustee, though under such an obligation, was mistaken in the nature of the trust, and acted under a different impression (e). And where a tenant for life with power to sell and invest in the purchase of other land purchased lands with borrowed money, and many years afterwards sold the settled estates, and applied the purchase money partly in discharge of the debts thus contracted by him, it was held that the purchased lands could not be treated as liable to the trusts of the settled estates (f).

Covenant to settle his whole personal estate and a subsequent purchase is made.

10. In Lewis v. Madocks (g), no evidence to connect any particular fund with the estate was necessary, for a person having covenanted on his marriage to settle all the personalty he should acquire upon certain trusts, and having afterwards invested parts of his personalty on land, it was clear that the money expended upon the estate was bound by the trust, and could therefore be followed into the purchase.

Whether cestui que trust can take the land itself, or has only a lien.

11. Where a trust fund is traceable into land, and the fund constitutes a part only of the money laid out in the purchase, the Court has usually given a lien merely on the land for the trust money and interest (h); but where the entire land is clearly the fruit of the trust fund, the cestuis que trust must upon principle have a right to take the land itself, whether

13. Where trust money is followed into the hands of a person who, as having received it by collusion, or with express notice of the trust, becomes himself a trustee, he is precluded from pleading the Statute of Limitations (c). Statute of Limitations.

[14. It is not a fraudulent preference on the part of a trustee who has misappropriated trust money to make it good on the eve of bankruptcy (d). [Repayment of trust money not a fraudulent preference.]

15. Money obtained by fraud cannot be followed into the hands of persons who take it in satisfaction of a bonâ fide debt without notice (e). But where the payment is made without any legal consideration, as for the purpose of stifling a prosecution, the money may be followed by a person who is not in pari delicto by being a party to the illegal act (f). SECTION III.

OF THE REMEDY FOR A BREACH OF TRUST AGAINST THE TRUSTEE PERSONALLY.

Fraudulent Trustees' Punishment Act.

1. We may remark in limine that, by a modern statute (a), a breach of trust has been made a criminal act, and that if a trustee of any property for the benefit of another person, or for any public or charitable purpose, with intent to defraud, appropriates the same to his own use or for any other purpose than the legitimate one, he is now to be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour and be liable to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years and not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without solitary confinement (b). But no prosecution is to be commenced without the sanction of Her Majesty's Attorney-General, or, in the vacancy of that office, of the Solicitor-General; nor, where civil proceedings have been taken, without the sanction of the Court of civil judicature before which the same are pending (c). And no remedy at law or in equity is to be affected, nor is the Act to prejudice any agreement entered into or security given by any trustee, having for its object the restoration or repayment of any trust property misappropriated.

Effect of Act upon civil proceedings.

2. The last mentioned enactment of the statute leaves the remedy of the cestui que trust in reference to civil proceedings exactly as it stood before the Act. It relieves him from such obligation, if any, as the statute might have been held to impose of prosecuting the fraudulent trustee before proceeding to recover his property (d); and, notwithstanding the general

[(b) Section 1 of the Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 69) provides that where under any enactment in force when the section comes into operation (August 5, 1891) the Court has power to award a sentence of penal servitude, the sentence may, at the discretion of the Court, be for any period not less than three years, and not exceeding five years, or any greater period authorized by the enactment; and further, that, in lieu of a sentence of penal servitude, the Court may award imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.]

(d) As to the necessity for prosecuting before taking civil proceedings in cases of felony, see Cox v. Paxton, 17 Ves. 329; White v. Spettigue, 13 M. & W. 603; Scattergood v. Sylvester, 15 Q. policy of the law (a), may perhaps be held to go so far as to authorize an agreement for the restoration of the trust property, even though the withdrawal of an indictment against the trustee be one of the terms of the arrangement.

Where a solicitor is party to a breach of trust.

3. A solicitor, who wilfully advises a breach of trust, is liable to be struck off the roll (b). And à fortiori a solicitor, who, being a trustee, himself commits a wilful breach of trust, is amenable to the same penalty (c). But a solicitor (in common with any other agent) is not liable as a constructive trustee for the consequences of acts done by him, pursuant to instructions from his clients, who are trustees, and exercising their legal powers, unless he either receive some part of the trust property or assist with knowledge in some dishonest and fraudulent design on the part of his clients (d). Thus a testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to Crush, Lugar, and Addy, his three trustees and executors, upon trust for his four children, viz. Ann (who married Barnes), Susan (who married the trustee, Addy), and William and Mary. The shares of Ann and Susan were to be held upon trust for their separate use respectively, without power of anticipation, with remainder to their children; and the will contained a power of appointment of new trustees vested in the executors, but there was no authority to diminish their number. Crush renounced and disclaimed, and Clarke was appointed in his place; but Lugar and Clarke both died, and Addy became sole trustee of the trust fund. The shares of Susan and William had been satisfied, and Mary's share was not in question; but as to the share of Ann, the wife of Barnes, there being disputes between Addy, the trustee, and Barnes, Addy instructed his solicitor, Duffield, to appoint Barnes sole trustee in place of Addy, so far as regarded the share of Ann Barnes. Duffield represented the danger of placing the fund under the power of a single trustee, and advised Addy not to do it; but, as he persisted, he advised him at all events to take a deed of indemnity. Duffield afterwards declined to proceed unless a separate solicitor acted for Mrs. Barnes and her children, and Preston was thereupon appointed such solicitor, and he wrote to Ann Barnes a letter explanatory of the risk, but nevertheless

Ann Barnes wished it to be done. The deed of appointment of Barnes as sole trustee, and the deed of indemnity which had been proposed by Duffield, were then approved by Preston and executed; and Addy transferred the share of Ann Barnes (amounting, after certain deductions, to 2074*l.* consols), into the name of Barnes, who the next day sold it out, and applied the proceeds in his business and became bankrupt. The fund having been lost, the children of Ann Barnes filed their bill against the administratrix of Addy (then deceased), and against Duffield and Preston, to compel them to restore the trust fund. Addy's estate was declared liable, but the bill was dismissed as against Duffield and Preston. The plaintiffs appealed from this dismissal, and rested their case on the solicitors being parties to a threefold breach of trust, viz., first, the appointment of a single trustee; secondly, the transfer of the fund into the name of a sole trustee; and, thirdly, the division of the fund, so that there should be a separate trustee of each part. There was no evidence that either Duffield or Preston suspected, or had reason to suspect, the good faith of Barnes, and Lord Selborne and Lord Justice James concurred in the principle above laid down, and dismissed the appeal with costs (a). [And in a recent case it has been held that in order that a solicitor of a trustee may be debarred from accepting payments from the trustee out of the trust estate in respect of costs properly incurred, notice must be brought home to him that at the time when he accepted the payments the trustee had been guilty of such a breach of trust as would altogether preclude him from resorting to the estate for payment of costs (b).]

Civil proceedings.

4. As regards civil proceedings for compensation against the trustee, the cestui que trust, in the event of a breach of trust, is entitled to institute proceedings against the trustee to compel a compensation from him personally for the loss which the trust estate has sustained; and if the plaintiff has a vested interest and has reason to apprehend that the trustee is going abroad, he may obtain a writ of ne exeat regno (c). [But the breach of trust must be brought home to the trustee, and if there is a doubt whether the trustee has acted honestly and bonâ fide in

If a trustee has made default in payment of a trust fund which was in his hands, and was misapplied, he can be attached, though he may have spent the money before the date of the order for payment, and is unable to pay, and such trustee is within the third exception of the Debtors Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 4; Middleton v. Chichester, 6 L. the discharge of his duty, although he may have made mistakes, the doubt should be determined in favour of the trustee (a).]

Statute of Limitations.

5. This right to sue was not (previously to the 1st of January, 1890 (b)) affected by the Statute of Limitations (c). And even a trustee, who was also a cestui que trust in remainder, and by whose neglect the tenant for life got possession of the fund, has been allowed, notwithstanding the statute, to recover it from the estate of the tenant for life who wrongfully possessed himself of it (d); and an agent who collects debts for his employer under a power of attorney to collect debts and hold the proceeds upon certain trusts, is regarded as a trustee, and cannot [otherwise than under the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1888, sect. 8], plead the statute (e). [So directors of a company who have improperly paid dividends out of capital were not permitted to plead the statute (f).] And in like manner the personal representative or heir or devisee of a deceased trustee who has committed a breach of trust, or a legatee or next of kin in possession of the assets, with notice of the breach of trust (g), must be

But though the statute could not be pleaded in bar, yet where the trust fund had no actual existence, but the suit was for damages, gross laches would per cursum cancellariæ disentitle a plaintiff to relief, the Statute of Limitations leaving it open to a Court of equity to act upon its own rule as to laches and acquiescence (b). [Where a suit is founded on a breach of duty or fraud committed by a person in the position of a trustee, as where a director receives a bribe to neglect his duty, time will commence to run so soon as the fraud has been discovered (c).]

36 & 37 Vict. c. 66.

6. By a recent statute, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25, sub-s. 2, it was expressly enacted that no claim by a cestui que trust against his trustee in respect of any breach of an express trust, should be barred by any statute of limitations. But 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 10, enacts that from 1st January, 1879, no money or legacy charged on any land or rent shall, though secured by an express trust, be recoverable but within the time allowed for recovery had there been no express trust (d).

37 & 38 Vict. c. 57.

[The provisions of the Trustee Act, 1888, sect. 8, to which reference has already been made (e), will not affect cases of the kind now under consideration where the claim of the cestui que trust against the trustee is "founded upon fraud or fraudulent breach of trust to which the trustee was party or privy, or is to recover trust property or the proceeds thereof still retained by the trustee, or previously received by the trustee and converted to his use," and if a claim of that description can be substantiated, the trustee will henceforth, as heretofore, be precluded from pleading the statute; but if not then it would seem that sub-sect. 8 (B) of that section will be applicable, and that the lapse of six years will be a protection to the trustee, as it would have been in an ordinary action of debt.]

By section 5 of the same Act "every partner is an agent of the firm and his other partners for the purpose of the business of the partnership; and the acts of every partner who does any act for carrying on in the usual way business of the kind carried on by the firm of which he is a member bind the firm and his partners, unless the partner so acting has in fact no authority to act for the firm in the particular matter, and the person with whom he is dealing either knows that he has no authority or does not know or believe him to be a partner."] [Partnership Act, 1890.]

8. The remedy for a breach of trust lies against a corporation as well as against an individual; and a municipal corporation since the Municipal Corporation Act, has been held liable for a breach of trust committed before the Act (d). Corporation liable for breach of trust.

9. If a trustee dispose of the trust estate to a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, the cestui que trust may compel the trustee to purchase other lands of equal value to be settled upon the like trusts (e), or the cestui que trust may at his option take the proceeds of the sale, with interest, or the present estimated value of the lands sold, after deducting any increase of price caused by subsequent improvements (f). Neglect to accumulate.

11. Where a testator had directed an investment in Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities and an accumulation of the dividends, the trustee was decreed to purchase the sum of stock which the fund, if regularly invested, would have produced, and to make good the amount due in respect of subsequent accumulation (b).

Covenant to transfer stock.

12. If a settlement contain a covenant for the transfer of stock, [or the creation of a charge upon property,] and the trustee neglects to enforce the transfer (c), [or the creation of the charge (d),] he is liable for all the consequences.

Neglect to sell.

Policy forfeited.

14. If a trustee suffer a policy of insurance to become forfeited through neglect to pay the premiums, he is bound to make good the loss to the cestui que trust (f); provided, that is, he had funds in hand for payment of the premiums, for if he had none and could procure none, he would be exempt from liability (g). [15. In a recent case where a trustee had neglected to give notice of a settlement affecting a policy to the insurance office, and had, in contemplation of a breach of trust, retired in favour of a single trustee, who allowed the husband to get possession of the policy, whereupon he had received a bonus and mortgaged the policy, and the mortgagee had surrendered it; it was held that, although there were no funds available for keeping up the policy, the original trustee, inasmuch as there was a clear breach of trust in neglecting to give notice to the office and in parting with the possession of the policy, was liable for the amount of the bonus and of the moneys received on the surrender (b). [Policy improperly given up to husband and surrendered by his mortgagee.]

16. Where a director of a company accepted fully paid up shares from the promoters, under circumstances which were held to amount to a misfeasance on his part, and the shares, which at one time had been worth £80 a share, had become so much depreciated as to be worth only £1 a share, it was held that the director was a trustee of the shares for the company, that restitution of the shares by the director was not sufficient, but that the company might elect to have the value of the shares, and that the value was to be taken at £80 a share, which was to carry interest at £4 per cent. from the date of the transfer to the director (c). "A gift by a promoter to a director whilst there are any questions open between the company and the promoter must be accounted for by the director to the company for whom he is an agent, and the company has the option of claiming what is given, or its value, i.e. the highest value whilst held by the director" (d).] [Director accepting shares from promoters.]

Registration.

18. So if the trustee of a deed which requires registration to protect the property neglect to register it, he is answerable for the consequences (b).

Power imperative.

19. A trust is sometimes in the form of a power imperative ; that is, a power which it is the bounden duty of the trustee to execute, and if through his neglect to execute it a loss arises he will be held responsible (c).

Receipt by person not a trustee, but acting as such.

20. If a person has assumed to act as trustee, and having received money in that character misapplies it, he is accountable for the proceeds to the cestui que trust, and cannot defend himself by showing that in fact he was not legally a trustee (d), or that when he committed the breach he did not know who his cestui que trust was (e) ; [and this principle was applied to the case of an agent for an owner in fee who after the death of such owner continued to receive the rents and pay them into a separate account at his own bank, and stated that he was acting as agent and receiver for the person next entitled (f).] But the trustee of a devised estate will not be accountable for property comprised in the devise, but the existence of which did not come to his knowledge, and which he was not bound to have discovered (g).

sequential relief; and at the hearing must prove some act of wilful default, or at least establish a case for enquiry (a); and à fortiori where, at the original hearing, the common accounts only were directed, it is too late to ask relief on further directions against any wilful act that may have transpired accidentally in the course of other enquiries (b); and a trustee cannot be declared liable for wilful default upon a common order made at chambers for the administration of the testator's estate (c), [or upon an originating summons, otherwise than by consent (d).] But if the plaintiff pray an account with interest, and at the original hearing an account is directed, and in the course of the accounts improper balances appear to have been retained, interest on the balances may be asked for at the hearing on further directions (e). And if relief against a breach of trust be prayed, and at the original hearing the usual accounts only are directed, but with an enquiry who are the parties interested, it is not too late to ask relief against the breach of trust on further directions, as before that time the Court was not in a condition to deal with the question (f); [and under the modern practice where the statement of claim alleges wilful default the Court may at any stage of the proceedings direct accounts and enquiries upon that footing (g). But where there are allegations of wilful default or improper conduct on the part of the defendants, it is the duty of the plaintiff to be ready at the hearing to prove such allegations, and where the plaintiff was not in a position at the hearing to go into the charges (h) the Court would not, unless a strong case were made out for so doing, postpone the enquiry into the conduct of the trustees.] And in a redemption suit it is not necessary that the plaintiff should charge wilful default (i); nor is the case altered if the deed, though in substance a security, be in the form of a deed of trust (j). It is not competent to a remainderman to institute proceedings for relief against wilful default in respect of the prior life estate, for he has no interest in the income, but only in the corpus (b).

Suit against trustee's personal representative.

22. An executor or administrator of a trustee will be answerable for a breach of trust, though he may have distributed the assets amongst the legatees or next of kin without previous notice of the breach of trust (unless it was done under the sanction of the Court (c), or under the provisions of Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29); and the Statute of Limitations affords him no protection (d), [unless the nature of the breach of trust is such as to bring the case within the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1888, sect. 8 (e)]: or the cestui que trust, if he has not been lying by while the rights of the defendants have been varied by lapse of time (f), may recover the assets directly from the legatees or next of kin amongst whom they have been distributed (g).

Breach of trust an equitable debt only.

23. The debt constituted by a breach of trust is, even after it has been established by a decree, an equitable debt only, and until the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, would not have supported a petition in bankruptcy (h).

Breach of trust constitutes simple contract debt, unless the trustee has covenanted.

24. The claim of the cestui que trust is in general a simple contract debt, and therefore, until the Act, 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104, making a person's whole real and personal estate liable to his simple contract debts it was recoverable, not from the real, but only from the personal estate. Retainer by personal representative of insolvent trustee.

25. If a [sole] trustee die insolvent and indebted to the trust estate, the personal representative of the trustee has a right of retainer in respect of the debt to the trust as against other creditors, and on the cestuis que trust requiring him to exercise such right of retainer, he is bound to do so (b). [But as the right to retain only exists when the person to sue and the person to pay are the same, there will be no such right of retainer if the trustee who has died indebted to the estate has left a co-trustee surviving him (c).]

Immaterial whether trustee was gainer or loser by the breach of trust.

26. In awarding compensation to the cestui que trust against the trustee, the Court pays no regard to the circumstance whether the trustee derived any actual advantage or not, but proceeds upon the principle, that a trustee, who deviates from the line of his duty, is under an obligation to make good the loss to the cestui que trust (d): and if a trustee be guilty of misconduct, and a loss follows, the Court does not acquit him, because the loss was more immediately caused by some event wholly beyond the control of the trustee, such as fire, lightning, or other accident (e), [or because of conduct in the nature of contributory negligence on the part of the cestui que trust (f)]. "Although," said Lord Cottenham, "a personal representative acting strictly within the line of his duty, and exercising reasonable care and diligence, will not be responsible for the failure or depreciation of the fund in which any part of the estate may be invested, or for the insolvency or misconduct of any person who may have possessed it; yet if that line of duty be not strictly pursued, and any part of the property be invested by such personal representative in funds, or upon securities, not authorized, or be put within the control of persons who ought not to be entrusted with it, and a loss be

Case of trustee bringing a profit as well as a loss to the trust.

27. And a trustee who is liable for a loss occasioned by a breach of trust in respect of one portion of a trust fund, cannot set off against his liability a gain which has accrued to another portion of the trust fund through another distinct and wholly unconnected breach of trust (b); and even in the same matter, where executors were directed to convert the testator's property and invest it in Government or real securities, and they allowed the tenant for life for eleven years to receive 10 per. cent. on an Indian loan, and then invested the capital in a purchase of Bank Annuities, and the stock purchased was considerably more than could have been purchased with the same capital at the end of one year from the testator's death, they were not only made liable for the excess of interest paid to the tenant for life, but were disallowed their claim to set off against their liability the accidental advantage accruing to the trust from a purchase of a larger sum of Bank Annuities than could otherwise have been purchased from their laches in making the investment, and the depreciation of the funds during the interim (c).

Trustee not chargeable with imaginary values.

28. A defaulting trustee will not be charged with imaginary values (d); and being regarded as a mere stakeholder, he will not be liable for more than he has actually received (e), except in cases of very supine negligence, or wilful default (f).

[Liable for value of new allotted shares.]

[29. Where a trustee neglected to get in certain gas shares which formed part of the trust estate, and new shares were allotted in respect of the old gas shares, and were taken up by the person who had been allowed to hold the original shares, it was held that the trustee must make good the value of the new shares, less the amount of calls paid upon them, for they were an accretion to and, as such, part of the trust (g). And where a cestui que trust, by means of an appointment which was a fraud upon the power under which it purported to be made, received the surrender value of a policy belonging to the trust, his estate, after his death, was held liable not merely for the sum so received, but for the sum which would have been received under the policy if it had been kept on foot (a).

[Improper security.]

30. Where trust money is invested on an improper security, the liability of the trustee to make good the loss occasioned to the trust estate by the improper investment is not conditional upon an option being given to him of taking to the security (b); and new trustees, to whom such security has been transferred by the trustee who made the investment, can realize under the power vested in them by the transfer, and hold him liable for the deficiency, and may be justified in so realizing without notice to him. "The mode of enforcing this liability depends on the circumstances of the particular case. In some cases justice will be best done by realizing the security and making him pay the deficiency; but in some cases it may be right to make him pay at once the whole sum improperly invested, and let him take the benefit of the security" (c). In applying these principles, however, the provisions of sect. 5 of the Trustee Act, 1888 (d), already referred to (e) must be borne in mind.

If trust money be advanced on an insufficient security, the Court will not, in an action instituted by one trustee against his co-trustees in the absence of the cestuis que trust, order the securities to be realized merely to ascertain the deficiency, for the cestuis que trust may prefer either to retain the securities or proceed to a foreclosure, and they cannot in their absence be deprived of their rights (f).]

Co-trustees guilty of breach of trust are severally responsible for the whole loss.

31. Where co-trustees are jointly implicated in a breach of trust, the cestui que trust, though he obtains a decree against the trustees jointly, may have process of execution against any one of them separately (g); for as regards the remedy of the cestui que trust there is no primary liability, but each trustee is responsible for the entirety of the loss incurred (h). where the trustees are in pari delicto the decree is usually enforced against the trustees equally (a); and in one case, where a trustee had refused to accept the office unless another should be named with him, and the trust money be divided between them, so that each might be responsible for a moiety only, and this was accordingly done, but the trust deed was drawn in the usual form as if they were joint trustees of the whole sum, it was held, upon the insolvency of one of the trustees, that the co-trustee should not be answerable for more than the moiety paid to himself, the division of the trust money having been, Sir J. Leach observed, "a term in the creation of the trust" (b).

[Joint judgment against partners no merger of separate liability.]

[32. Where trust property is misappropriated by a firm so that the partners are jointly and severally liable to make good the loss, and the firm is adjudicated bankrupt on a judgment debt recovered against the firm by the owner of the trust property, the several liability of the partners is not, solely by reason of the creditor having recovered a joint judgment, merged in such judgment so as to preclude proof by him against the separate estates (c).]

Liability for the costs of suit.

33. Where the defendants are involved in a breach of trust, the Court decrees costs against them jointly, and does not distinguish between the relative culpabilities of the defendants (d). But where the plaintiff in pursuance of the decree recovered all the costs from a single co-defendant, the latter obtained an order in the same cause upon a motion (which however was not opposed) for contribution by the other defendants (e).

Liability and contribution as between the trustees themselves, or between them and other parties.

34. Though, as respects the remedy of the cestui que trust, each trustee is individually responsible for the whole amount of the loss, whether he was the principal in the breach of trust, or was merely a consenting party, yet, as between the trustees themselves, the loss may be thrown upon the party on whom, as recipient of the money or otherwise, the responsibility ought in equity to fall, or, if he be dead, upon his estate; and this claim of the innocent trustee (though formerly only a simple contract debt as between himself and his co-trustee, even where the breach of trust as between them and the cestuis que trust was a specialty debt), is now in such cases by the effect of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act (a) a specialty debt also (b). If all the trustees be equally guilty, then (unless the transaction was vitiated by not only constructive, but such actual fraud, that the Court will hold itself entirely aloof (c),) in accordance with the established doctrine of equity (d), an apportionment or contribution amongst the trustees may be compelled, which under the old practice was not allowed, in the same suit, but on a bill filed for the purpose (e). And if in the suit for recovery of the trust fund any benefit, as a legacy, be coming in the same matter to one of two defaulting trustees, the other trustee, if he pay the whole of what is due to the cestuis que trust, will have a lien on the legacy of the co-trustee for the amount of contribution he ought to pay (f).

If one of the trustees has the active management of the trust, and, acting honestly though erroneously, commits a breach of trust which leads to loss, he is not bound to indemnify his co-trustees who were passive in the matter, and who, by doing nothing, neglected their duty more than the active trustee (h); [Nor an acting trustee.]

but where the acting trustee is the solicitor for the trust, or derives any personal benefit from the breach of trust, he may be compelled to indemnify his co-trustees (a). An executor who has been decreed to make good the loss incurred by his wilful default in not getting in part of the assets from the trustee of a settlement who has been allowed to retain and misappropriate them, is not thereby precluded from subsequently recovering from the trustee the amount misappropriated by him (b).]

The gainer by the breach of trust is ultimately liable.

36. As between the trustees and a third person who has reaped the benefit of the breach of trust, though the trustees must make the disbursement in the first instance to the injured party, the loss will eventually be cast on the person who was the gainer by the breach of trust (c). But the circumstance that the breach of trust was committed at the instance of a cestui que trust will not per se impose upon him the obligation of indemnifying the trustee generally. Thus in Raby v. Ridehalgh (d), where the cestuis que trust, the tenants for life, had instigated the breach of trust, L. J. Turner asked, "Has the Court in a suit of this nature ever gone the length of ordering the cestuis que trust personally to recoup the trustee?" and the Court directed the tenants for life to account to the trustee only for the monies which had been received by them under the breach of trust, and this has since been followed by other decisions (e).

The interest of parties committing a breach of trust may be impounded to compensate the trust, or indemnify the trustee.

37. If a cestui que trust whether tenant for life, or other person having a partial interest, be responsible for having joined in a breach of trust, all the benefit that would have accrued to him, his judgment the Courts ought to be very jealous of raising an implied liability of the kind under consideration, "because if such existed it would act as an opiate upon the consciences of the trustees; so that instead of the cestuis que trust having the benefit of several acting trustees, each trustee would be looking to the other for a right of indemnity, and so neglect the performance of his duties. Such a doctrine would be against the policy of the Court in relation to trusts;" and see Bacon v. Camphausen, 58 L. T. N.S. 851; Blyth v. Fladgate, (1891) 1 Ch. 337, 365.]

either directly or derivatively (a), either from that trust fund, or any other estate comprised in the same settlement (b), may be stopped by the cestuis que trust, or other person having a similar equity, as against him, his assignees in bankruptcy (c), or judgment creditors (d), or general creditors (e); and (except so far as the defence of purchase for value without notice may be applicable) against all who claim under him (f), until the amount impounded, with the accumulations thereon (g), has compensated the trust estate for the loss for which that cestui que trust is responsible. [And even an estate legally vested in the wrongdoer by the settlement (being an instrument inter vivos) may by virtue of an implied contract be made available for repairing the breach of trust (h), but the doctrine cannot be extended to a legal devisee, as there no contract can be implied, and in the absence of contract a Court of equity has no control over the estate (i).] And the rule was held to apply to a feme covert entitled to her separate use [with no restraint on anticipation, where she had full knowledge of all the circumstances and acted independently in the transactions which constituted the breach of trust, but she was not held liable merely because she acquiesced in or approved of the breach of trust unless she took part in it (j); and she could not be made liable] where her power of anticipation was restrained (k).

[Lien on share of co-trustee.]

If the cestui que trust be one of three trustees and joins with his co-trustees in a breach of trust, and the co-trustees have been made to repair the breach of trust, the co-trustees have a lien on the share of the cestui que trust, who is also a trustee, for a contribution of one-third, but without interest, towards the amount paid by them for clearing the joint breach of trust (a). It was contended in one case, that where an estate was devised to a person who was a debtor to the testator, the debt was a lien on the devised estate, but the Court not finding any precedent did not allow the claim (b).

[Trustee Act, 1888.]

[Now by the Trustee Act, 1888 (c), sect. 6, it is enacted as follows:—

"(1) Where a trustee shall have committed a breach of trust, at the instigation or request or with the consent in writing of a beneficiary, the Court may, if it shall think fit, and notwithstanding that the beneficiary may be a married woman entitled for separate use, whether with or without a restraint upon anticipation, make such order as to the Court shall seem just for impounding all or any part of the interest of the beneficiary in the trust estate by way of indemnity to the trustee or person claiming through him. This section shall apply to breaches of trust committed as well before as after the passing of this Act, except where an action or other proceeding shall be pending with reference thereto at the passing of this Act."

In a recent case decided under this section the facts were shortly as follows:—

By a marriage settlement a settlor covenanted to pay to the trustees a sum of money at a future date, and limited to himself a life interest in the settled funds with remainder to his wife for life, and he also assigned to the trustees, as security for the payment, certain trust funds to which he was absolutely entitled in reversion under the marriage settlement of his mother. Notice of this assignment was duly given to the trustees of the mother's marriage settlement. These latter trustees, admittedly in breach of trust, paid to the mother, the son, and his wife, on their entreaty, part of the trust funds comprised in the mother's settlement. In an action by the trustees of the son's settlement against the trustees of the mother's settlement, it was held by Romer, J., that the latter trustees were not entitled to indemnity from the son's wife, as she was not a beneficiary under the mother's settlement, of which alone they were trustees, and his lordship said that even if she were such a beneficiary he would not have exercised the discretion vested in the Court by this section to impound her interest, as the trustees had not committed the breach of trust owing to any misrepresentation or deceit on her part, but with their eyes open (a).

If the decision that the son's wife was not a beneficiary is to be read as involving the general proposition that the assignee of a beneficiary is not a beneficiary within the meaning of the section, and if the language of the learned judge is to be understood as conveying that, in order to induce the Court to exercise its discretion under the section, it is necessary that deception of or misrepresentations to the trustee should be shown, the operation of the section will apparently be restricted within narrow limits.]

Bankruptcy of the trustee.

38. If the trustee become bankrupt, the loss may be proved against his estate (b), and without proceeding in equity to establish the breach of trust (c), and if interest would have been decreed in equity against the trustee himself, it will constitute part of the debt in the proof against his estate in the hands of his trustee in bankruptcy (d), and if the breach of trust was a sale of stock, the cestui que trust may, at his option, prove for the proceeds of the sale, or for the value of the stock at the date of the bankruptcy (e), and if a debtor to the trust be bankrupt, and entitled himself to a reversionary interest in the debt, the trustee of the settlement may nevertheless prove for the whole debt, without any set-off for the reversionary interest, for if such a set-off were allowed it would diminish what the tenants for life would have to receive (f). And if a trustee prove for the whole debt he may still retain any beneficial interest of the bankrupt in the trust estate by way of lien or set-off in further discharge of the debt (g), [for the trustee cannot be allowed by proving in bankruptcy to prejudice the cestuis que trust (h).] But if an executor, who represents the absolute ownership of the personal estate, and has therefore an absolute power over the debts due to his testator, prove for the whole debt, it is deemed a waiver of any lien which the executor might otherwise have had upon the bankrupt's interest in such personal estate (a), and if the bankrupt, in whose hands the trust fund was, be one of the trustees, and indebted to the trust estate, and also have a present beneficial interest in the trust, proof cannot be made for the whole amount, but only for the balance, after setting off the bankrupt's beneficial interest against the debt due from him (b).

[Where one trustee a bankrupt but balance due to the trustees on the accounts.]

[39. If one of two trustees becomes bankrupt and is a debtor to the trust estate, and a balance is found due to the two trustees in taking their accounts, the balance will not be set off against the debt of the bankrupt trustee to the prejudice of the solvent trustee, but an account will be directed, so as to ascertain how much of the balance is due to the solvent trustee and how much to the bankrupt trustee, and the set off will be confined to the latter account (c).]

Trustee a partner and lending the trust money to the firm with notice.

40. If the trustee was one of a bankrupt firm, to which the trust money had been lent, proof may be made either against the joint estate of the firm, or the separate estate of the bankrupt trustee, and of any other of the partners who may have constituted themselves trustees or taken an active part in the breach of trust (d); but not [in general] against both the joint and separate estates (e). [Where, however, the trust fund was handed by the trustee to his firm for investment, and they misappropriated the fund and became bankrupt, so that there were distinct liabilities, namely, the liability of the firm arising out of the contract entered into or implied when the money was handed to them for investment, and the separate liability of the trustee arising out of the contract entered into or implied when he accepted the trusts, it was held that under sched. II. r. 18 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, proof might be made against the joint estate of the firm as well as the separate estate of the defaulting trustee (f).] If the bankrupt had laid out the trust money on a mortgage, the cestui que trust is not put to his election whether he will prove for the debt, and abandon the mortgage, or take the mortgage and abandon the debt, but may prove for the debt, and have the benefit of the mortgage also (g):

and if the trust money had been invested, but improperly, the cestui que trust has a right to elect to prove for the money and interest, or for the value of the securities and profits (a).

Trustee not a partner and lending money to the firm or the partners.

41. If the trustee was not one of the firm, but he lent the trust fund to the bankrupt firm, proof can be made as for an ordinary debt against the joint estate. If the trustee lent the money, not to the firm, but to one of the members of the firm, and the partners had no notice of the source from which it came, proof can only be made against the separate estate of the partner who received, though the money may, in fact, have been applied to partnership purposes (b). But if the other partners had notice of the source of the money, proof can be made against the joint estate of the firm (c), but not, it seems, against the separate estate of each partner (d), unless the firm by their dealings with the cestuis que trust constituted themselves trustees directly for them (e). Nor can proof be made, on the mere ground of notice, for the profits made by the use of the money; for the partners in the firm are regarded not as actual but only as constructive trustees, that is, having notice of the trust they are accountable for the money, but not being clothed with any special duty, they do not come within the rule that "a trustee shall not profit by his trust" (f).

Apportionment between tenant for life and remaindermen of amount recovered from bankrupt trustee.

42. It was held by Lord Romilly, M.R., that where a trustee had proved against a bankrupt's estate for 6985*l.* 19s. 7d. principal money made away with by the bankrupt, and for 2744*l.* 9s. 11d. interest (which should have been paid to the tenant for life), making together a sum total of 9730*l.* 9s. 6d., all dividends received under the bankruptcy should first make up the lost capital, and that the tenant for life had no lien for his lost income, but was entitled only to the interest of the capital sums received by way of dividend under the bankruptcy (g). The natural course would have been to apportion the fund as between the tenant for life and remaindermen according to their respective losses, as otherwise it would work occasionally a great hardship. Suppose for instance the tenant for life, though entitled for the last ten years, had received nothing and then died before the dividend was paid. The whole would go to the remainderman, and the executor of the tenant for life would receive nothing, though a large part of the dividend was recovered in respect of the life estate (a).

Since these remarks were written, the case has in effect been overruled. In Cox v. Cox (b), A. covenanted on his marriage that his executors, within three months after his death, should pay to the trustees a sum of 6,000*l.* with interest, from his death, at 4 per cent., to be held in trust for his widow for life, with remainder to the children. A. died in 1862, and his estate was administered by the Court. The assets were insufficient to satisfy the principal and interest, and the question was, how the amount recovered was to be dealt with as between the tenant for life and the remaindermen, and V. C. Sir W. James said, "The true principle in all these cases is, that neither the tenant for life nor the remainderman is to gain an advantage over the other, neither is to suffer more damage in proportion to his estate and interest than the other suffers from the default of the obligor. Assuming that 5500*l.* is the sum that will be recovered, a calculation must be made back, What principal, if invested on the day of the obligor's death (the date from which the interest was to run) at 4 per cent. would amount with interest to the sum so recovered? Interest at 4 per cent. on this principal, or in other words the difference between the principal and the amount, will then go to the tenant for life, and the rest must be treated as principal."

[Of proceeds of sale of mortgaged property.]

[So where money had been properly invested upon mortgage, but the interest fell into arrear, the mortgaged property was ultimately realized, and the proceeds were insufficient to pay the principal and interest, it was held that the proceeds were apportionable between capital and income in the ratios of the capital sum originally invested and the actual arrears of simple interest on the mortgage (c).]

trust did not know of the misapplication of the trust fund (a). But it was the duty of the trustee to see that some person proved on behalf of the trust, and if he did not, he was liable in equity for this neglect of duty : and though he had obtained his certificate he was held responsible personally for the amount that might have been received by way of dividend (b). And a demand in respect of a breach of trust was held to be equally barred by the trustee's discharge under the Insolvent Acts, provided the liability was duly mentioned in the schedule (c).

Proof where one of several trustees is bankrupt.

44. If the bankrupt was one of two co-trustees, who were jointly implicated in a breach of trust, then proof may be made against the bankrupt's estate for the whole money lost, though he was not the party benefited by the breach of trust (d); and though the other trustee be living and solvent (e); or, at the same time that proof is made against the estate of one who is a bankrupt, legal proceedings may be taken against the solvent trustee; for proof under a bankruptcy is not payment (f). And the proof against the bankrupt will not be precluded by a bond given not to sue the other trustee, reserving the right against all other parties (g), though a release to the other trustee, being an extinguishment of the debt, would prevent any subsequent proof (h).

Co-trustees bankrupts.

45. So if two co-trustees be bankrupts, proof may be made against the estate of each (i); but of course more than 20s. in the pound cannot be received in the whole.

Contribution.

46. Where the whole debt is proved against the estate of the bankrupt trustee, the trustee in bankruptcy may afterwards take proceedings, and compel contribution from the other trustee (j), even where the bankrupt trustee himself could not, from his fraudulent conduct, have obtained such relief (k).

Trust money authorized to be employed in trade.

47. Where a testator has authorized the employment of his estate in trade, if the firm in which it was employed become bankrupt, proof cannot be made against the estate of the bankrupts in respect of the money so employed; for it is not a debt of the firm, but merely capital brought into it: but, when the joint creditors have been satisfied, the trustee member of the firm may, as one of the partners, establish a balance, if there be one, against the separate estates of the co-partners (a).

32 & 33 Vict. c. 71.

48. By the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (b), a bankrupt after, and notwithstanding his order of discharge, remains liable to his cestui que trust for a breach of trust. But as the breach of trust constitutes a debt, which may be proved for in the bankruptcy, the debtor is protected from all other proceedings against him for the breach of trust until after his discharge, when the creditor may proceed either against him personally or against his property as if no bankruptcy had intervened (c). [The section applies to the breach of a constructive trust as well as that of an express trust (d), and the liability of a defaulting trustee to contribute, where his co-trustee has made good a breach of trust, is a "liability incurred by means of a breach of trust" within the Act from which the bankrupt trustee is not released by the discharge (e).

[46 & 47 Vict. c. 52.

By the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (f), the liability of a bankrupt to his cestui que trust continues after his discharge only in cases where the breach of trust is fraudulent.]

The Debtors Act, 1869.

49. The Debtors Act, 1869 (g), abolishes arrest and imprisonment for debt, but excepts, amongst other things, default by a trustee or person acting in a fiduciary capacity (h), and ordered to pay by a Court of equity (i) any sum in his possession or under his control. them in his possession until he has properly discharged himself, and it is not necessary, to bring a trustee within the exception, that he should have the trust funds in his actual possession, or under his control, at the time the order is made. Thus if an order be made upon a trustee to repay a sum which he had previously misappropriated and spent, he may be attached for neglecting to obey the order (a), and it makes no difference that the trustee has ceased to be a trustee in the interval between the commission of the wrongful act and the making of the order for payment (b). So where two trustees, A. and B., received a sum of money and placed it in a bank to their joint account, but made payable to the cheque of A. alone, who drew it out and misapplied it, and thereupon B. was ordered in a suit to make it good, it was held that B. on non-payment was liable to be attached and sent to prison (c). And a debtor who has admitted that a sum of money due from him is in his hands, and has submitted to an order directing that he hold such sum upon certain trusts, is liable to attachment (d). But it must be shown that the money has been in the trustee's possession or under his control, and therefore] a trustee who had been ordered to pay a sum of money which he had neglected only in breach of his duty to recover, was held not to fall within the exception and could not therefore be arrested and imprisoned (e); [and where an order directed payment of a sum composed of principal and interest, not distinguished, no attachment could be issued, because so much as represented interest could not be said to have been in the possession or under the control of the trustee (f); and so where the order was for payment of the existing market value of lands improperly sold, as the difference between such value and the amount produced by the sale never came to the trustee's hands (g).

Where a trustee disobeyed an order to pay money into Court and was afterwards bankrupt, it was held that sect. 9 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, providing that, after the making of a receiving order, no creditor shall have any remedy against the person or property of the debtor applied so as to suspend the jurisdiction of the Court to order attachment to issue against him (a); but in a more recent case Chitty, J., declined to follow this decision, and held that, the proceeding being not merely civil but of a punitive and disciplinary character, the Bankruptcy Act had not taken away the jurisdiction (b).

[The Debtors Act, 1878.]

50. By the Debtors Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 54), the Court is empowered among other things "to inquire into the case of a defaulting trustee, and to grant or refuse, either absolutely or upon terms, any application for a writ of attachment, or other process, or order of arrest or imprisonment, and any application to stay the operation of any such writ, process, or order, or for discharge from arrest or imprisonment thereunder." Under this section the Court has refused to issue a writ of attachment against a defaulting trustee, where it appeared that he was unable to pay, and that no good purpose could be served by sending him to prison (c). But as the Debtors Act, 1869, while abolishing the penalty of imprisonment for debt in the case of an honest debtor was intended for the punishment of a fraudulent or dishonest debtor, and as it was not intended by the Amendment Act to get rid of the penal clauses of the previous Act, but only to give the judges a judicial discretion to deal with exceptional cases, the Court ought, in the case of a dishonest debtor, to send him to prison, unless it is satisfied that he has no means of satisfying the debt (d); and in a recent case in which the Court was not satisfied that the debtor was unable to pay, Kay, J., observed, "I think that this is a case in which the punishment ought to be inflicted for the purpose of teaching this man that a dishonest act of this kind will not be passed over with impunity even though he is unable to pay, and for the purpose of teaching other trustees the same lesson" (e). But where there had been no actual fraud or embezzlement, but only an erroneous application of the trust funds, the Court, upon the trustee undertaking to execute a charge upon all the property to which he was or might become entitled, declined to attach him for having failed to comply with an order for payment of the trust fund into Court (a).]

In assigning to the cestui que trust the foregoing remedies against the trustee, it must be understood that the cestui que trust has not himself concurred in the breach of duty, or subsequently acquiesced in it, and, à fortiori, has not executed a formal release or confirmation.

I. Of concurrence.

Concurrence of the cestui que trust in the breach of trust.

1. If a cestui que trust concur in the breach of trust he is for ever estopped from proceeding against the trustee for the consequences of the act (b), and à fortiori a cestui que trust, who is also a trustee, cannot hold his co-trustee responsible for any act in which they both joined (c).

Ignorance.

2. But persons cannot be held to have concurred in a breach of trust who had not the means of knowing that the acts to which they were parties involved a breach of trust (d).

Femes covert and infants cannot concur.

3. And persons cannot concur in a breach of trust, who, as femes covert (e) and infants (f), have no legal capacity to consent to the transaction.

Except guilty of actual fraud.

4. But neither coverture nor infancy will be a protection from a charge of fraud, and therefore if a feme covert (g), or infant (h), draw in a trustee to commit a breach of trust, such feme covert or infant cannot afterwards call the trustee to account for having violated his duty.

Separate use.

5. A feme covert will be bound by her concurrence in a breach of trust as to any fund which is settled to her separate use, where there is no restraint against anticipation (a), and such feme covert, if she execute a deed, will not be allowed to controvert the statements of facts contained in the deed (b). But she will not be estopped upon the ground of concurrence where the act was not voluntary, but her judgment was misled, or she was under undue influence (c). And a feme covert has no power to concur in any act as to a fund settled to her separate use where there is a restraint against anticipation (d).

Power of appointment.

And her concurrence will not operate beyond the interest settled to her separate use, though she have a power of appointment in addition; as if a feme be tenant for life to her separate use, with a power of appointing the corpus by will, though her concurrence would affect the life interest, it does not prevent the appointees under the will from holding the trustees responsible (e). Whether mere knowledge and abstinence from suing a bar in cases of breach of trust.

2. How far the mere knowledge of a right to sue in respect of a breach of trust, and the abstaining to sue will, without any other act, constitute laches in the eye of a Court of equity, and disentitle the plaintiff to relief, as in the particular instances of purchases by trustees, &c., above referred to (a), was until lately very uncertain; but it seems to be now settled that gross laches, as for twenty years, will disentitle a cestui que trust to relief (b). But of course mere knowledge without suing for a few years, as for three years (c), [four years (d),] or ten years (e), will not destroy the right to impeach the transaction. And where there is an express trust for successive incumbrancers, on a limited interest, as a life estate, the subsequent incumbrancers are not chargeable with laches so long as the whole beneficial interest is absorbed by the prior incumbrancers (f).

No bar where notice of breach of trust is constructive only.

3. A cestui que trust, who does not actually know, is not to be affected with knowledge of a breach of trust because he might by enquiry have ascertained the fact, for it is not his duty but that of the trustee to see that the trust fund is in a proper state (g).

Ward of Court.

4. A settlement by a ward of Court under the direction of the Court, of funds stated to represent the infant's fortune, will not operate as a confirmation of past breaches of trust (h).

Fluctuating body as parishioners or creditors.

5. It seems that a public and fluctuating body, as parishioners, may be bound by acquiescence (i). But it is almost unnecessary to repeat, that acquiescence cannot be objected against a class of persons, as parishioners or creditors, with the same degree of force as against a single individual (j).

Satisfaction in part for a breach of trust.

6. A cestui que trust who, knowing that his trustee has committed a breach of trust, gets what he can from the wreck of the property, and with that view receives from the trustee part of the relief to which he is entitled, does not thereby waive his right to the full relief to which he is entitled (a).

[Creditor's right not affected by not pressing for payment.]

[7. A creditor who merely abstains from calling upon the executors to realize the testator's estate for the purpose of paying his debt is not thereby deprived of his right to sue the executor's for devastavit. To deprive him of his right, he must, either by his conduct or by express authority, have misled the executors into parting with the assets available for payment of his claim (b).]

Acquiescence by reversioner.

8. As to acquiescence by a cestui que trust while his interest is reversionary, L. J. Turner observed: "Length of time, where it does not operate as a statutory or positive bar, operates simply as evidence of assent or acquiescence. The two propositions of a bar by length of time and by acquiescence are not distinct propositions. They constitute but one proposition, and that proposition is that the cestui que trust assented to the breach of trust. A cestui que trust whose interest is reversionary is not bound to assert his title until it comes into possession; but the mere circumstance that he is not bound to assert his title does not seem to me to bear upon the question of his assent to a breach of trust. He is not, so far as I can see, less capable of giving such assent when his interest is in reversion than when it is in possession. Whether he has done so or not is a question to be determined on the facts of each particular case" (c). But he afterwards added that he was not prepared to say that, where the trust was definite and clear, a breach of trust could be held to have been sanctioned or concerned in by the mere knowledge and non-interference of the cestui que trust before his interest had come into possession (d). The above doctrines were approved by L. C. Campbell, with the further remark that it was easy to conceive cases in which, from great lapse of time, the facts from which the consent of the cestuis que trust was to be inferred might and ought to be presumed (e).

III. Of Release and Confirmation.

Release and confirmation by cestui que trust.

1. Lastly, a cestui que trust may preclude himself from his remedy against the trustee by executing a formal release of the breach of trust, or giving validity to the transaction by an express confirmation (a). And if the cestui que trust release the principal in a breach of trust or fraud, he cannot afterwards proceed against the other parties who would have been secondarily liable (b).

[Release in respect of a void transaction invalid.]

[But a release in respect of a transaction which a Court of equity would hold to be not merely voidable but void, will not bind the cestui que trust executing the release. Thus where on the footing of a supposed illegitimacy the title of the cestui que trust to a legacy was disputed and denied by the trustee, and the cestui que trust was thereby induced to accept from the trustee a smaller sum than that to which he was entitled, and by deed to release the trustee from the payment of the legacy, it was held, that the question of the legitimacy of the cestui que trust being entirely irrelevant, the transaction was absolutely unmeaning and void, and the release was set aside and relief granted after a long lapse of time (c).]

Waiver.

2. Under the head of release, we may notice the subject of waiver. "As to waiver," said Sir W. Grant, "it is difficult to say precisely what is meant by that term. With reference to the legal effect, a waiver is nothing unless it amounts to a release. It is by a release, or something equivalent only, that an equitable demand can be given away. A mere waiver signifies nothing more than an expression of intention not to insist upon the right, which in equity will not without consideration bar the right any more than at law an accord without satisfaction would be a plea. If there be a consideration, however slight, I do not know that the Court would not consider it a sufficient foundation for a release, or what is equivalent to a release" (d).

It would seem, therefore, that waiver is some positive act which, if supported by valuable consideration, though slight, will be taken in equity to constitute a release; but, if it be merely an expression of intention not to insist on the right, and there is an absence of consideration, it is no waiver in the sense of a release (a).

Requisites for valid acquiescence, release, or confirmation.

Acquiescence, and release and confirmation, to have the effect we have mentioned, must be understood to be accompanied with the following conditions:—

a. As in the case of concurrence, the cestui que trust must be sui juris, and not a feme covert or infant; and, as regards infants, the Court continues its protection even after they have attained twenty-one till such time as they have acquired all proper information (b); and infants on coming of age must, in the case of a formal release being executed by them, where it is required, have proper legal advice (c). However, a feme covert is clearly sui juris as regards property settled to her separate use, [or belonging to her as her separate property under the Married Women's Property Acts,] where there is no restraint against anticipation (d). But where a feme covert is entitled to separate estate with a clause against anticipation it is difficult to see how she can be affected by acquiescence (e). In a late case (f), however, Lord Justice Turner intimated his leaning to be in favour of the affirmative; but the language of Lord Justice Knight Bruce, in the case alluded to, was more guarded. The restraint on anticipation can impose no fetter as respects income accrued due before the acts of acquiescence relied upon (g). If a suit be instituted for relief against a breach of trust, the Court has jurisdiction to sanction a compromise on behalf of a married woman even though her interest be reversionary (h).

the Attorney-General, to see that justice is administered to every part of her Majesty's subjects. Relators need not be personally interested (a). They are required merely because the Attorney-General, prosecuting a suit in the name of the Crown, would not be liable to costs, and unless some person were made responsible, proceedings might be instituted very oppressive to individuals (b).

Statute of Charitable Uses.

2. In the reign of Elizabeth an Act was passed, commonly called the Statute of Charitable Uses (c), by which the Court of Chancery was empowered to issue commissions to certain persons, including the bishop of the diocese, who were authorized, after summoning a jury of the county where the property was situate, to enquire into any abuse or misapplication of the trust estate. Many of these proceedings were so little consonant with justice, and on appeal to the Lord Chancellor, were found at once so puzzling, and so far from accomplishing the object in view, that at length the practice of issuing commissions fell into disuse, and people again resorted to the original process by way of information (d).

52 Geo. 3. c. 101, called Romilly's Act.

3. After commissions had ceased to be issued, the legislature endeavoured to provide a remedy, not as before, by creating a new jurisdiction, but by giving liberty to proceed under the old jurisdiction of Chancery in a summary mode. The 52 Geo. 3. c. 101, commonly called Sir Samuel Romilly's Act, and intituled "An Act to provide a summary Remedy in Cases of Abuses of Trusts created for Charitable Purposes," declared that "in every case of a breach of any trust created for charitable purposes, or whenever the direction or order of a Court of equity should be deemed necessary for the administration of any trust for charitable purposes, it should be lawful for any two or more persons to present a petition to the Chancellor, Master of the Rolls, or the Court of Exchequer, praying such relief as the nature of the case might require, such petition to be heard in a summary way upon affidavits or such other evidence as should be produced, the order made thereon to be final and conclusive, unless appealed against to the House of Lords within two years from the entry thereof." And it was provided that "every petition should be signed by the persons preferring the same in the presence of and be attested by the solicitor or attorney concerned for the petitioners, and should be allowed by his Majesty's Attorney or Solicitor General."

Strictures on the Act.

4. These enactments, though penned by a very able hand, have been strongly reprobated as very loosely and obscurely worded—as tending rather to increase than diminish the expense of the application—in short, as having produced more mischief than benefit. "It was a wise saying," observed Lord Redesdale, "that the farthest way about was often the nearest way home, and he believed that these summary proceedings would be not always the nearest or at least not the best way home" (a).

Construction of the Act.

5. Upon the construction of this statute the following points have been resolved:—

Interest.

a. Although the Act authorizes any two or more persons to present the petition, the words must be understood to mean any persons having an interest (b): and the Court is bound to see not only that the petitioners are possessed of a clear interest, but that they prove themselves to be possessed of the interest they allege in their petition (c).

Breach of trust.

β. It has been said that the body of the statute is to be governed by the preamble, and therefore that the Act will not authorize a petition for any other purpose than relief against a breach of trust (d). But this narrow construction gives no force to the words of the Act, "or whenever the direction or order of a Court of equity shall be deemed necessary for the administration of any trust for charitable purposes;" and the doctrine has since been called into question, and may be considered as overruled (e).

Plain and simple cases only within the Act.

γ. The provision extends only to plain and simple cases for the opinion or direction of the Court (f), not where a question is to be discussed adversely who are to be intrusted with the administration of the charity estate (a), or who are entitled to the benefit of it (b), or whether the trustees or governors of the charity have or not, by the constitution of it, a certain authority, as of removing a master (c), or where any stranger is interested (d) (for the right of a third person cannot be disposed of on petition (e)), or where the relief which is sought is directed against the assets of a deceased trustee (f), or where the object of the application is not to have the existing charity regulated, but to have the funds diverted to some other charitable purpose (g). The Court has jurisdiction, however, under the Act, to settle a scheme of the charity (h), or to alter a scheme previously settled by decree (i), or to appoint new trustees (j), or where parishes have been divided to apportion the charities amongst the districts (k), or to direct a sale of the charity estate in a proper case (l), and generally the Court, as between the trustees and cestuis que trust of the charity, exercises a discretion as to whether it can put in operation the powers given by the Act with benefit to the charity (m).

Allowance.

8. The allowance "by the Attorney or Solicitor-General" must be construed with reference to the previous law upon the subject, and must therefore be taken to mean, not by the Attorney or Solicitor-General indifferently, but by the Attorney-General, when there is such an officer, and in the vacancy of that office by the Solicitor-General (a).

Want of signature.

ε. If the petition be not signed by the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General, or if, after signature, it be not duly served, an order made by the Court under the Act will be an absolute nullity (b), and the petition may be taken off the file for irregularity (c).

ζ. As the intention of the legislature was to guard the charity fund from abuse, and with that view to prevent proceedings from being instituted, as they frequently were before, for no other reason than because it was known that the costs would be paid out of the charity estate, the Attorney-General, or, in the vacancy of that office, the Solicitor-General, ought not to sanction the petition with his signature but upon as much deliberation as if the relief were sought by way of information (d).

Attorney-General must be a party.

η. The Attorney-General by his allocatur, or allowance, of the petition, is not functus officio, and precluded from all future control, but must be made a party to any subsequent proceedings under the petition, as he would have been to all proceedings by way of information (e).

May correct his judgment.

θ. The Attorney-General, as representing the person of the Queen in her character of parens patriæ, is bound to see justice done, not only to the plaintiff in the petition, but also to the trustees and other defendants, and therefore is not estopped by his allocatur of the petition from afterwards correcting his judgment, but may support or oppose the views of the petitioners, as in his discretion he may think fit (f).

Motion.

ι. When the jurisdiction of the Court has been once attracted by the petition, a subsequent order may be made upon motion without the expense of a further petition (g).

Acts appointing Commissioners of enquiry.

6. Under powers given by 58 Geo. 3. c. 91, and 59 Geo. 3. c. 81, certain commissioners of enquiry into charities were appointed, and by 59 Geo. 3. c. 91, it was enacted, that when it appeared to such commissioners of enquiry that the directions or orders of a Court of equity were requisite for remedying any neglect, breach of trust, fraud, abuse, or misconduct in the management of any trust created for charitable purposes, &c., it should be lawful for the said commissioners to certify the particulars of such case to his Majesty's Attorney-General. The labours of these commissioners of enquiry proved very valuable, and many informations were filed in consequence of certificates made by them; but their powers, after being frequently continued, expired in 1837.

16 & 17 Vict. c. 137.

7. By the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, great additional facilities have been afforded for detecting and remedying breaches of trust in charity matters.

Powers of enquiry.

Commissioners are thereby appointed (a), to whom are confided powers of enquiry (b) similar to those given to the commissioners appointed by the Acts of George 3, and also a similar power of certifying cases to the Attorney-General as fit for his interference (c).

New jurisdiction at chambers.

In cases of charities the incomes of which exceed 30*l. per annum*, the same jurisdiction is given in charity cases (after the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioners) to the Chancery Judges at chambers as was before the Act exercisable by the Court of Chancery, or the Lord Chancellor entrusted with the custody of lunatics, in a suit regularly constituted, or upon petition; but the Judge may direct a suit or petition to be instituted or presented (d). And the provisions of the Act in respect of charities whose incomes exceed 30*l.* per annum, are applicable to charities within the city of London, the income whereof is less than 30*l. per annum* (e).

Jurisdiction of Courts of Bankruptcy and County Courts.

Where the incomes of charities do not exceed 30*l.* (since extended to 50*l.* (f)) per annum, the District Courts of Bankruptcy and County Courts, with the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioners, are armed with the same jurisdiction as the Court of Chancery had (g); and with the permission of the Commissioners to be applied for within one month after the making of the order (h), an appeal was allowed to the Court of Chancery (i).

Necessity for previous consent of Charity Commissioners before taking proceedings.

The Act contains a special provision that no suit or proceeding (a) not being an application "in any suit or matter actually pending," shall be commenced or taken without an authority previously obtained from the Charity Commissioners (b). It was at first held that where money had been paid into Court under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96 (c), or under a Railway Act (d), no such suit or matter was pending as to obviate the necessity of previously obtaining the concurrence of the Charity Commissioners. But it has since been decided by the Court of Appeal, that in such cases the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioners is unnecessary. The object of the provision was merely to stop the enormous abuses in reference to proceedings in charity matters, and the words suit or matter actually pending mean pending at the time of the application, and not at the passing of the Act (e). It has, however, been

[(a) The words suit or other proceeding do not include an action at law, or for the enforcement of any right, not relating to the administration of the trusts of the charity. Thus, the sanction of the Charity Commissioners was held not to be requisite, where the Governors of an Endowed School commenced an action against the master to restrain him from presenting himself at the school, or continuing to occupy the schoolhouse, on the ground that he had never been properly appointed to the mastership, was unfit to fulfil its duties, and had been removed by a resolution of the Governors, Holme v. Guy, 5 Ch. Div. 901; or where the master of a school brought an action to restrain the managers from dismissing him, and ejecting him from the school-house, and the question was raised whether the managers had been properly appointed, Rendall v. Blair, 45 Ch. Div. 139 (per Bowen and Fry, L.JJ., Cotton, L.J., dissenting and agreeing with Kay, J., contra); or where a schoolmaster claimed an injunction to restrain two of the trustees or managers from removing him from his office until after the holding of a meeting of the three trustees, and until he should have had an opportunity of being heard at such meeting in reply to any charges made against him, Fisher v. Jackson, (1891) 2 Ch. 84. But they include a mandamus to compel the rendering of proper accounts; Attorney-General v. Dean and Canons of Manchester, 18 Ch. D. 596. And as to what cases fall within the section, see Brittain v. Overton, 25 Ch. D. 41, n.; Benthall v. Earl of Kilmorey, 25 Ch. Div. 39.]

[(b) S. 17. But this provision does not apply to the Charities exempted from the Act by sect. 62; or to Places of Religious Worship falling under sect. 9 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 81, Glen v. Gregg, 21 Ch. Div. 513; and see Attorney-General v. Sidney Sussex College, 15 W. R. 162, 21 Ch. Div. 514, note. The authority of the Commissioners must be given formally in the manner directed by the Act, and a letter signed by the secretary of the board stating that "they were prepared to issue their certificate authorizing the proceedings;" that "any difficulty in the application to the Court would probably be obviated by the production of the letter," and that "the certificate would be prepared and issued in due course," was held by Fry, J., in a pressing case of an application for an injunction to be insufficient; Thomas v. Harford, 48 L. held since the decision of the Court of Appeal, that a petition for the appointment of new trustees under a scheme previously settled by the Court requires the sanction of the Commissioners (a).

The Act contains other provisions (b) of a preventative rather than a remedial kind.

Board authorized to give advice.

By the 16th section, for instance, the Board has power to entertain applications for their opinion or advice, and persons acting in accordance therewith are indemnified.

Provisions for vesting land, stock, &c.

By the 48th section, lands belonging to any charity may be vested in the secretary of the Board as a corporation sole by the name of the Treasurer of Public Charities; and by the 51st section, annuities, stocks, shares, or securities held for any charity may be vested in the Official Trustees of charitable funds; and by the 54th and following sections, the Board have power, when the ordinary jurisdiction is insufficient for the purpose, to approve provisionally of new schemes of charities, varying from the original endowment, but which are to be submitted annually to Parliament for its ratification.

Charitable Trusts Amendment Act.

8. By the Amendment Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 124, by the 15th section, the name of the Treasurer of Public Charities is abolished, and the secretary of the Board for the time being is styled the Official Trustee of charity lands, [who is empowered to take and hold all such interest in land as in pursuance of an order of the Board is conveyed to or vested in him by any deed or assurance or otherwise (c), and by the 18th section, and 50 & 51 Vict. c. 49, s. 4, Official Trustees of charitable funds are appointed, who are to have perpetual succession, and are to consist of such officers of the Board as the Board with the consent of the Treasury from time to time appoint.]

Charitable Trusts Act, 1860.

9. By "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860" (23 & 24 Vict. c. 136), the Charity Commissioners are enabled by s. 2 to make such orders as may be made "by any Judge of the Court of Chancery sitting at Chambers (d), or by any County Court or District Court of Bankruptcy (e), for the appointment or removal of any schoolmaster or schoolmistress or other officer thereof, or for or relating to the assurance, transfer, or payment of any real or personal estate" belonging to the charity, or for the establishment of any scheme. But, by sect. 4, no such order is to be made where the charity income exceeds 50*l.*, except on the application of the majority of the trustees; and no trustee is to be removed on the ground only of religious belief; and by sect. 5, the Commissioners are not to make orders in any case, which by reason of its contentious character or otherwise may be considered by them more fit to be heard by the judicial Courts (a).

II. Of the extent of redress.

What account will be directed of mesne rents and profits.

Under this head we propose to enquire only within what period of time the account of mesne rents and profits directed against trustees of charities guilty of a breach of trust will be restricted.

The account not affected by Statutes of Limitation.

1. It is clear that in informations against trustees of charities the old Statutes of Limitation opposed no bar to the account, because charities were held exempt from the purview of the Statutes, and the claim was by cestui que trust against an express trustee (b); and although it was at one time considered that the Statute might afford a good rule how far back to carry the account (c), this doctrine was afterwards overruled (d). And now, 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, though applicable to charities (e), does not limit the liability of express trustees to account (f); so that charity trustees must, [except so far as they may be protected by the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1888, already referred to (g),] as express trustees, account upon the same footing as before the Act.

Bar to the account from inconvenience of relief.

2. But the Court may set a limit to the account on the ground of inconvenience. "It is the constant practice of Courts of equity," said Sir Thomas Plumer, "to discourage stale demands; and this principle has often been acted upon in cases of charities. When there has been a long period, during which a party has, under an innocent mistake, misapplied a trust fund from the laches and neglect of others, that is, from no one of the public setting him right, and when the accounts have, in consequence, become entangled, the Court, under its general discretion, considering the enormous expense of the enquiries, and the great hardship of calling upon representatives to refund what families, acting on the notion of its being their property, have spent, has been in the habit, while giving relief, of fixing a period to the account" (a).

Period to which account is carried back varies according to circumstances.

3. The period to which the account has been carried back has varied according to the circumstances presented to the consideration of the Court. Where no inconvenience can be objected, the Court will as a general rule carry back the account to the time of commencement of the misapplication.

Attorney-General v. Mayor of Exeter.

4. Thus in Attorney-General v. The Mayor of Exeter (b), where the defendants admitted possession of the charity estate for the last 200 years, and stated that they had always been ready and willing to account for the rents, Sir W. Grant ordered the defendants to account for the whole period, and this decision was affirmed by Sir T. Plumer on a rehearing, and by Lord Eldon on appeal.

Attorney-General v. Corporation of Stafford.

5. In Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Stafford (c), the trustees in their answer, filed in 1811, had furnished accounts of the trust estate from the year 1791, and Lord Gifford saw no inconvenience in decreeing the account as far back as the trustees themselves had stated it, but refused to extend it farther.

Attorney-General v. The Brewers' Company, &c.

6. In Attorney-General v. The Brewers' Company (d), Sir W. Grant directed the trustees to account from the date of a certain Act of Parliament, a period of about thirty years. In a more recent suit against a corporation the account was carried back to the last appointment of new trustees of the corporation, a period short of ten years. And in another contemporaneous suit against the same corporation, but where the legal estate was not in trustees, but in the corporation itself, the Court by analogy, and for want of another fixed point, ordered the account to commence at the date of the last appointment of new trustees in the first suit (e).

Various other periods adopted.

7. In other cases the account has been carried back to the period when the corporation was first informed of the misapplication

(b) Jac. 443; 2 Russ. 362.

(as by the publication of the Charity Commissioners' Report): in others it has been directed from the time of filing the information, and in others from the date of the decree (a).

Compromise with Attorney-General.

8. Occasionally, where the defendant has been in strictness accountable for a very long period, but the right, if enforced would impose great hardship, it has been referred to the Attorney-General, as representing the charity, to certify whether under the circumstances it might not be proper for the charity to accept a less sum (b).

Trustees acting from mistake.

9. Where the trustees have diverted the charity funds from their proper channel through mistake, it is now settled, that the Court will not call back any disbursements made before the commencement of the proceedings (c), or before the trustees had notice that the propriety of such application would be called into question (d). The Court holds a strict hand over trustees where there is any wilful misemployment; but where the Court sees nothing but mistake, while it gives directions for the better management in future, it refuses to visit with punishment what has been transacted in time past. To carry back the account to the very commencement of the misapplication would be the ruin of half the corporations in the kingdom (e); besides, to act on such a principle would be a great discouragement to undertake the office of trustees of charities (f).

Distinction between corporations and individuals.

10. If an individual make an annual payment for a particular purpose out of the profits of his estate, it is a reasonable presumption, from the strong interest which he has to resist an unfounded demand, that he has enquired into the origin of the claim, and he is therefore fixed with implied notice of all the circumstances that attend it; but the same presumption cannot be applied to corporations, because, having no immediate personal interest in the application of the profits of the corporate property, they may, without the imputation of culpable negligence, adopt and follow the practice of their predecessors (a).

Breach of trust by a parish.

11. Where the charity fund has been administered by a parish and misapplied, there, as a parish is a fluctuating body, and the present ratepayers ought not to pay for past defaults, no retrospective account can be ordered (b).

Mode of attaching the corporation property.

12. In the East Retford case (c), before Sir J. Leach, the Court, on proof of a breach of trust by the corporation, directed an enquiry by the Master of what property the corporation was possessed not devoted to special purposes, with the view that compensation might be made to the charity by an immediate sale; but the case upon that point was subsequently appealed against and reversed, as contrary to principle (d), and the plaintiff must now confine himself to a sequestration against the corporation in the ordinary course.

CHAPTER XXXI.

MAXIMS OF EQUITY FOR SUSTAINING THE TRUE CHARACTER OF THE TRUST ESTATE AGAINST THE LACHES OR TORT OF THE TRUSTEE.

BESIDES the several rights and remedies which have just been the subject of discussion, the Court, with the view of keeping the trust estate in its regular channel, and sustaining its proper character, whether of realty or personalty, against the laches or other misbehaviour of the trustee, has found it necessary to establish two maxims which we now proceed to examine: viz., First, What ought to be done should be considered as done (a); and, Secondly, The act of the trustee shall not alter the nature of the cestui que trust's estate (b).

SECTION I.

WHAT OUGHT TO BE DONE SHALL BE CONSIDERED AS DONE.

General principle.

1. "THE forbearance of the trustees," said Sir J. Jekyll, "in not doing what it was their office to have done, shall in no sort prejudice the cestuis que trust, since at that rate it would be in the power of trustees, either by doing or delaying to do their Jekyll; Fitzgerald v. Jervoise, 5 Mad. 29, per Sir J. Leach; Earl of Buckingham v. Drury, 2 Eden, 65, per Lord Hardwicke; Guidot v. Guidot, 3 Atk. 256, per Lord Hardwicke; Crabtree v. Bramble, Ib. 687, per eundem; Trafford v. Boehm, Ib. 446, per eundem; Astley v. Earl of Essex, 6 L. duty, to affect the right of other persons; which can never be maintained. Wherefore the rule in such cases is, that 'What ought to have been done shall be taken as done,' and a rule so powerful it is as to alter the very nature of things, to make money land, and, on the contrary, to turn land into money" (a). And Lord Macclesfield, in the case of a bequest to a trustee for purchasing lands, observed, "If the purchase had been made it must have gone to the heir, but if the trustee, by delaying the purchase, might alter the right, and give it to the executors, this would be to make it the will of the trustee, and not the will of the testator, which would be very unreasonable and inconvenient" (b).

Money to be laid out on land to be regarded as land.

2. Upon these grounds it is in equity a universal rule, that money directed to be laid out in the purchase of land, or land directed to be sold and turned into money, shall be considered as that species of property into which it is directed to be converted; and this, in whatever manner the direction is given, whether by will, by way of contract, by marriage articles, by settlement, or otherwise, and whether the money has been actually deposited in the hands of trustees for the purpose, or is only covenanted to be paid, and whether the land has been actually conveyed, or is only agreed to be conveyed (c).

Subject to curtesy.

3. Thus, if money be stipulated to be laid out in land to be settled on a feme covert in fee or in tail, the husband of the feme is entitled to his curtesy, though no purchase be actually made in the lifetime of the wife; and he will be decreed the interest of the money until a purchase can be found; and when the investment has been made, he will have a life estate in the lands (d).

Whether subject to dower.

4. Whether under similar circumstances a widow could, before the late Dower Act, have established her title to dower, was much questioned. It was admitted she was not dowable of a mere trust estate (e); but, where money was to be converted into land, and the interest was only prevented from being legal through the forbearance of the trustee, it was contended that the rights of parties ought not to be varied by the neglect of the person who was merely the instrument for carrying out the settlor's wishes.

Lord Hardwicke's opinion.

The opinion of Lord Hardwicke was on more than one occasion expressed adversely to the wife's claim (a); but there are several authorities in favour of the right to dower (b).

Dower Act.

By the Dower Act (except where the marriage was celebrated on or before the 1st day of January, 1834), the Legislature has given dower out of every species of trust estate in possession; subject to be defeated, however, by any declaration of intention on the part of the husband (c).

[Letters of administration.]

[5. Money which has arisen from settled land sold under the Settled Estates Acts, and liable to be reinvested in land under those Acts, is not a proper subject for letters of administration, so as to give jurisdiction to the Court to grant such letters (d)].

Money to be laid out in land is not subject to escheat.

6. If money be articled, or directed, to be laid out in land to be settled on a person in fee, and the cestui que trust dies without heirs, there can, as a general rule, be no claim for an escheat by any one, since until the land is actually purchased it is uncertain who will fill the character of lord (e). Cases might no doubt occur free from this element of uncertainty, as where the trust is to lay out money in the purchase of lands in the parish of A., all the lands in which are held under the same lord; but even in such a case the lord would fail to establish his claim, for a lord by escheat comes under no head of equity—is entirely a stranger to the trust, claiming by title paramount of his own (f). The pretence for his claim would be, that the operation of the rule so absolutely converts the equitable into a legal estate, that all the incidents, that would have belonged to the legal, must be considered in equity as attaching to the equitable estate; but the rule was meant not to benefit third persons, but to protect the interests of parties to the trust.

How affected by the cestui que trust's will.

7. As money to be laid out in land is regarded as land, it could not, even before the Wills Act, have been devised by an infant, though of sufficient age to bequeath personal estate (g); and, for the same reason, it will pass by the cestui que trust's will under the general description of all the testator's lands (a), or of all his lands in the county of —— or elsewhere (b), though in the latter case it was very plausibly contended, that the testator could not have referred to money, but must have alluded to something that possessed a local character. [But where the money is subject to a general power of appointment by will, and there is no intermediate interest in any person who after the death of the donee of the power would have a right to call for its investment in land, and the donee has shown an intention in his lifetime to make the money personal estate so far as he can, it will pass under a general bequest by the donee of all his personal estate (c).]

Is subject to judgments.

8. So money to be converted into land was bound by a judgment (d), and was never accounted personal assets, and therefore was not until the Act of William IV. (e), liable to the payment of simple contract debts (f).

Orphanage share.

9. So a gift by a parent (a freeman of the city of London) to a child, of money to be laid out in land was considered a purchase by the father and a donation of the estate, and consequently, under the law existing before the Act 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94, the child was not bound, before receiving his orphanage share, to bring the purchase into hotchpot (g).

In what cases money to be laid out on land goes to the heir.

10. With respect to the heir of the person upon whom the lands, when purchased, are directed or agreed to be settled, it is necessary, for ascertaining his rights, to distinguish between the cases where the real representative claims as against a stranger, and where he claims as against the executor of his own ancestor.

It appears to be perfectly established that the heir is entitled to the money as land, if he seek to enforce his equity against a stranger. Thus, 1. If a sum of money be bequeathed to be laid out in a purchase of lands to be settled to the use of A. and his heirs, and A. dies before a purchase has been obtained, the money is the property, not of the executor, but of the heir of A. (a). 2. If on the marriage of A. money be actually deposited in the hands of trustees, either by A. himself or by a stranger, to be laid out in a purchase of lands to be settled to the use of A. for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the issue in tail, remainder to A. in fee, and A. dies without issue, his heir, and not his executor is entitled (b). 3. If on the marriage of A. there be a covenant on the part of B. to lay out money in a purchase of lands to the above uses, and A. dies without issue, his heir takes the benefit of the covenant (c).

Case of the heir claiming against the executor of his own ancestor.

11. But if the heir have to enforce his claim, not against a stranger, but against the personal representative of his own ancestor, as if A. on his marriage covenant to lay out money in a purchase of lands to be settled to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the issue in tail, remainder to his own right heirs, in this instance the question whether the heir can call upon the executor for the money must depend upon this further distinction :—

The heir has a right, if any person has an equitable interest.

a. If at the death of A. there be an equitable interest in the fund outstanding in another, as a life estate in the wife, [or a right in a jointress to have a rent-charge (d),] or an estate tail in the issue, then the real quality of the money is sustained and continued by that right, and the heir of A. is entitled to call upon A.'s executor to pay the money (e); and if there be such an outstanding claim at the death of the ancestor, the circum-

Ch. 543. Abbot v. Lee, 2 Vern. 284, at first sight appears contra, but it seems from the Registrar's book that the direction for conversion was not imperative, but to be at the discretion of the testator's executors. Had the money been absolutely converted into land, the ultimate remainder would, by failure of issue of the surviving daughter, have resulted as personal estate of the testator (see p. 160, ante); but being money absolutely bequeathed, subject to a discretion to lay out on land which was not exercised, it belonged to the administrator of the legatee, as was decreed. The case is stated from Reg. Lib. in Appendix No. II. to 3rd edition of this Treatise.

stance that the heir institutes his suit during the subsistence of that claim, or after its determination, seems to be immaterial (a).

Walker v. Denne.

In Walker v. Denne (b), Lord Loughborough expressed some doubt upon this doctrine. "Between the heir and personal representative," he said, "their rights are pure legal rights: chance decides what shall be real, what personal; neither has a scintilla of equity to make the property that which it is not in fact." To this reasoning of Lord Loughborough it may be replied, that, when it is said there is no equity between the real and personal representatives, the meaning is no more than this—that what is real estate at the death of the ancestor will go to the heir, and what is personal estate at the death of the testator will go to the executor; but, for the purpose of determining what is real and what is personal estate, the Court is guided, not by the legal nature of the property at the death of the owner, but, as appears in numerous instances, by the stamp and character impressed upon it in consideration of a Court of equity. Thus if a mortgagee in fee died, the mortgage being regarded as a mere security for part of the mortgagee's personal estate, the executor might call upon the heir for a conveyance of the land (c). So, if the mortgagor die, the heir of the mortgagor might until Locke King's Act have called on the executor to discharge the incumbrance out of the personal assets. So if a person contracted for the sale of an estate (d), and died before the completion of the sale, the legal fee descended upon the heir (e), but the purchase-money passes to the executor; and on the other hand, if a person contract for the purchase of an estate, and die, the executor must [until the recent Act, have paid] the money, but the heir was entitled to the purchase (f). Thus, in the words of Lord Talbot,

[(f) But since the recent Act the estate in the hands of the heir (or, if leasehold, the legatee) will be subject to the repayment to the executor of the purchase-money paid by him; 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34; Re Cockcroft, 24 Ch. D. 94; Re Kershaw, 37 Ch. D. 674.]

"Where the dispute is between the two representatives of the deceased, the one of his real, the other of his personal estate, the heir's being but a volunteer in regard to his ancestor will not exclude him from the aid of the Court, for though the question is between two volunteers, the Court will determine which way the right is, and will decree accordingly" (a). "I am disposed," said Lord Eldon, "to say, notwithstanding the opinion of Lord Rosslyn in Walker v. Denne, and some other modern authorities, that if the instrument be taken to impress a fund with real qualities immediately upon the execution, in the question between the heir and executor, the money being once clearly and plainly impressed with real uses as land, and one of those uses being for the benefit of the heir, it will remain for his benefit, and it is not correct to say the Court does not interpose between volunteers, if they give to the executor that money which the instrument has given to the heir" (b). And Sir W. Grant to the same effect observed, "There is no weight in the circumstance that the property is found in the shape of money or land, for the character is to be found in the deed. The opinion of Lord Rosslyn that property was to be taken as it happened to be at the death of the party from whom the representatives claimed, was much doubted by Lord Eldon, who held, in which I perfectly concur, that it must be considered as being in the state in which it ought to be. Lord Rosslyn's rule was new, and not according to prior cases" (c).

Heir has no right where the money is "at home."

β. But if A. die, leaving neither wife nor issue, so that, to use the technical expression, the money is "at home," that is A. at the time of his death is the absolute and exclusive owner, and there is no outstanding right in another person, in this case the real quality of the money has become merged and extinguished, and on the death of A. the heir has no equity to call upon the executor. To keep on foot the notional conversion of money into land, it is evident there must be a right in some one to insist upon the actual conversion; but if A. be in possession of 20,000*l.* upon trust to lay out in a purchase of lands to be settled to the use of himself and his heirs, the right and the thing both centering in the same person, there is nobody to sue, and it follows that the action is extinguished (d).

Chichester v. Bickerstaff.

The decision in the much litigated case of Chichester v. Bickerstaff (a), amounted probably to no more than this (b).

Actual receipt of the money makes it "at home."

12. Of course the money will be "at home" where the person absolutely entitled to the fund receives it from the trustee the depositary of it, and that, whether the payment was made with the sanction of the Court, or by the voluntary act of the trustee himself (c).

Voluntary covenant to lay out money on land.

13. Lord Macclesfield advanced the position, that if a person voluntarily and without consideration covenanted to lay out money in a purchase of land to be settled on himself and his heirs, the Court would compel the execution of such a contract, though merely voluntary; for in all cases where it was a measuring cast between an executor and an heir, the latter should in equity have the preference (d). But the proposition that the heir is more favoured than the executor, though often repeated (e), and arising perhaps from the leaning of the Court towards the heir in respect of lands of which the ancestor was seised, does not appear to be founded on any intelligible principle, and the opinion expressed by Lord Macclesfield may be questioned.

Conversion must be absolute or imperative, not optional.

14. In the preceding observations it is assumed that the direction or agreement for conversion is by the terms of the instrument made absolute and imperative; for where a mere option is given, the original character of the property continues until the discretion has been exercised, and the conversion actually effected; as, if the direction or agreement be to lay out money in "lands or securities" (f), in "freeholds or leaseholds" (g), or if by any other mode of expression an intention be manifested of not converting the property at all events (h).

[But the conversion may be imperative although the trustees have an option as to the time of sale.]

[But a direction to trustees to sell "so soon as they shall see necessary for the benefit of the cestuis que trust" (a), or "whenever it shall appear to their satisfaction that such sale will be for the benefit of the cestuis que trust" (b), amounts to an imperative direction to convert.]

Of conversion, apparently optional, but where the uses declared are exclusively applicable to real estate.

15. Where the uses declared are exclusively applicable to real estate, the direction or agreement will be construed to be imperative, though the direction or agreement be to lay out the money in "freeholds, leaseholds, or copyholds" (c), or the instrument contains an authority to invest the money upon securities until a purchase can be found (d), or the fund being already out upon security, a power is inserted to call it in, and lay it out upon other securities (e), or even though the direction or agreement be to lay out the money on lands or securities, the intention in the last case apparently being, that the money shall be invested upon security until a suitable purchase can be found, and that the interest and dividends in the meantime shall be paid to the person who would be entitled to the rents (f).

Conversion at "the request" or "with the consent" of a party.

16. And, where the uses are thus exclusively applicable to real estate, the direction or agreement will be regarded as imperative though the settlement require the purchase to be made at the request of a person (g), for the insertion of such a clause has been taken to mean, not that a conversion may not be effected before but that it shall certainly be effected after request (h). And the construction is the same, though the purchase be directed to be made with a person's consent and approbation (i); for upon a convenient purchase being proposed, the Court, said Sir J. Jekyll, will take upon itself to judge thereof, and, without some reasonable objection made, will order the money to be laid out in it, so that such a proviso seems to be immaterial, and as if omitted (j). But of course the instrument may be so strongly expressed as to show the intention of the parties, that the request or consent of a particular person should be a substantial ingredient, and that no conversion should take place unless it is given (a).

[In all these cases the real question is whether it appears from the whole tenor of the instrument that the intention was that the personalty should be converted into realty, and where such an intention appears a trust for conversion may be implied (b). But a mere gift of personalty with limitations appropriate to real estate, a great part of which limitations must necessarily fail as soon as the personalty vests in any one who, if it had been real estate, would have taken an estate tail, does not raise an implied trust for conversion into realty (c).]

Land to be converted into money is regarded as money.

17. As money to be converted into land is considered as land, so land to be converted into money is, upon the same principle, invested with all the properties of money (d). Thus, if an estate be directed or agreed to be sold, and the proceeds be made payable to A., the property, though unconverted at A.'s decease, will pass by a general bequest of all his personal estate (e); and upon A.'s death, will vest in his personal representatives (f), and will be liable to probate (g), and legacy duty (h). And the result will be the same though the conversion is by the terms of the instrument of trust not to take place until after A.'s death (i). [And a will made by a married woman in exercise of a power and appointing the property is entitled to probate, though the property was unconverted at her death (j).]

testator direct his real estate to be sold, and the proceeds laid out and invested in trust for A. for life with remainders over, the tenant for life is entitled to the rents only of the estate from the testator's decease (a); and so, if the sale be directed on the death of a particular person the tenant for life is entitled only to the rents from the death of that person (b). But a tenant for life without impeachment of waste of the estate to be purchased, though entitled to the rents and profits of the estate to be sold, may not, as part of such profits cut timber on the estate to be sold, for this would give him double waste (c).

Next of kin have no right where land is at home.

19. The doctrine already explained with reference to the exclusion of the claim of the heir where the money is at home must, it is conceived, equally apply as against next of kin and residuary legatees in cases where the land may be said to be at home. Thus, if A., being entitled to land, covenant on the occasion of his marriage to convey it to trustees, who are to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds upon trusts for the benefit of A. and his wife and the children of the marriage, with an ultimate trust for A. absolutely, here, if in A.'s lifetime and before any conveyance, the wife dies without children, both the land and the benefit of the ultimate trust are united in A., and the land is at home, and upon A.'s death, no claim can, it is conceived, be sustained by those entitled to his personal estate. But of course the case would be different, if land had been actually conveyed to the trustees upon trust for sale, since this would be analogous to a deposit in the hands of trustees, as above supposed, of money to be laid out in land (d); and consequently there would be a complete conversion, of which those entitled to the personal estate of A. would reap the benefit.

Alien may take proceeds of sale.

20. If the proceeds of sale of real estate be given to an alien, the doctrine of conversion applies in his favour. He was always capable of taking for his own benefit, and the Crown was excluded (e).

was held that] if a share of proceeds was given to a felon, and the time of sale had arrived, and the sale had been actually made before the felon had worked out his punishment, the Crown was entitled (a). But if the felon had worked out his punishment before the time of sale had arrived, there, as the Crown had no equity to compel the conversion, the discharged felon and not the Crown was entitled (b). Money paid into Court as representing land taken under the provisions of an Act of Parliament and liable to be laid out again in the purchase of land, retained, as against the Crown, its character of real estate, and was therefore not forfeitable on conviction for felony (c).

Proceeds cannot be bequeathed to a charity.

22. It was at one time held that if real estate was stamped with a trust for conversion, and a portion of the proceeds of sale was given to A., and A. died having by his will given his personal estate to charity, his interest in the proceeds of sale was to be regarded as pure personal estate, and the bequest was good (d); but this doctrine has since been overruled (e). And where a testator gave to A. a legacy of 3000*l.*, payable out of the testator's personal estate, and the proceeds from the sale of his real estate, and A. bequeathed the 3000*l.* to a charity, it was ruled that the whole bequest was void, and that the charity was not entitled to claim so much of the 3000*l.* as on an apportionment of the original testator's real and personal estate would be found payable out of the pure personalty (f); [but in a subsequent case, where a testator gave a share of his residuary personal estate to charity, and the residuary estate consisted of pure personalty, and of a legacy from another testator payable out of the proceeds of his real and personal estate, an apportionment was directed, and the bequest was held to fail only so far as it arose from the portion of the legacy attributable to the realty, or to the personalty savouring of realty, of the testator who bequeathed the legacy (g).

Now by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (a), land as defined in the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (b) is not to include money secured on land or other personal estate arising from or connected with land, and it is provided (c) that land may be assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use, and (d), that any personal estate by will directed to be laid out in the purchase of land to or for the benefit of any charitable uses shall be held to or for the benefit of the charitable uses as though there had been no such direction to lay it out in the purchase of land; but (e), the Act is only to apply to the will of a testator dying after the passing of the Act, viz. the 5th of August, 1891. As regards such wills, therefore, the restrictions imposed by the repealed statutes of Mortmain, and continued by the Act of 1888, in reference to testamentary gifts of land and impure personalty to charities will cease to operate.]

Locke King's Act.

23. A share of the proceeds to arise from a sale under a trust for conversion is not an interest in land within Locke King's Act, and therefore though such share be subject to a mortgage of it made by the testator, a legatee of the share can call for a discharge of the mortgage out of the general personal estate (f).

The conversion must be imperative.

24. If real and personal estate be given to trustees upon trust for a class, with a discretionary and not an imperative power to convert the whole into personal estate, and if the trustees make a total or partial conversion, the objects of the trust will take the property as real or personal estate, according to the actual condition in which it is found (g). [But if the power be discretionary, and an order is made in an administration action directing a sale absolutely, the property is converted as from the date of the order (h).

does not amount to a conversion of the real estate into personalty, but the property will, notwithstanding the direction, devolve as realty (a).]

Case of a sale by mortgagee.

25. So if a mortgage deed contain a power of sale with a direction that the surplus proceeds shall be paid to the mortgagor, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and the property is sold by the mortgagee, the surplus will be personal or real estate of the mortgagor, according as the sale takes place before or after his death (b). But where an option to purchase has been given to a lessee, and the option is exercised after the lessor's death, such exercise has been held to effect a retrospective conversion (c). The difference is, that in the case of a mortgage the mortgagor or his heir can redeem at any time, and therefore the real character of the property continues until the time of actual sale, when the proceeds become the personal estate of the person then entitled to the equity of redemption; but in the option given to a lessee, the lessor has parted with all control over the property and placed it in the power of another to change the nature of it, and if the power be exercised the conversion operates retrospectively and it becomes personal estate as between all who claim under the lessor. [But where the lessee dies without having exercised the option, the beneficial interest in the lease with the benefit of the option goes as part of his personal estate, and no subsequent exercise of the option will work a retrospective conversion as between the persons entitled to his realty and personalty respectively (d).]

[This retrospective conversion is, however, implied only as between the real and personal representatives of the person giving the option, and does not apply as between the vendor and the purchaser, e.g., so as to enable a tenant, after the premises have been burnt down, to exercise an option to purchase, and claim the insurance money as part of his purchase; Edwards v. West, 7 Ch. to be considered as in the nature of a mortgage, but as a conveyance to become absolute, in equity as well as at law, immediately after default in payment, here, though the sale is not made in the debtor's lifetime, yet the property is converted into personalty, and belongs, subject to the charge, to the debtor's personal representative (a).

[If a number of persons be associated together for the purposes of an undertaking, and they agree among themselves that land shall be bought and vested in trustees upon trusts which shall give the members no equitable interest in the lands, but only an interest in profits to be made by the use of them, the members will have no equitable interest in the land so purchased, but only an interest of the nature of personalty in the profits of the undertaking, and will not thereby acquire the right to the county franchise (b).]

Neither heir nor next of kin can claim under the will of an ancestor by virtue of the doctrine of conversion.

27. In the above discussion of the doctrine of conversion, it may be taken to be generally immaterial whether the instrument which directs the money to be laid out in land or the land to be converted into money, is a deed, or writing, or will. But it may be useful to point out, in reference to claims by an heir at law or by next of kin, that where the instrument effecting the conversion is a will, neither the testator's heir at law as such, nor his next of kin as claiming under the intestacy, can establish any right by virtue of the doctrine of conversion (c). The conversion directed is a conversion for the purposes of the will only, and so far as the trusts declared by the will respecting the property directed to be converted may fail, the property devolves, according to its original character of realty or personalty, in conformity with the principles established by the decisions respecting resulting trusts (d).

But heir or next of kin may claim as persona designata.

28. But of course either the heir at law or next of kin may claim as persona designata. Thus, where a testator bequeathed a sum of money to be laid out on lands to be settled to certain uses, with the ultimate remainder to his own right heirs, and the prior limitations failed, the heir, on a bill filed against the executor of his ancestor, was held entitled to the money (e); but Election.

In connection with the subject of conversion, it is to be observed that where land is to be converted into money, or money is to be converted into land, the notional conversion will subsist only until some cestui que trust, who is competent to elect, intimates his intention to take the property in its original character (a). The Court will not compel a conversion against the will of the absolute owner; for should the conversion be made, he would immediately reconvert it, and equity will do nothing in vain (b).

Upon this subject we shall consider:—I. What persons are capable of electing; and, II. How the act of the election may be manifested.

Who may elect.

I. Who may elect.

Infants, lunatics.

1. In respect of personal incapacity, an infant (c), or lunatic (d), has no power to make election.

Power of feme covert over money-land.

2. A feme covert, although [as regards property not settled to her separate use, or belonging to her as separate property by statute], she has no power to elect by act in pais (e) like a person who is sui juris, yet may, by exercise of the powers of disposition given her by law over money to be laid out in land, or land directed to be turned into money, alter the nature of the property, and so effect an election.

How feme covert might elect to take money-land under the old law.

3. "Although," said Lord Hardwicke, "a feme covert cannot alter the nature of money to be laid out in land by contract or deed, yet if the money be invested in land (and sometimes sham purchases have been made for the purpose (f)), she may then levy a fine on the land, and give it to her husband, or anybody else. There is a way, also, of doing this without laying the money out in land, and that is, by coming into a Court of equity, and consenting to take the money as personal estate; for upon her being present in Court, and being examined (as a feme covert upon fine is), her consent binds the money articled to be laid out in land as much as a fine at law would the land, and she may dispose of it to the husband or anybody else. And the reason of it is, that at law, money so articled to be laid out in land is considered barely as money until an actual investment, and the equity of this Court alone views it in the light of real estate; and, therefore, this Court can act upon its own creature, and do what a fine at common law can upon land" (a). And, at a later date, Lord Hardwicke's views were ratified by express decision; for where money was devised to be laid out in land, for a feme covert in tail with reversion to her in fee, and a bill was filed by her, it was declared that she was entitled to the money, and a commission was ordered to be issued to examine her separate and apart from her husband, touching the disposition thereof (b). [So in a recent case, money in Court which had arisen from a sale under the Partition Acts, and to shares in which married women were entitled, was, upon their being separately examined and consenting, distributed as personal estate (c); and where the share of the married woman is less than 200*l.* the Court will dispense with her separate examination (d). But an election by a feme covert to confirm a marriage settlement cannot be inferred from the mere fact of her concurring in an appointment of new trustees thereof under the usual power (e).]

How she might elect to take land directed to be sold.

4. Previously to the Fines and Recoveries Act, if a feme covert was entitled to the proceeds of land directed to be sold, she and her husband might have made a title to the proceeds of sale by fine (f); and by the same method, as it would seem, might have made themselves absolute owners, and have called for a conveyance, and by this means have elected to take the land.

Fines and Recoveries Act.

5. By 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 74, ss. 40, 71, 77 (g), a married woman is enabled, with the concurrence of her husband, and with the formalities required by the Act, to dispose of any estate at law or in equity, or any interest, charge, lien, or incumbrance in or upon lands, or money to be laid out in a purchase of lands, or to relinquish or release any power over the same, as if she were a feme sole; so that in the case of money liable to be laid out in land, a feme covert can, through the medium of the power of disposition conferred by the Act, virtually elect to take the money.

Special power of married women under Fines and Recoveries Act, over money which is an interest in land.

6. And the Act enables a married woman not only to dispose of property which, though personal estate in fact, is real estate in equity, but also of property which is in equity personal estate, provided only it be an interest in land; and this, although according to the ordinary doctrines of the Court the married woman would, by reason of her interest being reversionary, have no such power of disposition. Thus, where real estate is devised upon trust for sale in terms amounting to a conversion out and out, and a married woman takes a share of the proceeds, she can, under the statute, dispose of her share, even though reversionary, as being an interest in land (a). And it is conceived that the same principle must apply to the case of a reversionary money legacy raisable out of land, notwithstanding the doubts entertained by Lord Justice (then Vice-Chancellor) Knight Bruce, in the case of Hobby v. Collins (b). But the Fines and Recoveries Act ceases to apply when the money has been actually raised (c).

[Power of married woman to elect as to separate property.]

[As a married woman has an absolute power of disposition over property settled to her separate use, or belonging to her as her separate property under the recent Act (d), she can elect to take it either as land or money as if she were sui juris (e).]

A person may elect, subject to a charge.

7. If A. convey an estate to a trustee in trust to sell and pay to the trustee a certain amount, and to pay the balance to A., his executors, administrators, and assigns as personalty, it is competent to A., as the person entitled subject to the charge, to elect to take it as realty; and if he do so, and the trustee sells after A.'s decease, the heir of A. will take the surplus (f).

Remaindermen.

8. How far a remainderman may elect, has not been definitely settled. It seems clear, so far, that the remainderman may elect for the purposes of disposition; that is, being absolutely entitled to the interest in remainder, he may deal with it by act inter vivos, or by will, by any denomination that he pleases; and if, therefore, in the case of money impressed with the character of land, he chooses to call it personal estate, it will pass by his will under the description of personal estate (a). But should the remainderman declare an intention of taking the money as personalty, and then die, in the lifetime of the tenant for life, intestate, will the money devolve, as between the real and personal representative, as realty or personalty? If the tenant for life call for a conversion, and the money is actually laid out on a purchase of land, it is of course too late then for the remainderman to elect to take it as money; for, as the property is now in the shape of land, the policy of the law will not allow him to impress upon it the character of personalty. Supposing the remainderman to elect to take the property as money, before the actual conversion, and then to die intestate, and after his death the tenant for life calls for a conversion, and the money is laid out in a purchase of land accordingly, it is conceived, that, as the election was made subject to another's right to call for a conversion, which right was exercised, the act of election is defeated, and the property will devolve as land (b). Should the remainderman elect to take the money as such, and then die intestate, and the tenant for life never calls for a conversion, it may be argued, that, as the remainderman is absolutely entitled, subject to another's right to require conversion which was never exercised, the money, being still found in that shape, should be discharged from the impress of realty, and be deemed to have that character in which the remainderman was desirous of taking it (c). Such a doctrine, however, is open to the objection that during the life of the tenant for life the nature of the remainderman's interest, whether real or personal, would be uncertain, and dependent on the option of the tenant for life; and the principle acted upon in a recent case appears to be, that there can be no election by a person whose interest is a limited one or contingent at the time (d).

[A person contingently entitled may elect.]

[9. But in a more recent case, where real estate was devised to trustees upon trusts for sale, and the proceeds were, subject to a charge, given in a contingent event to the testator's son absolutely, it was held that the son, pending the contingency, was competent to make an election, which would be operative in the event of the contingency happening before or upon his death, to take the estate as realty (a).]

Election where an estate is to be sold or money is to be laid out on land, and several parties are interested.

10. Where an estate is directed to be sold, the proceeds to be divided amongst several persons, no one singly can elect that his own undivided share shall not be disposed of but shall remain realty (b), for the other undivided shares will not sell so beneficially in proportion as if the estate were entire (c); but if money be directed to be laid out in lands to be settled on A. B. and C., as tenants in common, any one of them may elect to take his own third as money, for two-thirds may be invested just as advantageously as the whole sum (d).

Tenant in tail may elect.

11. Sound principle would require that a tenant in tail of lands to be purchased should not be allowed to elect, because the interests of the issue and the remainderman, who both take by title paramount, would otherwise be prejudiced. But the old rule appears to have been, that a tenant in tail might in every case have elected, and on filing a bill would have been entitled to the money (e); and the principle upon which the practice was grounded was said to be, that equity will do nothing in vain, and it were useless to direct an actual purchase and settlement when the tenant in tail the next moment might dispose of the fee simple. Lord Cowper, however, in the case of Colwal v. Shadwell (f), took the distinction, that where the remainder in fee was not vested in the tenant in tail himself, but was limited over to a stranger, there, as the absolute fee could only be acquired by a recovery, which was a thing of time, and could not be suffered in vacation, the remainderman should not lose his chance; and as in that case the tenant in tail did actually die before the recovery was suffered, it showed the remainderman's interest in so glaring a light, that it established the precedent ever afterwards (a). But even then the money would have been decreed to the tenant in tail, provided the remainderman had waived his right and consented to the payment (b).

Lord Chancellor King's doubt.

12. In Eyre's case (c), Lord Chancellor King was for extending the same protection to the issue. "I cannot see," he said, "why I should not have the like regard to the issue in tail as for the remainderman. It is possible the tenant in tail, before he can light on a purchase and settle it, may die, leaving issue, and this is a chance of which I would not deprive such issue." And in Speaker Onslow's case (d), he declared his adherence to the same opinion. But the rule which had been established before his time (e) of paying the fund to the tenant in tail where the uses might be barred by fine, but not where they could only be barred by recovery, appears, notwithstanding his Lordship's authority, to have been revived by his successors (f).

Tenant in tail may elect without suit.

13. And the election of the tenant in tail need not necessarily have been made in a suit, but might have been expressed by act in pais, as if tenant in tail with remainder to himself had received the money of the trustee, or if tenant in tail with remainder to a stranger had received it of the trustee with the consent of the remainderman (g).

Observation of Lord Thurlow.

Lord Thurlow, indeed, once said, "If the fund be outstanding in trustees, and it is necessary to come hither in order to obtain it, the money, when obtained, will be personal property; and so it would also, if the trustees pay it without suit. That is, supposing the estate, when purchased, would be a fee simple, for it would be otherwise in case of its being an estate tail" (h). But the concluding remark must have been intended (as Mr. Serjeant Hill, in a note on the passage, has justly observed (i)) to apply, not to every tenant in tail, as, not to tenant in tail with remainder to himself in fee, but only to tenant in tail, with remainder to a stranger; for in a subsequent case, where the tenant in tail had executed an assignment of two sums of money directed to be laid out in lands, his Lordship said, "As to the 500*l.*, the assignor was tenant in tail, remainder to a stranger, remainder to himself in fee; as to the 1000*l.* he was tenant in tail, with remainder in fee to himself. I am clear, that in regard to the 1000*l.* he had the absolute dominion over it, having the immediate remainder in fee; but as to the 500*l.* I am equally clear the other way, because of the intermediate remainder" (a).

39 & 40 G. 3. c. 56.

14. By 39 & 40 G. 3. c. 56 (b), the inability of the tenant in tail with remainders over of money to be laid out in the purchase of land to obtain possession of the money, except through the medium of a fictitious purchase (c), was removed; and the Court was empowered, on the petition of the first tenant in tail of such money-land, and of the parties (if any) having antecedent estates therein (with a provision for the separate examination of married women), to order the money to be paid to the petitioners or as they should appoint (d); so that a kind of statutory power of election was thus conferred on tenants in tail.

Fines and Recoveries Act.

15. By the Act for the abolition of Fines and Recoveries (e), a tenant in tail may, with the consent of the protector of the settlement, if any, dispose absolutely of the lands entailed at any time, whether in term or vacation, and by the 71st section of the statute it is enacted, that "money to be invested in the purchase of lands to be settled so that any person, if the lands were purchased, would have an estate tail therein, shall be treated as the lands to be purchased, and the previous clauses of the Act shall apply to such money, as if it were directed to be laid out in the purchase of freehold lands, and such lands were actually purchased and settled."

Whether tenant in tail of money liable to be laid out in land may still elect to take the money.

16. With respect to this enactment, a doubt suggests itself whether, even at the present day, a tenant in tail, with remainder to himself in fee, may not elect to take in its original character money which is liable to be laid out in the purchase of lands, and declare such election either by the institution of a suit or by act in pais. It is true that under the 71st clause of the Act, the tenant in tail may at any time defeat his issue and the remaindermen by a deed executed with the proper formalities; but what is there to prevent him from exercising a power founded upon principles independent of the statute, and so acquiring the fee simple by the mere act of election? It may be said that the old rule, which made election a bar to the issue, might have been grounded on this—that, because no fine or recovery could have been levied or suffered of money (a), the Court, on that account, held election to have the effect of a bar, lest the tenant in tail should lose the power, which the law intended him, of defeating the settlement, but that, since by the Fines and Recoveries Act a tenant in tail of money may bar his issue and the remainderman by the same formalities as if the lands were actually purchased and settled, the same indulgence ought not now to be shown. But to this it may be answered, that the tenant in tail was allowed to elect, not because the tenant in tail of money had a right to exercise the same powers of ownership as a tenant in tail of lands, but for the purpose of avoiding circuity. Had the former been the principle, the tenant in tail might equally have barred the remainderman as the issue; but for the destruction of remainders an actual settlement was necessary, and a sham purchase was often resorted to for the purpose (b).

Practice of the Court as to monies paid in by railway companies.

17. The practice of the Court in dealing with sums paid in by railway companies as compensation for portions of entailed land taken by them, went beyond any rule previously established, for the Court was in the habit of ordering the money to be paid to the tenant in tail without the execution of a disentailing deed, and without inquiring who was entitled in remainder (c). But in a recent case Lord Selborne, sitting for M. R., refused to order payment out of Court except on production of a disentailing deed in the ordinary way (d).

II. How election may be manifested.

How election may be made.

1. The act of election may either be presumed by the Court or be expressly declared.

Presumption.

2. The presumption may arise from slight circumstances of conduct (a). Thus it will be sufficient, where land is to be converted into money, if the cestui que trust, enter into possession and take the title deeds into his own custody, for the trustees cannot recover the deeds from the cestui que trust, and they cannot sell without them (b); or if the cestui que trust merely keep the estate for a length of time unsold (c) (but in one case a period of two years was considered not to be sufficient indication of such an intention (d)); or, where money is to be turned into land, if the cestui que trust receive the money from the trustee (e); but not if he merely receive the annual income though for a considerable length of time (f). [And the mere fact of keeping the property unsold for a long time will not be sufficient if there was a good reason for not attempting to sell, as, for instance, the existence of an over-riding right of pre-emption in a lessee (g).]

Possession of the land.

Receipt of the money.

[Where good reason for not selling.]

Change of securities and trust declared for the "executors."

3. It was determined by Lord Harcourt that a cestui que trust had divested money of its real quality by causing the securities to be changed, and the trust to be declared to himself and his executors; for this, he observed, was tantamount to saying the money should not go to the heir (h); and vice versâ, where land was to be converted into money, it was held by Lord Hardwicke, that a lease by the cestui que trust, reserving a rent to her heirs and assigns, was evidence of an intention to continue the property as real estate (i).

Grant of a lease and reservation of rent to the "heirs."

person entitled, as for instance to money to be laid out in land, should know that but for the act of election it would pass as land, but it is sufficient if the Court can collect the intention that with or without such knowledge he meant the money to be dealt with and treated as money (a).

Election expressed.

5. A person may express his election, even by parol. This, at least, was the opinion of Lord Macclesfield (b), and apparently was actually decided in the case of Chaloner v. Butcher (c), in which the husband having declared that the money should not be laid out in land, the Court held, that, if the question concerned the right of a third person, the declarations of the husband ought not to be admitted, but, as it was between his personal and real representative, they should be read. And both Lord Thurlow (d), and Lord Eldon (e), seem to have lent their sanction to the same doctrine, so that an obiter dictum of Lord Hardwicke to the contrary (f), though supported by so illustrious a name, must be considered as over-ruled.

Parol declaration when admissible.

How money to be turned into land affected by cestui que trust's will.

6. Where money bore the notional impress of realty, the cestui que trust might, until the Wills Act, have bequeathed it as so much money to be laid out in land, and the money would have passed, though the will was not attested according to the Statute of Frauds (g); for the will operated first by way of election, and then by way of bequest; but now by the Wills Act (h) the same formalities are required for the testamentary disposition of personal as of real estate.

SECTION II.

THE ACT OF THE TRUSTEE SHALL NOT ALTER THE NATURE OF THE CESTUI QUE TRUST'S ESTATE.

Power of the trustee at law and in equity.

1. AT law the trustee is the absolute owner of the land or fund, and therefore may exercise any control or dominion over it—may convert realty into personalty, or personalty into realty:

(a) Harcourt v. Seymour, 2 Sim. N. S. 12, see p. 46.

(h) 7 W. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 26.

but equity, which regards the trustee as a mere instrument for the execution of the trust, will not permit the interest of the cestui que trust to be affected by any act of misconduct, but, as often as any wrongful conversion is made, will transfer to the new interest the quality and character of the old—will treat real estate as personal, and personal as real, as the circumstances of the case may require.

Where the cestui que trust is sui juris.

2. But although every such change in the nature of the property as is not made either in pursuance of the trust or by the authority of the beneficial owner, must in general be considered a misfeasance, the dealings of the Court (under the respective jurisdictions of lunacy and chancery), and of committees, guardians, and trustees, with the property of lunatics and infants, require particular notice.

Power of the trustee where the cestui que trust is a lunatic.

3. It has been laid down as a general rule in lunacy, that the Court will not alter the condition of the lunatic's property to the prejudice of his successors; but the maxim must be received with the qualification, except it be for the benefit of the lunatic himself (a). The Chancellor takes the advice and assistance of the presumptive next of kin and presumptive heir at law in the care and management of the property (b); but through all the cases runs this prevailing principle—that the object of attention is exclusively and entirely the interest of the lunatic, without any regard to those who may have eventual rights of succession (c). If the Court considered how the representatives would be affected, there would always be among them an emulation of each other, and their speculations, if the administrator were to engage in them, would mislead his attention as to the interest of the only person he was bound to protect; there would be a continued running account between the personal and real estates; the Chancellor would be perpetually looking to the right or left, and the interest of the lunatic would be committed in favour of those who have no immediate interest, and whose contingent interests are left to the ordinary course of events (d).

The interest of the lunatic the exclusive object.

Timber cut on an estate ex parte paternâ applied to relief of an estate ex parte maternâ.

4. Upon this principle, where a lunatic was seised ex parte paternâ of estate A., and ex parte maternâ of estate B., and the latter was subject to a mortgage, the money arising from a fall of timber upon A. was directed to be applied in discharge of the mortgage upon B.; and upon a question between the respective heirs it was held, that the representative who succeeded to A. was not entitled to any recompense from the representative who inherited B. (a).

Sale of lunatic's real estate.

5. So, if the lunatic be considerably indebted, and it appears that his maintenance would be better provided for, and his advantage promoted, by the sale of a real estate inconvenient and ill-conditioned, instead of exhausting the personalty, the Court, on a proper representation of the case, would have no difficulty in making an order to that effect (b).

[Getting in money directed to be laid out in land.]

[6. And where a lunatic became absolutely entitled to funds which were vested in trustees upon trust to lay them out in the purchase of land, but which were actually invested on mortgage, and the mortgage money was got in pursuant to an order in the lunacy expressing that it was for the benefit of the lunatic to call it in, and was thereafter dealt with in the lunacy with other monies admittedly personalty, it was held that the fund had been reconverted into personalty (c).]

Fall of timber.

7. So, timber which ought to be cut on a lunatic's estate may be felled by the direction of the Court, and the proceeds may either be applied to the redemption of the land-tax, or payment of debts (d), or to any other purpose which the true interest of the lunatic may require; or if not wanted for any particular purpose, will go to the next of kin as personalty, and not to the heir as part of the realty (e).

Action of trespass.

8. So, if it be necessary for the interest of the real estate to bring an action of trespass, resort may be had with that object to the lunatic's personal fund (f).

Improvements.

9. By the same rule the money of the lunatic may be laid out in improvements (g); and the Chancellor, acting tanquam bonus pater-familias, may take every opportunity of ameliorating the estate by fair and ordinary means, such as draining, inclosure, &c. (a), erecting a steam engine for the purpose of working a coal mine (b), but must not engage in risks and dangerous adventures (c). And of course the personalty may be drawn upon for necessary expenses, as repairs (d), fines for renewal of leases, or admission to copyholds (e). But where the committees of a lunatic, who were entitled to the estate themselves after his death, laid out a sum in purchasing timber for repairs, when they ought to have cut timber on the estate, Lord Hardwicke said, that, having done so merely to serve their own interest they should make good the disbursement to the lunatic's next of kin (f).

Necessary expenses of real estate.

10. In the preceding cases the conversion has been for the clear benefit of the lunatic, but in general the Court will not lightly change the condition of the property, but will only act on pressing and urgent occasions (g): it will interefere with great caution, and do nothing that is unnecessary or uncalled for (h). The Court will not buy and sell for the lunatic (i); and, therefore, if the committee of a lunatic wantonly, and of his own head, lay out money upon land, or turn land into money, the Court will not suffer such fraudulent management to affect the rights of the representatives (j), but will transfer to the heir what ought to have remained real estate, and to the next of kin what ought to have remained personal estate (k). where a lunatic was tenant in tail in possession of large estates, upon which it was desirable to expend a considerable sum for repairs and improvements, and he was also entitled to a fund in Court sufficient for the required outlay, it was held that the expenses of the repairs and improvements on the settled estates ought to be raised by mortgage or charge of those estates, and that the fund in Court ought not to be applied for the purpose (a).] So, where a mortgage upon the lands of a lunatic is discharged out of his personal estate, though it was formerly held that the next of kin after the lunatic's decease had no lien upon the real estate for the amount expended (b), it has since been ruled that the personal estate after the lunatic's death shall be recouped the amount expended in exonerating the real estate (c). [And where a mortgage of a lunatic's real or leasehold property is paid off out of his personal estate the mortgage should not be re-conveyed to the lunatic, but should be kept on foot by transferring it to the committee, to be disposed of as the Court may direct, so as to leave open the question how the mortgage debt should ultimately be borne (d).] However, if timber be cut down, not by a committee in breach of his duty, but by a stranger tortiously, then, as there is no abuse of confidence, the heir has no equity, and the property of the timber, like a windfall, will belong to the executor (e).

[Right of customary heir preserved in equity on enfranchisement.]

12. So where, under an order made in lunacy, part of the personal estate of a lunatic was laid out in the purchase of real estate as a convenient mode of investment, and a declaration was inserted in the conveyance in conformity with the terms of the order, that the premises granted were "to all intents and purposes to be considered as part of the personal estate of the lunatic;" it was held that the value of the lands was part of Infants distinguished from lunatics.

1. Lord Thurlow, on one occasion, but without having examined the authorities, said he could not distinguish between lunatics and infants (c); but, when the matter came on again, and he had maturely considered the subject, he never once hinted at the existence of such a doctrine (d); and, indeed, until the Wills Act there was a very broad distinction between the two cases; for, if a lunatic recovered, which in contemplation of law is always possible, he had precisely the same power of disposition, though by different modes, over one species of property as over the other (e); but an infant, while he could have bequeathed personal estate under the age of twenty-one, could not have devised a freehold until he had attained that age (f). The Court, therefore, would not allow an infant's estate to be converted from one species of property into another, not from any tenderness to the rights of the representatives, but from a regard to the circumstances and capacity of the infant himself. Should his money have been turned into land, he would have lost a power of disposition which the law permitted him to exercise: should land have been turned into money, he would indirectly have gained a power which the policy of the law had forbidden him (g).

Timber cut on an infant's estate.

2. Upon the same principle, had timber been cut on an infant's estate, the proceeds, and, it seems, the accumulation of the proceeds (a), would have continued part of the realty, and have descended to the heir (b). But a distinction was taken in Mason v. Mason (c), (and Sir Thomas Clarke said he allowed it (d),) between the case of an infant tenant in fee and an infant tenant in tail: that in the former case the proceeds of the timber should be taken as realty, inasmuch as the infant was thus at all events absolutely entitled; but in the latter case, as the proceeds might, if impressed with the character of realty, become vested in the remainderman, the Court would treat the fund as personalty, and give it to the infant's executors.

Exoneration of infant's real estate out of his personal estate.

3. Again, if an infant's money had been applied to pay off a charge, or redeem a mortgage affecting his real estate, it was the better opinion (though some old authorities were against it), that the sum so invested would still be looked upon as part of the personalty (e).

Necessary expenses.

4. But necessary expenses, though affecting the infant's lands, were allowed to be thrown upon the personal fund, as disbursements for repairs (f), for keeping up a house, &c. (g).

Vernon v. Vernon.

5. So, in Vernon v. Vernon (h), where an estate was devised to an infant in consideration of his paying the sum which the original purchase had cost, it was held, that the amount, being a necessary outlay, had properly fallen upon the personalty, and the next of kin were not entitled to compensation.

Exceptions from the general rule.

6. There were some cases to which the reason for preserving the original character of the property did not apply. Thus, if an infant was seised of a lease for lives ex parte maternâ, and the guardian procured a new lease to be granted to the infant and his heirs, whereby the old lease was merged, the substituted lease would not descend in the maternal line, but, as a new acquisition, would go to the heirs on the part of the father (a); for it being perfectly immaterial to the infant himself whether the seisin was in the paternal or maternal line, the representative ex parte maternâ had no equity against the representative ex parte paternâ.

[Repairs.] [7. Where repairs are absolutely necessary for the protection of an infant's property the Court has jurisdiction to direct the raising of the necessary funds by mortgage or sale of part of the infant's property (b). But the jurisdiction should be jealously exercised and only in cases which amount to actual salvage (c).]

Effect of Wills Act. 8. By the Wills Act (d), an infant has no greater testamentary power over personal than over real estate; and it remains to be seen how far the removal of the ground, so frequently relied upon, against permitting the conversion of the personal estate of an infant into realty, can be treated as having diminished the rights of the next of kin, or as authorizing the applications of the decisions in lunacy to the administration of the property of infants.

Dyer v. Dyer. 9. The leaning of the Courts would appear to be to simplify the law by assimilating the case of infants to that of lunatics. Thus in a late case (e) an estate was devised to an infant, his heirs and assigns, with a limitation over on his dying under twenty-one, and timber was cut on the estate during the infancy with the sanction of the Court. The infant died without attaining his age, and the question was whether the proceeds belonged to the infant's personal representative, or should go with the estate to the person entitled under the limitation over, and Sir J. Romilly, M.R., held it to be personalty, and evidently made no distinction between infancy and lunacy.

PART IV.

PRACTICE.

CHAPTER XXXII.

In this chapter we propose to consider such parts only of the practice of the Court as most materially affect trustees and their cestuis que trust, and are capable of being compressed within reasonable limits, viz.—First, Distringas; Secondly, Production of documents; Thirdly, Compulsory payment into Court; Fourthly, Receivership; and Fifthly, Costs of suit (a).

SECTION I.

OF DISTRINGAS.

Danger to which stock, &c., exposed in consequence of legal title only being recognized.

1. In the case of stock transferable in the books of the Bank of England, and also in the case of the stocks and shares of many other public companies, no obligation exists on the part of the bank or public company to look beyond the title of the legal holder. The modern form of legislative enactment on the subject is usually to the effect that the company "shall not be bound to see to the execution of any trust, whether express, implied, or constructive" (b). Where, therefore, property of this

[(a) In the sixth and earlier editions of this work, the subject of parties to suits relating to trusts, and of the order and manner in which trustees and cestuis que trust ought to sue or be sued were considered at some length, but in referring to those editions the recent changes in the practice of the Court must be borne in mind.]

(b) 8 Vict. c. 16, s. 20; and see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 30, and supra, p. 793.

description is held upon trust, the interests of the cestui que trust are peculiarly liable to be endangered by the dishonesty of the trustee; and, indeed, but for the means of protection now about to be explained, would be almost entirely at his mercy.

Origin of the writ of distringas.

2. The distringas was originally a process of the equity side (afterwards abolished) of the Court of Exchequer for compelling the appearance of a corporation to a bill filed, but formerly it was a common practice, more particularly in any emergency, to issue a subpœna before the bill was actually on the file. When, therefore, a party sought to restrain a transfer of stock, before he filed the bill against the holder of the stock and the bank (which was then a necessary party), to prevent any mischief in the interim, he served process immediately on the secretary of the bank to appear to the bill. But as the form of distringas gave no information as to the stock to be restrained, the distringas was accompanied with a notice in writing, which specified the stock, and required the bank not to permit the transfer. The effect of this was, that if the holder of the stock applied to the bank to make a transfer, the bank immediately forwarded a notice to the party issuing the distringas, that unless he actually filed a bill, and obtained and served an injunction before a certain day, they should permit the transfer to be made.

Practice continued notwithstanding 4 Anne, c. 16, and 39 & 40 G. 3. c. 36.

3. The 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 22, declared that no subpœna or other process for appearance should issue until after the bill was filed; and the 39 & 40 G. 3. c. 36, enabled suitors to obtain an injunction against the bank, without making the bank a party. However, in practice the distringas still continued to be served on the bank, and the same attention was paid to it in not allowing a transfer.

Process transferred to Chancery on the abolition of the equity Exchequer.

4. The convenience of the distringas was so sensibly felt, from the frequent necessity of laying an embargo upon stock at a moment's notice, that when 5 Vict. c. 5, abolished the equity side of the Exchequer, it was thought expedient to transfer the process to the Court of Chancery, and enlarge the remedy.

Additional remedy given by 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 4.

5. Accordingly, by section 4 of the Act referred to, it was by way of additional remedy enacted, that "it should be lawful for the Court of Chancery, upon the application of any party interested by motion or petition, in a summary way, without bill filed, to restrain the Bank of England or other company, whether incorporated or not, from permitting the transfer of any stock in the public funds, or any stock or shares in any public company, or from paying any dividend or dividends due or to become due thereon; and every order of the Court upon such motion or petition should specify the amount of the stock, or the particular shares to be affected thereby, and the name or names of the person or persons, body politic or corporate, in which the same should be standing."

Practice under the 4th section.

6. An application to the Court under this section must be founded upon an affidavit verifying the special grounds upon which it proceeds (a). And when the order has been made, as it was not the intention of the Legislature to do more than protect the stock until the party could assert his right in the ordinary way, if the opposite party move to dissolve the injunction, and the Court sees that there has been great neglect on the part of the person who obtained the order, and that any extension of time would be oppressive to the party restrained, it will not as of course give further time for instituting proceedings (b). Under the former practice, when a bill had been filed, and an answer put in, and the defendant moved to discharge the restraining order, the plaintiff was allowed to file affidavits in opposition to the answer, and was not confined to the merits disclosed in the answer (c).

Transfer of the old writ of distringas.

7. By section 5 of the Act it is thus enacted: "In the place and stead of the Writ of Distringas, as the same has been heretofore issued from the Court of Exchequer, a Writ of Distringas in the form set out in the schedule to the Act shall be issuable from the Court of Chancery, and shall be sealed at the subpœna office, and the force and effect of such writ, and the practice under or relating to the same, shall be such as is now in force in the said Court of Exchequer: Provided, nevertheless, that such writ, and the practice under or relating to the same, and the fees and allowances in respect thereof, shall be subject to such orders and regulations as may, under the provisions of this Act, or of any other Act now in force, or under the general authority of the Court of Chancery, be made with reference to the proceedings and practice of the Court of Chancery."

Form of new writ.

In the Schedule to the Act, the form of the writ is as follows: "Victoria, &c., to the Sheriffs of London greeting. We command you that you omit not, by reason of any liberty, but that you enter the same, and distrain the Governor and Company of the Witness," &c.

Orders of Court regulating practice.

8. The Act, as we have seen, empowered the Court to regulate the practice of the distringas, and orders [were accordingly issued with that object (a); but the writ of distringas has now been superseded (b), and a notice substituted in its place, which is made to apply, not only to the Bank of England, but to all companies, whether incorporated or not, and the practice in relation to such notices is now regulated by Order 46, rules 2—10, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883.

[Notice substituted for the writ.]

[Present practice as to obtaining and serving the notice in lieu of distringas.]

9. The present course is as follows:—The party seeking the benefit of the Act prepares a notice, and makes an affidavit in the forms prescribed by the general order. The notice and affidavit are then filed in the Central Office, and an office copy of the affidavit and a duplicate of the notice, authenticated by the seal of the Central Office, are obtained and served on the bank or company; and such service has the same force and effect against the bank or company, as a writ of distringas duly issued under the 5th section of the Act previously had.

The notice may be withdrawn by the person by whom or on whose behalf it was given, on a written request signed by him, or its operation may be made to cease by an order made upon notice on the application of any other person claiming to be interested.

If, while the notice continues in force, the bank or company receive from the person in whose name the stock is standing, or from some person acting on his behalf or representing him, a request to permit the stock to be transferred, or to pay the dividends thereon, the bank or company is not by force or in consequence of the service of the notice, authorized without the order of the Court or a judge to refuse to permit the transfer to be made, or to withhold the payment of the dividends, for more than eight days after the date of the request.] The result is, that when the holder of the stock requests a transfer of the stock or payment of the dividends, the bank [or company] immediately forwards a notice to the party who served the notice, that unless he bring an action, and obtain and serve an injunction within eight days from the date of such request, the transfer or payment will be made. The party must, of course, be then upon the alert to take proceedings and obtain and serve the injunction before the eight days have expired (a).

Distinction between remedies under the 4th & 5th sections of the Act.

10. [Until the issuing of the Order of April, 1880, it was considered that while the 4th section of the Act applied,] not merely to stock in the funds, but to stock and shares of public companies, whether incorporated or not, the 5th section was by the joint effect of the schedule to the Act of Parliament and of the orders of Court before referred to (b), confined to stock transferable at the Bank of England, [but this distinction between cases under the 4th and 5th sections has been superseded, and by the recent Order, rule 3, the notice is applicable to any public company, whether incorporated or not, and may affect shares, securities, and money, as well as stock. The distinction, however, still remains that notice] under the 5th section may be, and is in fact, frequently obtained, not from any fear of immediate danger, but as a general safeguard merely (c); whereas a special case must be made in order to obtain a restraining order under the 4th section (d).

Remedies when concurrent.

11. The [notice in lieu of] distringas under the 5th section, and the restraining order under the 4th section, may both occasionally be resorted to should circumstances require it; for the adoption of either remedy is not an election of the one to the exclusion of the other (e). "The 4th clause," said Sir J. Wigram, "was intended for interim purposes,—to protect stock until the party claiming it should have an opportunity of asserting his rights by bill in the ordinary way,—an opportunity often wanting from the facility with which that species of property is transferred from hand to hand, and which the common distringas, preserved by the 5th section, does not in all cases afford (a). A distringas remains (b) only at the discretion of the bank. The restraining order, which the 4th section enables the Court to grant, is imperative; it continues so long as the Court sees fit to direct, and can only be discharged in the meantime upon the application of the parties interested." "Cases might arise," he added, "in which, from the discovery of new matter, after a distringas had issued, or from the bank peremptorily but erroneously refusing to notice a distringas, or perhaps from other causes, the party who obtained that writ might, notwithstanding, upon a full disclosure of the facts in a case of merits and urgency, entitle himself to a restraining order under the 4th section" (c).

SECTION II.

OF PRODUCTION.

General rule.

1. ALL documents held by the trustee in that character must be produced by him to the cestuis que trust, who in equity are the true owners (d). And if the trustee has submitted cases to counsel and taken opinions, not for the purpose of defence in any litigation between himself and his cestuis que trust, but for his guidance as trustee, he is bound to produce them to the cestuis que trust, who pay the expense so incurred by the trustee (e). [So, in a suit by cestuis que trust against their trustees to compel them to make good a breach of trust, the trustees are bound to produce letters and copies of letters between them and their solicitors in relation to the matters in question in the action ante litem motam (f); and a trustee cannot claim privilege for communications passing between him and his co-trustee employed as his solicitor (g).] But as all the cestuis que trust have an interest in the documents, they must all be represented, directly or indirectly, in the suit before the documents can be finally dealt with (a). If the trust documents include mortgages upon which the trust fund has been invested, the production cannot be objected to on the ground that the mortgagors, or persons entitled to the equity of redemption, are not parties (b).

Trust must be established.

2. The privilege of requiring production can be asserted by a cestui que trust only when the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust has been established; for, so long as the claim is disputed, the would-be cestui que trust is regarded as a stranger (c).

Accounts.

3. An executor and trustee is bound to keep clear and distinct accounts, and if he enter the accounts of the trust in his private books, he is bound to produce them (d); and if an executor or trustee, being a partner, be allowed to enter the trust accounts in the partnership books, the Court will not allow the partners to withhold the inspection (e); but if an agent be employed to manage an estate, and he keeps the accounts in the same books in which the accounts relating to the estates of other persons are kept, the production, in the absence of those other persons, has been refused (f).

Privileged communications.

4. Where litigation is pending or is contemplated between the trustee and his cestui que trust, and the trustee submits a case to counsel for his opinion, for the protection of the trustee himself adversely to the cestui que trust, the case and opinion are communications within the general rule, and privileged from production (g).

Persons bound by notice of the trust.

5. The right of the cestui que trust is enforced not only as against the trustee personally, but as against all claiming under him, and though for value, if with notice of the trust (h).

SECTION III.

OF COMPULSORY PAYMENT INTO COURT.

General rule.

1. THE general rule as laid down by Lord Eldon, and which has ever since been acquiesced in, is, that to call for payment of money into Court, "the plaintiff must either be solely entitled to the fund or have acquired in the whole of the fund such an interest, together with others, as entitles him on his own behalf, and the behalf of those others, to have the fund secured in Court" (a). It is not indispensable that the plaintiff should be the person exclusively interested; for if he have a partial or contingent interest (b), it is enough, provided all the other persons interested in the fund are before the Court (c); and occasionally the Court will make orders for payment into Court, although some of the persons interested in the money are not before it (d), or the defendant does not admit that all are before it (e). Where the other persons interested are not necessary parties to the suit, payment into Court, if consistent with the relief sought in the suit, may be obtained without service on them of the notice of motion (f); but where cestuis que trust had been served with the copy of a bill which prayed the appointment of new trustees, and a transfer of the fund not into Court but to the new trustees, the Court held that the parties served with a copy of the bill must be served with notice of the motion to transfer the fund into Court (g).

Plaintiff may move upon a possible title.

2. If the defendant admits himself to be a trustee for some one, but it remains to be ascertained whether he is a trustee for the plaintiff or for other parties, the plaintiff may move upon his possible title, where all persons are before the Court among whom there will be found some one who is entitled (h). "In a contest as to the title to any particular property," said Lord

Cottenham, "the Court will, in some cases, take possession of the subject-matter of the contest for security until it adjudicates upon the right. Such cases generally arise when the property is in the hands of stakeholders, factors, or trustees who do not themselves claim any title to it. In ordering money into Court under such circumstances, the Court does not disturb the possession of any party claiming title, or direct a payment before the liability to pay is established" (a).

Payment of a share.

3. Occasionally, where the fund is clear, and is divisible between the plaintiff and defendant in certain proportions, the Court has ordered the defendant to pay into Court the share only of the plaintiff (b).

Motion formerly must have been founded on admission in defendant's answer.

4. [It was formerly the rule of the Court that where the motion was made before decree, the merits upon which it was] founded must be admitted by the defendant's answer, and that no evidence as to merits could be adduced aliunde (c). Thus if money was standing in the joint names of several persons, as of three trustees, it would not be ordered into Court on the admission of the specific sum by one, though the others admitted that a sum was standing in their joint names, and the plaintiff offered to read affidavits sworn by them from which the amount of the sum would appear (d). [But in a recent case (e) the Court of Appeal intimated an opinion that any admission, whether direct or implied, would be sufficient to enable the Court to act; and in a subsequent case, where a motion was made in an administration action, after the defendant's appearance but before any pleadings had been delivered, for payment into Court of sums of money alleged to be in the defendant's hands, and the motion was supported by the affidavit of the plaintiff, but the defendant, though served with notice of the motion, did not appear, it was held by the late M. R. that the defendant

[But now any admission direct or implied sufficient.]

[However in Jervis v. White, 6 Ves. 738, Lord Eldon took the affidavit of the plaintiff charging the defendant with having a sum of money in his hands and an affidavit of the defendant before answer together as an admission, and ordered the money into Court.] The 59th sect. of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, directing the defendant's answer to be viewed merely as an affidavit in motions for injunction or receiver, &c., did not touch motions for payment into Court.

must be taken to have admitted that he had received the money as he had not denied it, and he was ordered to pay the amount into Court (a); and admissions by a trustee in correspondence that he has received the money, and a recital to that effect in the settlement which was executed by him, are sufficient to found the order (b).

In a partnership action where an account of partnership dealings had been furnished by the defendant before action brought, the late Master of the Rolls, Sir G. Jessel, looked at the account, rejected certain items, turned the balance against the defendant, and ordered him to pay it into Court (c); and in general where an account has been rendered and the Court has before it the parties to the account and evidence as to the items in dispute, the Court will look into the facts of the case, and if "in the fair exercise of its judicial discretion" (d), it can arrive at a conclusion that a sum will be due to the plaintiff on the taking of the account, and what that sum will be, it will order payment by the defendant of that amount into Court (e).]

Old rule that answer should contain an admission of plaintiff's title.

5. And it would seem that [the old rule was that] not only must the plaintiff have been able to read from the answer an admission of the defendant's receipt of the money, but also an admission of his own title, or probable title, e.g. as next of kin, heir-at-law, &c., and that if the defendant ignored the plaintiff's title, the money would not have been ordered into Court (f). But in a suit to establish a constructive trust, the rights of the plaintiff might have appeared so clear upon the answer, that the Court, notwithstanding a formal denial by the defendant that he was a trustee, would have felt itself justified in ordering payment (g). [It is conceived that under the present practice any admission by the defendant of the plaintiff's title, whether expressed or implied from his conduct, would be sufficient to enable the Court to order money into Court (h).

[Present practice.]

[Payment in after decree.]

money into Court in any case where it is ascertained to its satisfaction, that the amount must in any event be ultimately payable by the defendant, and if the certificate of the chief clerk has not been made finding the amount due, the Court will in a proper case satisfy itself by an examination of the evidence as to the amount, and order payment of the amount so ascertained (a). And upon an originating summons trustees have been ordered to pay into Court monies which have been received and misapplied by them (b).]

Payment into Court must be upon the footing of an equity alleged by the plaintiff.

7. The plaintiff cannot ask for payment of money into Court upon the footing of an equity not alleged by him in his pleadings, but only stated by the answer [or statement of defence.] Thus, where the plaintiff filed a bill claiming one-fifth of the residuary estate of a testator and asking relief as in the case of an open account, and the defendant by his answer stated a deed amounting to a settlement of account under which he admitted a sum to be due from him, it was held that the plaintiff could not, without amending his bill, obtain payment into Court of the sum so admitted to be due (c).

Not necessary that fund should be actually in defendant's hands.

8. It is not necessary that the defendant should acknowledge the fund to be in his hands at the time of the answer; for if he admit that he once actually received it, and state that he afterwards applied it in a way not authorized by the trust, the Court will fasten upon the receipt, and not allow him to discharge himself by pleading a breach of duty; as, if a trustee admit that he once had a fund in his hands, but that he afterwards allowed it to be received by a co-trustee who misapplied it (d), or that he afterwards sold it out and did not re-invest it (e), or paid it away improperly (f), or lent it on personal (g) or other security (h) not within the terms of the trust. And no attention will be paid to the objection that the suit is for the very purpose of securing the fund, and therefore that the money ought not to be ordered into Court until decree (i).

Payments not specified in answer may be verified by affidavit.

9. But if an executor (and the rule must apply equally to a trustee) admits in his answer [or statement of defence] that he has received a specific sum, but adds that he has made payments, the amount whereof he does not specify, in respect of the testator's estate, the Court will allow him to verify by affidavit the amount of the payments properly made, and will order him to pay in the actual balance (a).

Payment of money into Court not ordered on a mere admission of circumstances showing a liability.

10. Payment of money into Court is, in general, confined to the cases of a defendant's admission of actual possession of the fund, or of a receipt not followed by any subsequent legal discharge, and is not ordered upon a mere admission of facts from which a liability may be inferred (b). Thus, if a defendant admit that he has had a fund in his hands from a certain time, and it clearly appears that he is liable and will be decreed at the hearing to pay interest; yet the Court will not order him to pay interest on motion (c), unless he also admit that he has actually made interest, which amounts to a receipt (d).

Rothwell v. Rothwell.

11. The case of Rothwell v. Rothwell (e) is no exception to this rule, for there the defendant had covenanted with the trustees of his marriage settlement to pay 850*l.* within twelve months from the marriage; and the covenant not having been performed, the children filed a bill against the covenantor and the trustees to have the money raised; and the defendant admitting "that the 850*l.* had not been got in, but that it was still in his hands," the Court ordered the payment into Court, not on the admission of the debt, but "that it was still in his hands."

Special case of a trustee who is a debtor to his trust estate.

12. However, in some cases the Court orders payment into Court upon motion of what is apparently a mere debt; as, where an executor or trustee admits himself to owe a debt to the estate he represents, for here the person to pay and the person to receive being the same, the Court assumes that what ought to have been done has been done, and orders the payment, not as of a debt by a debtor, but as of monies realized in the hands of the executor or trustee (f). Thus, where A., B., and C. were appointed executors of a will, of whom A. and C. alone proved, and A. and B. were appointed trustees, and a bill was filed by A. for the administration of the trusts of the will, and B. by his answer admitted that he and his partner G. B. were indebted to the testatrix at the time of her decease, and that part of the assets had been lent to the partnership by C. and that the sum of 1137*l.* 7s. 10½d. was due from the partnership to the estate on the balance of accounts, and alleged that the debt owing from the partnership, and the monies received from C. the executor, had been treated as part of the assets, and applied partly in payment of testatrix's debts, and as to the residue upon the trusts of the will, the Court held, notwithstanding B.'s disclaimer of having acted, that he must be deemed to have acted as executor and trustee, and as such to have received the monies in question, and ordered him to pay the balance into Court (a).

Where trustees mean to apply the fund.

13. Trustees will not be ordered to pay into Court where they have a discretionary power over the fund, and it appears that they are intending bonâ fide to exercise it; for this would only lead to expense by occasioning the necessity of another application to have the fund paid out again (b).

Whether the order is matter of course.

14. Lord Langdale once said, that according to the old practice it was mere matter of course to order trust funds into Court, but that the question now was whether there existed any sufficient ground for the order, such as danger to the fund, &c. (c). V. C. Stuart subsequently declared his adherence to the old practice (d); [but in a recent case V. C. Hall was of opinion that the rule was not absolute, but a reasonable ground for the payment must be made out (e).]

Payment into Court at the hearing.

15. The Court will occasionally make an order for payment into Court at the hearing of the cause, "ex debitio justitiæ," though it might have hesitated to do so upon an interlocutory application by motion; as, where a plaintiff having only a remote contingent interest in a fund claims at the hearing to have the fund brought into Court (f). And an order for payment into Court will be made at the hearing, if proper, without notice of motion for that purpose (g).

Time allowed for payment into Court.

16. The time to be given for payment of money into Court will depend on the circumstances of the case. If it be money in the defendant's hands, it will be ordered in forthwith, and an immediate transfer may be directed of stock standing in the defendant's name. When the defendant had improperly lent a sum on personal security, but no insolvency was suggested nor any danger as to the money, the Court ordered it to be paid in, on or before the first day of the following term (a). In another case, where the defendant had lent 820*l.* upon a mortgage not authorized by the trust, the Court allowed six weeks, with liberty to apply for further time if the circumstances should then warrant the indulgence (b).

Distringas.

17. Where a [notice in lieu of] distringas or injunction has been previously obtained against the transfer of the stock, the Court orders the transfer into Court to be made, "notwithstanding the notice or injunction."

SECTION IV.

OF RECEIVERSHIP.

Receiver will be appointed at the instance of all the cestuis que trust.

1. As the cestuis qui trust or parties beneficially interested in an estate are in equity the owners of it, should they concur in an application for a receiver and the trustee consents, the Court will at any time make the order (c). But the usual recognizances will not be dispensed with (d).

Also where trustee is guilty of misconduct, or is insolvent, bankrupt, &c.

2. And as each cestui qui trust is entitled to have the fund properly protected, a receiver will be granted at his instance if it can be shown that the trustee has been guilty of misconduct, waste, or improper disposition of the trust estate (e), or that he has an undue leaning or bias towards one of two conflicting parties (f), or that the fund is in danger from his being in insolvent circumstances (g), or being a bankrupt (h), or that one trustee has misconducted himself, the other consenting to the order (a), or that he is incapacitated from acting (b), or that the executor is a person of bad character, drunken habits, and great poverty (c). [But before judgment in a creditor's action a receiver will not be appointed unless a case is shown of the assets being wasted (d), nor merely because the executor will probably exercise his right of retainer to the prejudice of the other creditors (e).]

Where executrix a feme covert, and husband abroad.

3. And a receiver was appointed [in a case under the old law] where the executrix was a feme covert, and the husband, besides being in indifferent circumstances, was out of the jurisdiction, for in such a case, said the Court, if the executrix waste the assets or refuse payment, the party aggrieved has no remedy, as the husband must be joined in the action (f). [But now that the husband is not a necessary party to an action against the executors, and is not subject to liabilities by reason of any devastavit committed by his wife unless he has acted or intermeddled in the administration, it is conceived that his poverty or absence would be no ground for the appointment of a receiver (g).]

Receiver where trust estate unprotected.

4. And a receiver has been ordered where four trustees had been named in a will and one died, and another was abroad, and the third had scarcely interfered in the trust, and, the fourth submitted to a receiver by his answer (h). In another case three trustees had disagreed, and a receiver was appointed (i): the order was taken by arrangement between the parties, but the Court had previously expressed its opinion that unless the trustees chose to agree, a receiver must be appointed (j). Where two out of three trustees chose to act separately, and took securities in their own names omitting that of the dissentient trustee, a cestui que trust was held entitled to a receiver (k). And the Court will grant a receiver at the instance of the cestui que trust, when the single trustee is, or all the trustees are out of the jurisdiction (l).

Receiver not granted on slight grounds.

5. But the Court is not in the habit of granting a receiver, and so taking the administration out of the hands of the trustees, the natural curators of the estate, upon very slight grounds (a). Thus it is no sufficient cause for a receiver that one of several trustees has disclaimed (b), or is inactive, or gone abroad (c). Nor is it a sufficient cause that trustees are in mean (not insolvent) circumstances (d), or being trustees for sale have let the purchaser into possession before they received the purchase money, for the Court will not necessarily infer this to be misconduct (e).

Receiver not discharged at the mere instance of the party procuring his appointment.

6. When a receiver is appointed under the authority of the Court, he is appointed for the benefit of all parties interested, and therefore will not be discharged merely on the application of the party at whose instance the order was made (f).

An exception under special circumstances.

7. However, when a receiver had been appointed on the application of the plaintiff the tenant for life, on the ground of the misconduct of one of the trustees, and the incapacity of the other, and afterwards three new trustees were appointed by the Court, who, on a motion by the plaintiff to discharge the receiver, undertook to receive the rents and pass their accounts half-yearly before the Master in the same way as a receiver, the Court said it was not proposed to deprive any party of the protection of a receiver, but merely to substitute the trustees in his place; that the tenant for life ought not necessarily to be charged with the costs of a receiver; that it was not intended to put the tenant for life in possession; that if any objections were shown to the trustees the application would be refused, but in the absence of such objections it was a reasonable request: and the order for discharging the receiver was made (g).

Expense of receiver falls on life estate.

8. Where the Court appoints a receiver, the poundage and the expenses of passing his accounts fall upon the income of the tenant for life (h).

holders against their trustees to execute the trusts of the deed for securing the debentures, and a receiver and manager had also been appointed in the action, the receiver and manager was allowed the balance due to him, including his remuneration and his costs of the action, in priority to the costs, charges, and expenses of the trustees, and the costs of the plaintiffs other than the plaintiffs' costs of the realization of the property (a).]

SECTION V.

OF COSTS OF SUIT.

I. As between strangers on the one hand, and trustees and cestuis que trust on the other. Costs as between trustees and strangers.

1. In these cases, the trustee is on no better footing than any ordinary plaintiff or defendant, for the circumstances of the trust cannot be allowed to affect the interest of a third person (b). Thus, if a trustee fail in his application to the Court, he must pay the costs of it (c).

2. So, in a suit by a stranger for specific performance of a contract, the vendor being a trustee for sale must, if he cannot make a title, pay the costs of the suit agreeably to the general rule (d). Costs where trustees cannot make a title.

3. So, where trustees or executors are brought before the Court as necessary parties by a stranger, if the trustees or executors contest the claims of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff recover in the suit, they are not entitled to the costs (e). Trustee made a defendant as a necessary party.

4. If a plaintiff fail in his suit, but stands in so hard a case that he ought not to pay any costs, the Court will not oblige him to pay the costs of a defendant because the latter happens to sustain the character of a trustee (f). Plaintiff failing in his suit not necessarily bound to pay costs of a trustee.

5. In a foreclosure action against the mortgagor and his trustee to bar dower, the trustee is not entitled to his costs as against the mortgagee (g). Trustee to bar dower.

Trustee has costs as between party and party only.

6. Where an action by a stranger is dismissed with costs, a trustee, who is a defendant, will in general be allowed his costs only as between party and party (a). [But under the general discretionary power which the Court possesses in all matters of equitable jurisdiction, costs as between solicitor and client may be given under special circumstances (b).]

Trustee respondent to petition of cestui que trust.

7. Where money has been paid into Court by a railway company, and the cestuis que trust are petitioners and the trustee a respondent, the company must pay the costs of both, as the trustee is justified in appearing separately to inform the Court that the order is right (c).

Costs in creditor's suit.

8. If a creditor filed a bill against an executor for payment of a debt, the rule which [until the recent alteration in the practice of the Court] prevailed at law was not also the rule of equity, viz., that if the creditor recovered he should be entitled to his costs, de bonis testatoris, and if there were none, then de bonis propriis of the executor; for the consideration of costs in equity rested entirely in the discretion of the Court (d). As the law formerly stood, if the assets were not sufficient to cover both the plaintiff's debt and costs, the executor was not decreed in equity to pay costs personally (e), unless he had misconducted himself, as by having satisfied simple contract debts in preference to debts upon specialty (f); but he was not entitled to retain his own costs out of the assets in preference to the claims of the plaintiff (g). And if a bill had been filed by a specialty creditor, and the specialty debt had exhausted the personal assets, the executor could not have claimed to be reimbursed out of the real estate to the prejudice of the testator's heir (h): for the executor, it was said, should have considered the risk before he applied for the probate (a). But now the practice is that the executor shall have his own costs in the first place, even as against the plaintiff, for the Court will not take the fund out of his hands until his costs are paid (b).

Executor (though not so formerly) now held entitled to his costs in preference to the plaintiff.

II. Of costs as between trustees and cestuis que trust, inter se. Trustee entitled to costs as a general rule.

1. The general rule is that a trustee shall have his costs of suit awarded to him at the hearing either out of the trust estate, or to be paid by his cestui que trust (c). And if there be a fund under the control of the Court he will have his costs as between solicitor and client (d). And if there be no fund, still if the cestuis que trust choose to bring the trustees before the Court for obtaining its directions as to the rights of the parties or the mode of administration, and the trustees are free from blame, the trustees are entitled to their costs as between solicitor and client as against the cestuis que trust personally (e). But if plaintiffs take proceedings for the purpose of creating a fund, of which the defendants would be trustees for the plaintiffs, if the plaintiffs succeeded, but the plaintiffs fail, the defendants are entitled as against the plaintiffs to costs only as between party and party (f).

2. If it appear upon the pleadings, or the Court be otherwise Charges and expenses.

satisfied, that the trustee has sustained charges and expenses beyond the costs of suit, the Court will order him his costs, charges and expenses, properly incurred. But an order made in a suit in this form will not comprise costs, charges and expenses, incurred in defending other suits, unless they be specially mentioned (a).

[Priority.]

[3. If the trust estate be insufficient for the payment of all the costs of the action, the trustee is entitled to have his costs, charges and expenses, paid in priority to the costs of the cestuis que trust (b). But the necessary costs of realizing the trust estate will have priority over the trustees' costs, charges and expenses, as will also the costs and remuneration of a receiver appointed in the suit (c).]

Professional charges.

4. If the trustee be a solicitor, he cannot make the usual professional charges, but the Court will not declare that the trustee shall have his costs out of pocket only, but will give him his costs as between solicitor and client in the usual way, and leave it to the taxing officer to deal with the effect of the order (d).

Practice in creditors' and legatees' suits where fund is deficient.

5. A singular application of the rules respecting costs as between trustees and third persons, and as between trustees and their cestuis que trust inter se, arises in the case of a deficient fund. If a creditor bring an action for administration and there is a surplus, he can only have costs as between party and party, for that is all that he is entitled to as against the residuary legatees with whom he has no privity; but if the estate be deficient, and is divisible amongst the creditors pro ratâ, the creditor is regarded in the light of a trustee for himself and the other creditors, and then as between him and his co-creditors he is allowed his costs as between solicitor and client. Thus the less the estate the larger the plaintiff's costs. The same principle applies, mutatis mutandis, [to an action by a creditor of a deceased partner where the estate is sufficient for payment of separate, but not of partnership, debts (e); to the case of a creditor who obtains the conduct of an action originally brought by a legatee or next of kin (f); to an action] by a legatee where the fund, after payment of debts, is not sufficient for discharge of the legacies in full (a); but otherwise if the fund be insufficient for payment of debts (b). Where the personalty had been exhausted, and a creditors' suit was instituted against the devisees of the real estate, which was also likely to prove deficient, the order was that the proceeds should be applied first in payment of the costs of plaintiffs and defendants as between party and party pari passu, and then in discharge of the debts, and if the fund were insufficient for the latter purpose, then as between the plaintiffs and the other creditors the plaintiffs should be paid their extra costs as between solicitor and client (c).

Trustee not appearing.

6. Where the trustee did not appear at the hearing, and a decree nisi was made against him, and the trustee set down the cause again, and prayed to have his costs of the suit upon his paying the costs of the day, Lord Kenyon said, "The payment of the costs of the day makes the trustee rectum in curiâ; and as he would most unquestionably have been entitled to his costs if he had appeared at the original hearing, so he now stands in the same situation, and is therefore entitled to his costs" (d).

Decree passed.

7. But if the decree has been passed, a trustee who has omitted to ask for his costs at the hearing cannot have the cause re-heard upon the subject of costs only, and cannot obtain an order for payment of his costs upon presenting a petition (e).

Disclaimer.

8. If a person named as trustee be made defendant to a suit, and by his defence disclaim the trust, the suit will be dismissed as against him with costs (f); but not with costs as between solicitor and client, for, having refused to accept the office, he stands in the position of an ordinary defendant (g); and if his defence be unnecessarily long, he will only be allowed the reasonable costs of a disclaimer (h).

Costs of trustee of a void deed.

9. If a person be a trustee of a deed void as against creditors, or on other grounds, the plaintiff by praying a conveyance by the trustee may elect to treat him in that character, so as to give him a claim to costs (a). Otherwise the so-called trustee is a trustee of a nullity, and he and his cestui que trust cannot have costs as against the true owner (b); more particularly if the deed to which the trustee is a party contain a false recital for the purpose only of misleading (c); and if the trustee's claim to the expenses of the so-called trust be the occasion of the suit, he will be ordered to pay costs (d). [So, where the trustee had prepared the settlement and had persuaded the settlor to execute it, he was ordered to pay the costs of the action to set it aside (e).] If a suit be instituted against trustees of an instrument, which is a nullity, for enforcing the void trusts, and the suit is dismissed, the quasi trustees will have their costs, but only as between party and party (f).

Suit originated by the trustee's misconduct.

10. If any particular instance of misconduct, or a general dereliction of duty in the trustee (g), or even his mere caprice and obstinacy (h), be the immediate cause why the suit was instituted, the trustee, on the charge being substantiated against him, must pay the costs of the proceedings which his own improper behaviour occasioned; and of course if the trustee be decreed to pay the costs personally, he cannot afterwards deduct them from the trust fund in his hands (a). [So, if an executor or trustee improperly institute an action to administer the estate or execute the trust, the Court will not allow its process to be used as an instrument of oppression, but will make the plaintiff personally bear all the costs of the action (b); and under the new rules, if an administration action be rendered necessary solely by the neglect of the trustee to furnish accounts, the judgment should be so framed as to enable the Court to throw the whole costs of the action on the trustee (c). But the right of a trustee to his costs rests substantially upon contract, and can only be lost or curtailed by such inequitable conduct as amounts to a violation or culpable neglect of his duty under the contract (d), and his costs accordingly are not "by law left to the discretion of the Court;" and a trustee, if deprived of his costs, may, without the leave of the Court or judge making the order, appeal on the question of his costs only (e). Where, however, the settlement is itself set aside, the trustee has no claim to his costs as matter of right, as in that case there is no contract in existence, and accordingly he cannot appeal as to such costs (f).]

Where misconduct proved only in part.

11. But where a bill was filed charging the trustee with a breach of trust both as to realty and personalty, and the charge failed as to the former but succeeded as to the latter, the Court said, it was scarcely possible to suppose that the trustee should be permitted to have his costs, but it would be injustice to make him pay the whole costs, as one part of the bill had failed, and he was therefore ordered to pay the costs of that part of the bill which had succeeded (g).

breach of trust (a). Where a trustee acting honestly has invested the trust funds on improper securities but has made good the loss to the trust estate before judgment in an action to execute the trusts, he will be allowed his costs (b).]

Setting aside a purchase by trustees, and absence of fraud.

13. Trustees for sale had purchased in the name of a trustee at an undervalue, but without any imputation of fraud, and by auction. As to so much of the suit as related to calling upon the trustees to submit to a resale, and the directions consequential thereon, the Court gave relief against the trustees with costs; but as to accounts that must have been taken had the sale been unimpeachable, the trustees were allowed their costs (c).

Mistake or slight neglect of the trustee.

14. If the suit was occasioned by an innocent mistake of the trustee (such as an investment in good faith and without loss to the trust fund on a security not strictly correct (d)), the Court will content itself with not giving him costs (e), or will punish him with payment of part of the costs only (f), or will even allow him his costs (g); [but an official liquidator who is a paid agent is not entitled to the same latitude in the matter of costs as a gratuitous trustee (h).]

Misconduct of the trustee discovered in the progress of the suit.

16. If the suit did not originate from any necessity of enquiring into the conduct of the trustee, but, in the course of the proceedings instituted upon other grounds, it appears the trustee has in some particular instance been guilty of a breach of trust, the Court will not award against the trustee the costs of the whole suit, but only of so much of it as connects itself with his misconduct, and as to the rest of the suit will allow him his costs (a).

Clearance of default.

17. The Court never gives costs to a defaulting trustee while he continues in default, but the Court says, "when you have paid in the balance found due from you, then you shall have your costs" (b). But a bankrupt [formerly ceased] from the date of bankruptcy to be a debtor to the trust estate, and was therefore entitled to his costs from the date of the bankruptcy (c).

[Where defaulting trustee a bankrupt.]

[18. The liability of a trustee for his breaches of duty was, however, by the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, sect. 49, continued notwithstanding his discharge, and there has been some conflict of opinion as to the right of a bankrupt trustee since that Act to his costs as from the date of the bankruptcy, but the better opinion seems to be that he is not entitled to such costs until he has made good his default (d). By the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (e), the liability of a trustee for a breach of trust (except in cases of fraudulent breaches) is released by the order of discharge, and it follows that under that Act, except in cases of fraud, a bankrupt trustee will, as from the date of his discharge, be entitled to his costs. But if the liability of the trustee does not arise from a breach of trust, but is a mere ordinary liability which ceases as from the date of the bankruptcy, the trustee is entitled to his costs as from that date (f).

[Apportioning costs in action against executor of defaulting executor.]

19. If an action be brought against the executor of a defaulting executor to administer the original testator's estate, the defendant's costs ought strictly to be borne, as to those incurred solely in reference to the original testator's estate out of that estate, as to those incurred in seeking relief against the defaulting executor out of his estate, and as to the remaining costs out of the two estates equally; but to avoid the complication and expense of thus apportioning the costs, the Court has allowed the defendant the costs of taking the account of the original testator's estate, and half the rest of his costs out of the original testator's estate (a).]

Costs of discussing a doubtful point of law.

20. An executor, instead of accumulating a fund as directed by the will, had improperly kept the balance in his hands; but, as the amount of costs had in great measure been occasioned by the enquiry what rule the Court ought to adopt with respect to the computation of interest, it was thought hard under the circumstances to fix the executor with payment of costs even relatively to the breach of trust; and therefore the Court gave no costs (b).

Costs to be paid in part and received in part by the trustee.

21. In one case, as to part of the suit, the trustee ought from his misconduct to have paid the costs, and, as to another, to have been allowed his costs; and the Court, by a kind of compromise, left each party to pay his own costs (c).

Trivial misconduct.

22. When the breach of trust is trivial, the Court may overlook it altogether, and give the trustee his own costs (d).

[Action by representative of trustee to recover the trust estate.]

[23. If the representative of a trustee who has invested the trust estate on an unauthorized security, bring an action to recover the trust estate, he will not be allowed the costs of that action as against the cestuis que trust, but must look for such costs to the estate of the trustee (e).]

Trustees protecting from parental influence.

24. The Court watches with jealousy transactions between parent and child occurring shortly after the child has attained twenty-one, more especially when the transactions had their inception during minority, and trustees acting bonâ fide in refusing to convey under such suspicious circumstances will be entitled to their costs (f).

Trustee instituting a suit for his private ends.

25. If a trustee have a private interest of his own, separate and independent from the trust, and oblige the cestui que trust to come into a Court of equity merely to have some point relating to the trustee's private interest determined at the expense of the trust, that is such a vexatious proceeding in the trustee, that, for example's sake, he will be decreed to pay the whole costs of the suit (g).

Trustee falsely denying the plaintiff's claims.

26. If in a suit for an account the defendant states his belief that the plaintiff is considerably indebted to him, and after a long investigation it proves that the defendant is considerably indebted to the plaintiff, the trustee, thus daring the plaintiff to his account, will be decreed to pay the costs (a). And if the balance be in favour of the trustee, but far below what he had stated, he will not be entitled to have his costs (b), or at least not the costs of the account itself (c).

Trustee mis-stating his accounts.

27. A trustee will be deprived of costs (d), or will even have to pay costs if he refuse to account (e), or if he wilfully mis-state the accounts (f), or if, by any chicanery in his answer, he keep the cestui que trust from a true knowledge of the accounts (g), or even if he has kept the accounts in a very confused manner (h). And an executor will be liable to pay costs if he deny assets, and the contrary be established against him (i). But an executor is entitled to have the accounts taken under the direction of the Court, and, therefore, even where he had obstructed the taking of the accounts, he was not decreed to pay the costs, though he was not allowed to have his costs (j). But in another case, where he had unnecessarily and unjustifiably protracted the suit, and multiplied the costs by his litigiousness, he was ordered to pay the costs of a simple administration suit up to the hearing (k).

Corporation pleading ignorance falsely.

28. Where a corporation filling the character of trustees for a grammar school by their answer pleaded ignorance of the claims of the charity, and the information was afterwards elicited from the documents scheduled to their answer, as the Court inferred from such conduct a disposition to obstruct and defeat the ends of justice, the corporation was decreed to pay the costs of the suit (l).

Trustee setting up title of his own.

30. The costs of the suit will be cast upon the trustee, if, in his answer, he set up a title of his own, and make an ill defence (b); and he will not be allowed to have his costs if he set up any trust different from what it actually is (c); and where a trustee filed an improper answer he was not allowed the costs of the answer (d).

Executors denying relationship of next of kin.

31. An executor sued by the next of kin had put the plaintiffs to the proof of their relationship, and, the fact not admitting a doubt, the executor was fixed with the costs of the enquiry (e).

Costs where interest given against executors.

32. It was laid down as a rule by Lord Thurlow, that "where the Court is obliged to give interest against executors as a remedy for a breach of trust, costs against them will follow of course" (f); but Sir W. Grant said, "that was a proposition to which he was not quite prepared to accede, as there might be many cases in which executors must pay interest, which would not be cases for costs" (g); and the existence of any such rule has been denied (h). The meaning of Lord Thurlow probably was, that where the suit was occasioned by the misconduct of the trustee, and the charge against him was shown to be well founded by the Court's fixing him with interest, the costs of the suit in that case would be consequential upon the relief (i).

TRUSTEE RELIEF ACT.

10 & 11 Vict. cap. 96.

"An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees." (22*nd July*, 1847.)

Whereas it is expedient to provide means for better securing trust funds, and for relieving Trustees from the responsibility of administering trust funds in cases where they are desirous of being so relieved: Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that all trustees, executors, administrators, or other persons, having in their hands any monies belonging to any trust whatsoever (a), or the major part of them, shall be at (a) The owner of an estate charged with a sum in favour of another is not a trustee of that sum within the Act, for he has not the monies in his hands; and if it were held otherwise, the money might be paid into Court, and the incumbrancer would have to bear the costs of getting it out, whereas the nature of a charge is that the beneficiary is entitled to have it raised out of the estate, together with the costs of raising it; Re Buckley's Trusts, 17 Beav. 110; and see Re Cooper's Legacy, 17 Jur. 1087; Warburton v. Cicognara, 3 Ir. R. Eq. 592. But see Trustee Act, 1850, sect. 48.

It has been thought that where there is a power of sale without a power of signing receipts for the purchase-money, the purchaser may take the estate under the power of sale and pay the purchase-money into Court under the Trustee Relief Act; Cox v. Cox, 1 K. & J. 251. See Trustee Act, 1850, sect. 48.

A sum of money was payable by instalments, and the trustee after receiving one instalment paid it into Court, and on a petition of the cestui que trust the Court not only administered the instalment paid in, but also gave directions to the trustee as to the future instalments; and said the order would give ample indemnity to the trustee; Re Wright's Settlement, 1 Sm. & Giff. App. v. The Court had, in fact, no jurisdiction as to the instalments payable in future, and the order would be an indemnity in this sense only, that the trustee would be acting in a way which had received the sanction of the Court extra-judicially. See Re Lloyd's Trusts, 2 Ir. R. Eq. 507; and see Trustee Act, 1850, s. 31; and Re Fortune's Trusts, 4 Ir. R. Eq. 351.

[Trustees of charitable funds have a liberty (a), on filing an affidavit shortly describing the instrument strict right to pay their trust money into Court and relieve themselves of the trust, without giving notice to the Charity Commissioners, notwithstanding the 17th section of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, but their proper course is to apply first to the Commissioners; Re Poplar and Blackwall Free School, 8 Ch. D. 543.]

Where money in which a lunatic is interested has been paid into Court, the Court has jurisdiction under the Act to order repayment to the Poor Law Guardians of the expenses incurred by them for the support of the lunatic; Re Upfull's Trust, 3 Mac. & G. 281; Re Colman's Trust, 14 L. T. N.S. 587; Re Parker, 2 W. R. 139; Re Ward's Estate, 2 W. R. 406; Re Drewery's Trust, 2 W. R. 436; Re Buckley's Trust, Johns. 700, [but only to the extent of six years' arrears, Re Newbegin's Estate, 36 Ch. D. 477,] or [in the case of a lunatic not so found by inquisition] to order the maintenance of the lunatic; Re Sturge's Trusts, 5 Jur. N.S. 423; Re Burke, 2 De G. F. & J. 124; 6 Jur. N.S. 717; Re Law, 7 Jur. N.S. 410; Re Perry's Trusts, 31 L. T. N.S. 775; 23 W. R. 335. [Re Whitby's Trust, W. N. 1877, p. 208; but see Re Irby, 17 Beav. 334; and to order such maintenance out of capital, Re Tuer's Will Trusts, 32 Ch. Div. 39; and see Re Grimmett's Trusts, 56 L. J. N.S. Ch. 419. And the Court, without requiring the appointment of a guardian in lunacy, directed the income to be paid to the lunatic's wife for his maintenance during his life or until further order, Re Silva's Trusts, 36 W. R. 366; 57 L. J. N.S. Ch. 281; 58 L. T. N.S. 46.

If a lunatic is entitled to a fund which has been paid into Court under the Act, the Court has jurisdiction upon a petition presented in the Chancery Division under the Act and in lunacy to make an immediate order for the transfer of the fund to the account of the lunatic; Re Tate, 20 Ch. D. 135.]

Monies due upon a policy may be paid under the Act into Court by an insurance company: United Kingdom Life Assurance Company, 34 Beav. 493; Re Hall, 10 W. R. 37; Re Webb's Policy, 2 L. R. Eq. 456; and the company will be entitled to their costs, as between solicitor and client; Re Webb's Policy, 2 L. R. Eq. 456; Re Cobbe, 15 W. R. 29; Re Haycock's Policy, 1 Ch. D. 611. But in the last case the late M. R. observed that the Trustee Relief Act does not enable assurance companies to pay policy monies into Court after notice of conflicting claims, unless the policy monies were "monies belonging to some trust," in the words of the first section; S.C. [And in Matthew v. Northern Assurance Company, 9 Ch. D. 80, where the assurance company, in consequence of conflicting claims, paid the policy money into Court and contended that they were thereby discharged from all liability, the late M. R. held in an action by an assignee of the policy against the assurance company for the recovery of the policy money, that the company were only stakeholders in a limited sense; that the relation between them and the policy holder was that of debtor and creditor; that there was no trust or constructive trust such as to entitle them to pay the money into Court under the Act; and that the payment into Court was no discharge.

But now by 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25, sub-s. 6, power is given to any debtor trustee or other person liable in respect of a debt or chose en action, and who has received notice of any written assignment thereof, to pay the same into Court, in the case of any disputed claim, under and in conformity with the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act. But this section only applies where there has been an assignment in writing of the debt or chose en action; Re Sutton's Trusts, 12 Ch. D. 175.

Under the "Public Works Loans Act, 1875," 38 & 39 Vict. c. 89, s. 28, the secretary of the Public Works Loans Commissioners may pay into Court any surplus monies under the control of the Commissioners arising from the taking possession, lease, sale, mortgage, or other disposition under the act of any mortgaged property, as if he were a trustee.]

(a) Trustees are at liberty to pay in, but they are not bound to pay in, if they are willing to execute the trust without the aid of the Court; Mountain v. Young, 18 Jur. 769; and see Handley v. Davies, 5 Jur. N.S. 190.

creating the trust (a) according to the best of their knowledge and belief, to pay the same, with the privity of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, into the Bank of England (b), to the account of such Accountant-General in the matter of the particular trust (c) (describing the same by the names of the parties, as accurately as Trustees may pay trust monies or transfer stocks and securities into the Court of Chancery.

(a) The affidavit must not into go the whole history of the trust, so as to show upon the accounts how the particular sum arose, or the trustee will be deprived of his costs; Re Waring, 16 Jur. 652. All the trustees should properly join in the affidavit, as all may have some information to contribute, but under particular circumstances the Court (as the Act is silent who is to make the affidavit) will order the Paymaster-General to receive the money on the affidavit of one of several co-trustees; —— v. ——, 1 Jur. N.S. 974.

(b) The payment into Court may of course be made without an order of the Court; Re Biggs, 11 Beav. 27. And Annuities or Stocks of the Bank of England, or of the East India Company, or South Sea Company, or Government or Parliamentary securities, may be transferred into Court without an order, but private securities can only be deposited under the Trustee Relief Amendment Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 74, by an order to be made on petition. [But see Re Ross's Trusts, 28 W. R. 418, where V. C. Malins held that Railway Stock might be transferred into Court under the Trustee Relief Act. And as to securities which may be brought into Court and the mode of transferring and depositing various securities, see Seton, 5th edit. p. 183.]

Notice of the payment into Court [was by Chancery Funds Amended Orders, 1874, r. 5, required to be given to the persons named in the affidavit as interested; but now under Supreme Court Fund Rules, 1884, r. 41 (vide post, p. 1141), the trustee is no longer required to set out in his affidavit the names of the persons interested, and the first mentioned rule having, though not expressly repealed, become inoperative, the trustee is no longer bound to give such notice, Re Graham's Trusts, (1891) 1 Ch. 151. Under the former practice] if a person interested could not be found the notice might, by leave of the Court, be dispensed with; Re Hansford, 7 W. R. 199; [Re Whitaker's Trusts, 47 L. T. N.S. 507; 31 W. R. 114;] and where the parties were extremely numerous, the Court gave leave to substitute notice on some of them; Re Colson's Trust, 2 W. R. 111.

Where a person interested in the fund was not named as such in the affidavit upon which the money was paid into Court, it was held that he could not make his claim upon petition, but the Court gave him leave to file a bill; Re Jephson, 1 L. T. N.S. 5. But this case was not followed in subsequent practice. [See Re Puttrell's Trusts, 7 Ch. D. 647; Pelling v. Goddard, 9 Ch. D. 185.]

When an executor, after paying money into Court, discovered debts of the testator, he was allowed to have the money paid back to him out of Court on his undertaking to apply it properly; Ex parte Tournay, 3 De G. & Sm. 677.

(c) The money must not be paid in by an executor to an account "the trusts of the testator's will," for this implies not a particular trust, but a general administration of the testator's estate. The executor must take on himself the responsibility of severing the fund from the testator's assets and appropriating it to the particular purpose, and then pay it in to the limited account. If it has already been paid in to an account too general for the Court to deal with, it may be carried over to the correct account, and the Court will then proceed to adjudicate upon the rights of the parties; Re Joseph's Will, 11 Beav. 625; Re Everett, 12 Beav. 485; Re Wright's Will, 15 Beav. 367; Re Robinson's Trust, 1 Jur. N.S. 750; Re Coulson's Trust, 4 Jur. N.S. 6; Re Godfrey's Trust, 2 Ir. Ch. Rep. 105; and see Re Monahan, 8 Ir. R. Eq. 353. If the fund has been paid to the account of the testator's estate, and in the matter, &c., the Court will not proceed without the presence of the personal representative and his admission of assets; Re Edwards' Estate, 4 W. R. 801. As to the proper heading of the account, see further, Re Jervoise, 12 Beav. 209; Re Tillstone's

[And where there was a fund in Court belonging to a "lunatic patient" in New South Wales, not found lunatic by inquisition, and it appeared that the property of such patient was not by the law of the colony vested in the colonial master in lunacy, but that he had large powers of management and of suing for the recovery thereof, the Court declined to pay over the whole fund to the master, but directed payment only of so much as was shown to be necessary for the maintenance and benefit of the patient, Re Barlow's Will, 36 Ch. Where trustees were empowered with the consent of the tenant for life to invest in shares of railway companies guaranteed by the Indian Government, and the money was paid into Court under the Act, the Court declined to sanction such an investment, but offered to appoint new trustees and transfer the fund to them, with an intimation that the trustees had power to make the investment; Re Sillar, W. Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls, without bill, by such party or parties, as to the Court shall appear to be competent and necessary in that behalf, and service of such petition shall be made upon such person or persons as the Court shall see fit and direct (a); and every

In one case the trustees, after paying in, applied by petition to have the fund distributed as in an administration suit, and the Court directed proper inquiries accordingly as to the persons interested; Re Trower's Trust, 1 L. T. N.S. 54.

The petition should set out the material statements of the affidavit under which the money is paid in, as the affidavit is regarded as a declaration of the trust to which the attention of the Court is to be called; Re Levett's Trust, 5 De G. & Sm. 619; Re Flack's Will, 10 Hare, App. xxx. But the petition must not set out the affidavit in extenso, or at a needless length; Re Curtois, 17 Jur. 852; 10 Hare, App. lxiv., and see ante, p. 1133, note(a).

Where a petition stands over for amendment, by adding a next friend on behalf of the petitioner, it is not necessary to have the petition reanswered; Re Medow's Trusts, 10 Jur. N.S. 536, and see Robinson v. Harrison, 1 Drewr. 307.

[A petition is the proper means of obtaining a stop order, where the fund is over £1000 (see supra), and the application for it is the first application after the payment into Court; Re Day's Trusts, 49 L. T. N.S. 499; Re Toogood's Trusts, 56 L. T. N.S. 703; W. N. 1887, p. 109.]

A claimant may proceed in formâ pauperis under the Act; Re Money, 13 Beav. 109.

A trustee who did not concur with his co-trustees in paying the money into Court, must still be served with any petition under the Act; Re Bryant's Settlement, W. N. 1868, p. 123.

Where an infant is to be served, a guardian ad litem should be appointed; Re Ward's Will, 2 Giff. 122; Re Gillman's Trusts, 1 Ir. R. Eq. 342. Under the Irish Act, guardians ad litem to infants are appointed upon motion; Re Bennett's Trusts, 6 Ir. R. Eq. 337.

The Court will declare the rights of parties upon a petition under the Act; Re Walker's Trusts, 16 Jur. 1154. And where the petitioner, as it turns out, is not himself entitled, the Court, if it be necessary to declare the rights, and the trustees desire the opinion of the Court, will declare the rights and give all the parties their costs, as in a suit under similar circumstances; Re Woollard's Trust, 18 Jur. 1012.

A petition may be presented by a person entitled to an aliquot share without bringing the other parties interested before the Court; Re Befford's Will, 21 L. T. 164. A petition by a person so entitled should ask that the other shares should be carried to the separate accounts of the other persons entitled, in order to save the expense of serving the petition on any future application; Re Hawk's Trust 18 Jur. 33. See Re Young, 5 W. R. 400. Or liberty may be given to the other parties entitled to apply at chambers; Winkworth v. Winkworth, 32 Beav. 233; and see Re Tracey's Trusts, 6 Ir. R. Eq. 271.

Where the claimants to the fund in opposition to the petitioner reside abroad, the Court will give them time to make out their case; Re Hodson's Will, 22 L. J. N.S. Ch. 1055.

(a) See [Orders 7 and 8 of Chancery Funds Amended Orders, 1874,] post, 1142.

[Where on the hearing of a petition class inquiries were directed, and the chief clerk made a certificate finding who were the persons interested in arguing the question in dispute, but several of those persons were not respondents, the petitioner was authorized by the Court to serve a copy of the petition, the order made on the first hearing, and the certificate, on those persons, and the hearing of the petition was adjourned to give the persons served an opportunity of appearing; Re Battersby's Trusts, 10 Ch. D. 228.]

It was intimated by V. C. Wood, on a petition by tenant for life for payment of the income, that for the future he should hold it unnecessary to serve the remainderman; Re Whitling's Settlement, 9 W. R. 830; and see Ex parte Peart, 17 L. J. N.S. Ch. 168. And where the corpus was only carried order made upon any such petition shall have the same authority and effect, and shall be enforced and subject to re-hearing and appeal, in the same manner as if the same had been made in a suit regularly instituted in the Court (a), and if it shall appear that any such trust over to a particular account, service on the remaindermen, who were extremely numerous, was dispensed with; Re Hodges, 6 W. R. 487; and in another case the Court gave no costs to the remainderman, who, the Court said, merely came to look after his own interests; Re Thornton's Trust, 9 W. R. 475.

When money has been paid into Court, and part of it has, by an order of the Court, been carried to the separate account of a cestui que trust, the trustees need not be served again on application by the cestui que trust to have it paid out of Court; Re Young, 5 W. R. 400.

If the trustee try to avoid service, the Court on being satisfied of the fact will make the order without service; Ex parte Baugham, 16 Jur. 325.

Where the trustees had not been heard of for ten years, and the place named for service in the trustees' affidavit had been pulled down, the Court dispensed with service on the trustees, but directed an inquiry at chambers who were the persons entitled; Re Bolton's Will, 18 W. R. 56; 21 L. T. N.S. 413.

It has been held under the Irish Act, 11 and 12 Vict. c. 68, which is similarly worded, that the Court has no jurisdiction to order service upon a person out of the jurisdiction; Ex parte Crawford, 2 Ir. Ch. Rep. 573; Ex parte Bernard, 6 Ir. Ch. Rep. 133. In Re Bonelli's Electric Telegraph Company, 18 L. R. Eq. 655, V. C. Bacon ordered a substituted service, and also service abroad. But in Re Haney's Trusts, W. N. 1874, p. 221, the V. C. expressed a doubt as to service abroad, as the M. R. had previously decided in Re Mewburn's Settled Estates (22 June, 1874) that this could not be done. However the L.JJ. adopted the view of V. C. Bacon, and ruled that the Court has jurisdiction to order service abroad; Re Haney's Trusts, 10 L. R. Ch. App. 275; [and this view has since been acted on by the late M. R. in Re Morant's Trusts, W. N. 1879, p. 144; and followed in Ireland, Re Dunne's Trusts, 1 L. R. Ir. 12. Under the rules of 1883 (which are to be regarded as forming a complete code in reference to service out of the jurisdiction; Re Busfield, 32 Ch. Div. 223), leave has been given to serve a petition under the Trustee Relief Act out of the jurisdiction; Re Ruddiman, Seton, 5th edit. p. 20; and see Re Gordon's Settlement, W. N. 1887, p. 192; but in Re Jellard (39 Ch. D. 424) North, J., held that the Court has no jurisdiction to order such service. The case went to the Court of Appeal, but the point was not there decided.] And see Re Gethin, 9 Ir. R. Eq. 512.

(a) The Court under this Act has as ample jurisdiction as in a suit, and may therefore declare the validity or invalidity of a deed without directing fresh proceedings, if the Court in the exercise of its discretion do not think a suit necessary; Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. C. 607; [or may order a deed to be rectified; Re Bird's Trusts, 3 Ch. D. 214.] But in general the Court will not allow a deed to be impeached upon the petition without a suit; Way's Settlement, 10 Jur. N. S. 1166. In one case V. C. Wood, in disposing of a fund on petition, said that if there were creditors or other unascertained claims, a suit might be necessary, but that otherwise the Court had jurisdiction as in a suit, and might direct an issue to try a question of sanity or the like; Re Allen's Will, Kay App. li. Where trustees of a marriage settlement had transferred the fund into Court, and a petition was presented by a person claiming adversely to the settlement, V. C. Wood disposed of the case upon the petition, no party having objected; but before the Lords Justices, the respondent not consenting, the petition was ordered to stand over that a bill might be filed; Re Fozard's Trust, 1 K. & J. 233; 24 L. J. N.S. Ch. 441; and see Re Bloye's Trust, 2 H. & Tw. 140; 1 Mac. & G. 488; Ex parte Stutely, 1 De G. & Sm. 703.

An order made by the Court for maintenance of an infant out of a fund paid into Court, and to which the infant is entitled, constitutes the in-funds cannot be safely distributed without the institution of one or more suit or suits, the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls may direct any such suit or suits to be instituted (a).

fant a ward of Court; Re Hodges' Settlement, 3 K. & J. 213; [and see De Pereda v. De Mancha, 19 Ch. D. 451; Brown v. Collins, 25 Ch. D. 56.]

(a) The Court directs a suit for its own satisfaction only, and will not authorize the petitioner to commence an action because it may be the more convenient course for making out his title; Re Harris's Trust, 18 Jur. 721. Though a person be not named as a cestui que trust in the affidavit upon which the money was paid in, yet if he can make a primâ facie case, the Court will give him leave to bring an action; Re Jephson, 1 L. T. N.S. 5.

Where a trustee filed a bill instead of paying in under the Trustee Relief Act, the Court allowed him only such costs as he would have been entitled to had he paid in under the Act; Wells v. Malbon, 31 Beav. 48; and see Gunnell v. Whitear, 10 L. R. Eq. 664.

The following is a summary of the decisions in reference to costs under the Act:—

The trustee who is served with the petition is primâ facie entitled to his costs; Re Erskine's Trust, 1 K. & J. 302; Croyden's Trust, 14 Jur. 54; Re Wylly's Trusts, 28 Beav. 458; Re Wright's Trusts, 3 K. & J. 419; Re Headington's Trust, 27 L. J. N.S. Ch. 175; Re Robertson's Trust, 6 W. R. 405; and it is not thought desirable to hold too strict a hand over trustees paying in trust monies; Re Wylly's Trust, 6 Jur. N. S. 906; Re Brocklesby, 29 Beav. 652; Re Bendyshe, 3 Jur. N. S. 727; though it is not matter of course that they should have their costs; Re Elgar, 11 L. T. N.S. 415; Re Lane's Trust, 24 L. T. 181; and see Hankey v. Morley, 4 Jur. N. S. 234; Handley v. Davis, 5 Jur. N. S. 190.

[But a trustee is within Rule 27 (19) of Order 65 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, and if he has been tendered and has accepted 30s. for his costs, he will not be allowed his costs of appearing on the petition, if he comes merely to ask for his costs, and his appearance is otherwise unnecessary; Re Sutton, 21 Ch. D. 855.]

In Ireland the costs of lodging a trust fund in Court are restricted in ordinary cases to 8*l.*; Re Boyd's Trusts, 1 Ir. Rep. Eq. 489. And if they retain more they may be deprived, in consequence, of their costs of appearing on the petition; Re Blayney's Trust, 9 Ir. R. Eq. 413.

A trustee objected to act with a proposed new trustee of whom he disapproved, and on the appointment of such new trustee the old trustee paid the fund into Court, and was allowed his costs; Re Williams' Trust, 6 W. R. 218.

A trustee holding a chose en action to which a married woman is entitled, is justified, having regard to her right to a settlement, in paying it into Court; Re Swan, 2 H. & M. 34. But see contra, Re Roberts' Trusts, 38 L. J. N.S. Ch. 708.

But a trustee who, after accepting the trust, throws it up from caprice soon after, and pays the money into Court, will not have his costs of appearing on the tenant for life's petition; Re Leake's Trusts, 32 Beav. 135.

When the trustee has paid in the fund abusively, as in order to avoid an action about to be brought against him, he will have no costs; Re Waring, 16 Jur. 652; and Re Fagg's Trust, 19 L. J. N.S. Ch. 175. And on the other hand, where a trustee refuses in a proper case to pay the fund into court, and obliges the cestuis que trust to bring an action, the Court will not allow him all his costs of suit, but only such costs as he would have got had he paid the money into Court, and then the plaintiff had presented a petition; Weller v. Fitzhugh, 22 L. T. N.S. 567; Gunnell v. Whitear, 10 L. R. Eq. 664. And where he has transferred the fund into Court without sufficient reason, though he may be allowed his costs of the transfer, he will not be allowed the costs of appearing on the petition; Re Covington's Trust, 1 Jur. N. S. 1157; Re Heming's Trust, 3 K. & J. 40; and see Croyden's Trust, 14 Jur. 54; Re Leake's Trusts, 32 Beav. 135; [and trustees who pay money into Court under the Act when the only question arising might be decided on originating summons under Order 55,

§ IV. And be it enacted, That the Lord Chancellor, with the assistance of the Master of the Rolls or of one of the Vice-Chancellors, shall will not be allowed costs occasioned by such payment in; Re Giles, 55 L. J. Ch. 695;] and in cases of gross misconduct in paying in the fund, the Court has jurisdiction to throw upon the trustee personally the costs of the petition; Re Woodburn's Will, 1 De G. & J. 333; Re Cater's Trust, 25 Beav. 361, 366; Re Knight's Trusts, 27 Beav. 45; Re Foligno's Mortgage, 32 Beav. 131; Re Glendenning, W. N. 1867, p. 191; Re Roberts' Trusts, 38 L. J. N.S. Ch. 708; Re Wise's Trust, 3 Ir. R. Eq. 599; Re Elliott's Trusts, 15 L. R. Eq. 194; [Re Hoskin's Trusts, 5 Ch. D. 229; 6 Ch. Div. 281. But if a trustee is without sufficient reason deprived of his costs, he may semble appeal for them; Turner v. Hancock, 20 Ch. Div. 303, 307; disapproving, Re Hoskin's Trusts, ubi supra; and see supra, p. 1125.]

If the person who pays in is the personal representative of a testator whose will creates the difficulty, the executor should take his costs of paying in the fund out of the testator's estate, but the subsequent costs come out of the fund; Re Cawthorne, 12 Beav. 56; Re Jones, 3 Drew. 679; secus, however, if the trust fund has been severed from the testator's estate, and is paid in by a trustee and not by the executor; Re Lorimer, 12 Beav. 521; Ex parte Lucas, V. C. Knight Bruce, 6 July, 1849.

The Court cannot direct the costs to be paid out of another fund, also paid in by the trustee, but standing to a different account, though it may form part of the testator's residuary estate, and therefore be, per se, liable to costs; Re Hodgson, 18 Jur. 786; S. C. 2 Eq. Rep. 1083; nor out of the testator's residuary estate when it has not been paid in; Re Bartholomew's Will, 13 Jur. 380; and see Re Sharpe's Trusts, 15 Sim. 470; Re Feltham's Trusts, 1 K. & J. 534. See, however, Re Trick's Trusts, 5 L. R. Ch. App. 170. [But the payment of a legacy into Court does not relieve the residuary estate from bearing the costs of an inquiry to ascertain the persons entitled to the legacy; Re Trick's Trusts, 5 L. R. Ch. App. 170; Re Birkett, 9 Ch. D. 576; Re Gibbon's Will, 36 Ch. D. 486, and] where five-sixteenths of a fund paid into Court had lapsed, the Court threw the whole costs on the lapsed shares as constituting part of the residue; Re Ham's Trust, 2 Sim. N. S. 106.

[As the jurisdiction of the Court is limited to the fund paid into Court, if] a trustee deducts his costs before paying in the fund, the Court has no jurisdiction as to the sum deducted; Re Bloye's Trust, 1 Mac. & G. 504; 2 Hall & Tw. 153; Re Barber, 9 Jur. N.S. 1098; Re Fortune's Trusts, 4 Ir. R. Eq. 351; [Re Parker's Will, 39 Ch. Div. 303.] But where the trustee is allowed the costs of the petition, his costs will be taxed, including those which he had deducted; Re Hue's Trusts, 27 Beav. 337; and where a trustee has deducted costs improperly, an action may be brought against him for recovery of the costs so improperly deducted, and the costs of the action will be thrown upon the trustee; Beaty v. Curson, 7 L. R. Eq. 194.

It has been held, though the policy of the decision may be doubtful, that the trustee who is served with a petition will not be allowed in taxation the costs of taking copies of the affidavits filed by the parties beneficially interested; Re Lazarus, 3 K. & J. 555.

Whether on a petition by tenant for life for payment of the dividends the costs should come out of the corpus or out of the income is a point on which the practice has much varied. In favour of payment out of the corpus are the following cases: Re Ross's Trust, 1 Sim. N. S. 196, V. C. Cranworth; Re Staples' Settlement, 13 Jur. 273, V. C. E.; Re Field's Trusts, 16 Beav. 146; Re Butler's Trust, 16 Jur. 324; and Re Leake's Trusts, 32 Beav. 135, Sir J. Romilly; and in support of the contrary view; Ex parte Fletcher, 12 Jur. 619; 17 L. J. N.S. Ch. 169; Ex parte Peart, 12 Jur. 620; 17 L. J. N.S. Ch. 168, V. C. Knight Bruce; Re Lorimer, 12 Beav. 521, Lord Langdale; Re Bangley's Trust, 16 Jur. 682; Re Ingram, 18 Jur. 811, V. C. Kindersley; Re Jepson, 6 March, 1859, V. C. Wood; and Re Hamersley's Settlement, 23 Beav. 267, Sir J. Romilly.

In other cases the costs have been divided, and the costs of the tenant have power and is hereby authorized to make such orders as from time to time shall seem necessary for better carrying the provisions of this Act into effect (a).

for life thrown on the income, and the costs of the trustees and remainderman on the corpus; Re Whitling's Settlement, 9 W. R. 830; Re Tchitchagoff's Will, 12 W. R. 1100; Re Hadland's Settlement, 23 Beav. 266.

In Re Turnley, 1 L. R. Ch. App. 152, Lord Romilly wished the point in question to be submitted to the Lord Chancellor, who directed the costs to be paid out of the corpus.

But the costs cannot be thrown on the corpus without service on the remainderman; Ex parte Peart, 17 L. J. N.S. Ch. 168; Ex parte Fletcher, 17 L. J. N.S. Ch. 169; or on those who sufficiently represent them; Re Greenland's Trust, 1 W. R. 46. And as the necessity of serving the remaindermen would lead to great inconvenience and expense, it was resolved by all the judges that for the future the costs of a petition for payment of dividends should be thrown upon the income, and service upon the remaindermen be dispensed with; Re Marner's Trusts, 12 Jur. N. S. 959, 3 L. R. Eq. 432; Re Cameron, 1 Ir. R. Eq. 258. The rule therefore now is, that upon a petition for payment of dividends only, while the costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by the trustee in paying the money into Court will, where not previously deducted, be directed to be paid out of the corpus (Re Whitton's Trusts, 8 L. R. Eq. 353), the costs of the petitioners and of all persons appearing on the petition will fall upon the income; Re Mason's Trust's, 12 L. R. Eq. 111; Re Whitton's Trust's, 8 L. R. Eq. 353. It was held in some cases, that the costs of the trustee's appearance upon the petition were an exception, and ought to be borne by the corpus (Re Gordon's Trusts, 6 L. R. Eq. 335; Re Wood's Trusts, 11 L. R. Eq. 155), but this has since been determined otherwise; Re Evans' Trusts, 7 L. R. Ch. App. 609; Re Smith's Trusts, 9 L. R. Eq. 374. "It is said," observed L. J. James, "that a difference ought to be made with respect to the appearance of the trustees, but I think that Re Marner's Trusts was intended to apply to all the costs of the petition; and I am the more disposed to follow that construction, because the reasonable course for a tenant for life to pursue, when about to present a petition, is to write to the trustee and tell him that he does not seek to affect the corpus, but only wants his income, and therefore that there is no occasion for the trustee to incur the costs of appearing. In such a case, if the title of the tenant for life be clear the trustee ought not to appear." But it was probably intended by the L. J. that the letter must be accompanied with the tender of a sufficient sum to cover the expense of the trustee's consulting his solicitor; [see now rule 27 (19) of Order 65 of Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883.]

If a person not appearing by the affidavit to have an interest, but who made a claim, be served with the petition and disclaim at the bar, he will not be allowed his costs; Re Parry's Trust, 12 Jur. 615; Re Smith, 3 Jur. N. S. 659.

If the money was paid in from the unreasonable claim of a person who is served with and appears upon the petition, and opposes it, the Court has jurisdiction to throw the costs upon such wrongful claimant; Re Armston's Trusts, 4 N. R. 450; S. C. 4 De G. J. & S. 454.

If the petition be presented by an incumbrancer, whose debt will swallow up the whole fund, and be served on a subsequent incumbrancer with notice that his costs of appearing will be resisted, such subsequent incumbrancer, if he appear, will not have his costs; Roberts v. Ball, 24 L. J. N.S. Ch. 471.

The costs in all cases are in the discretion of the Court; Roberts v. Ball, 24 L. J. N.S. Ch. 471.

(a) [This section has become obsolete, and was repealed by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 78. The general rules and orders relative to this Act now in force are as follows:—

V. And be it enacted, That in the construction of this Act the expression "the Lord Chancellor" shall mean and include the Lord Construction of expression "Lord Chancellor."

SUPREME COURT FUNDS RULES, 1886.

RULE 41. When a trustee or other person desires to lodge (I.) funds in Court in the Chancery Division, under the Act 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, he shall annex to the affidavit to be filed by him pursuant to the said Act a schedule in the same printed form as the lodgment schedule to an order, setting forth—

(a) His own name and address.

(b) The amount and description of the funds proposed to be lodged in Court.

(c) The ledger credit in the matter of the particular trust to which the funds are to be placed.

(d) A statement whether legacy or succession duty (if chargeable) or any part thereof has or has not been paid.

(e) A statement whether the money or the dividends or the securities so to be lodged in Court, and all accumulations of dividends thereon, are desired to be invested in any and what description of Government securities, or whether it is deemed unnecessary so to invest the same.

An office copy of such schedule is to be left with the Paymaster.

RULE 74. When it is stated in the schedule to the affidavit made pursuant to Rule 41, that it is desired that any money to be lodged in Court, or the dividends accruing on any securities to be lodged in Court in pursuance of the Act 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, and the accumulations thereof, shall be invested in any description of Government securities, the Paymaster shall (if or so soon as such money shall amount to or exceed £40, or so soon as dividends accruing on such securities shall amount to or exceed £10) invest the same accordingly, without any order or further request for that purpose. If such money does not amount to £40 (and is not less than £10), the Paymaster shall place such money on deposit without a request for that purpose, unless the said schedule contains a statement that it is deemed unnecessary to place such money on deposit, or unless notice in writing be left at the Pay Office of an order having been made, or of an intended application to the Court, affecting such money, securities, or dividends. Dividends accruing on funds or on investments or accumulations of funds lodged in Court under the said Act prior to the commencement of the Chancery Funds Rules, 1872, may, when, or so soon as they amount to or exceed £10, be invested without any request.

CHANCERY FUNDS AMENDED ORDERS, 1874.

ORDER 5. A person having made a payment or transfer of money or securities into, or a deposit of securities in Court under the above-mentioned Act of the 10th & 11th Vict. c. 96, shall forthwith give notice thereof to the several persons named in his affidavit (II.) to be made in pursuance of Rule 34 of the

[(I.) "Lodge in Court" means pay or transfer into Court or deposit in Court; see Rule 3.]

[(II.) Where the person mentioned in the affidavit could not be found, the Court declined to give any directions as to what would be sufficient notice, but intimated extra-judicially what, under the circumstances, would probably be held to be sufficient; Re Hardley's Trusts, 10 Ch. Div. 664. It will be observed that, under the Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1886, which repealed the Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874, it is not necessary to state in the affidavit the names of the persons interested in or entitled to the fund, and the above order of 1874, though not expressly repealed, has become inapplicable to the practice under the Rules of 1886; Re Graham's Trusts, (1891) 1 Ch. 151, ante, p. 1133; but in a case under the recent Rules, Pearson, J., in order to protect the trustees and prevent useless litigation, directed that notice of the affidavit should be served in the same way and upon the same parties as it would have been if the 34th Rule of the Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874, had remained in force; Re Stening's Trust, 50 L. T. N.S. 586.]

Chancellor, Lord Keeper, and Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal of Great Britain for the time being.

Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874, and the said Act, as interested in or entitled to such money or securities (a).

Order 6. The persons interested in or entitled to any money or securities so paid or transferred into, or deposited in Court, in pursuance of the said Act of the 10th & 11th Vict. c. 96, and named in the affidavit, or any of such persons, or the person so paying or transferring into or depositing in Court may apply by petition, or, in cases where the fund does not exceed 300*l.* cash or 300*l.* in securities (b), by summons as occasion may require, respecting the investment, payment out, or distribution of the money or securities, or of the dividends or interest of such securities.

Order 7. A person who has paid or transferred money or securities into, or deposited securities in Court pursuant to the said Act of the 10th & 11th Vict. c. 96, shall be served with notice of any application made to the Court, or a Judge in Chambers, respecting such money or securities, or the dividends thereof, by any person interested therein or entitled thereto.

Order 8. The persons interested in or entitled to such money or securities shall be served with notice of any application made by the trustee to the Court, or Judge, respecting such money or securities, or the dividends thereof (c).

Order 9. No petition relating to such money or securities as mentioned in the last four preceding Orders shall be set down to be heard, and no summons relating thereto shall be sealed until the petitioner or applicant has first named in his petition or summons a place where he may be served with any petition or summons, or notice of any proceeding or order relating to such money or securities, or the dividends thereof.

No. II.

TRUSTEE RELIEF AMENDMENT ACT.

12 & 13 Vict. cap. 74.

"An Act for the further Relief of Trustees." (28*th July*, 1849.)

Whereas difficulties have arisen in the transfer of securities vested in trustees in certain cases under the provisions of an Act passed in the Session of Parliament holden in the tenth and eleventh years of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees, and it is expedient to make further provision for carrying into effect the objects of the said recited Act: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that if upon any petition presented to the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls in the matter of the said Act it shall appear to the Judge of the Court of Chancery before whom such petition shall be heard, that any monies, annuities, stocks or securities (a) are vested in any persons as trustees, executors, or administrators, or otherwise, upon trusts within the meaning of the said recited Act, and that the major part of such persons (b) are desirous of transferring, paying, or delivering the same to the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery under the provisions of the said recited Act, but that for any reason the concurrence of the other or others of them cannot be had (c), it shall be lawful for such Judge as aforesaid to order and direct such transfer, payment, or delivery to be made by the major part of such persons without the concurrence of the other or others of them; and where any such monies or Government or Parliamentary securities shall be deposited with any banker, broker, or other depositary, it shall be lawful for such Judge as aforesaid to make such order for the payment or delivery of such monies, Govern-

10 & 11 Vict. c. 96.

Court of Chancery may, upon application by majority of trustees, &c., order payment or transfer of trust monies, stocks, or securities into Court of Chancery.

ment or Parliamentary securities, to the major part of such trustees, executors, administrators, or other persons as aforesaid, for the purpose of being paid or delivered to the said Accountant-General, as to the said Judge shall seem meet; and every transfer of any annuities, stocks, or securities, and every payment of money or delivery of securities, in pursuance of any such order, shall be as valid and effectual as if the same had been made on the authority or by the act of all the persons entitled to the annuities, stocks, or securities so transferred, or the monies or securities so paid or delivered respectively, and shall fully protect and indemnify the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, the East India Company, and the South Sea Company (a), and all other persons acting under or in pursuance of such order.

County Courts.

By 51 & 52 Vict. c. 43, s. 67, it is enacted, that the County Courts shall have and exercise all the power and authority of the High Court "in all proceedings under the Trustees Relief Acts, in which the trust estate or fund to which the action or matter relates shall not exceed in amount or value the sum of 500*l.*"

And by sect. 70 of the same Act, it is enacted, that "any moneys, annuities, stocks, or securities vested in any persons as trustees, executors, administrators or otherwise, upon trusts, within the meaning of the Trustee Relief Act, where the same do not exceed in amount or value the sum of 500*l.*, upon the filing by such trustees or other persons, or the major part of them, to or with the registrar of the [county] court within the district of which such persons or any of them shall reside, of an affidavit shortly describing, according to the best of their knowledge, the instrument creating the trust, may, in the case of money, be paid into a post-office savings bank established in the town in which the court is held, in the name of the Registrar of such court, in trust, to attend the orders of the court," and "in the case of stocks or securities may be transferred or deposited into or in the name of the treasurers and registrars of such court, in trust, to attend the orders of the court," &c.

No. III.

TRUSTEE ACT, 1850.

13 & 14 Vict. cap. 60.

"An Act to Consolidate and Amend the Laws relating to the Transfer of Real and Personal Property vested in Mortgagees and Trustees." (5 August, 1850.)

Whereas an Act was passed in the first year of the reign of His late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled An Act for amending the Laws respecting Conveyances and Transfers of Estates and Funds vested in Trustees and Mortgagees, and for enabling Courts of Equity to give effect to their Decrees and Orders in certain cases: And whereas an Act was passed in the fifth year of the reign of His late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled An Act for the Amendment of the Laws relative to Escheats and Forfeitures of Real and Personal Property holden in Trust: And whereas an Act was passed in the second year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled An Act to remove Doubts respecting Conveyances of Estates vested in Heirs and Devisees of Mortgagees: And whereas it is expedient that the provisions of the said Acts be consolidated and enlarged,—Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same (a).

I. (This section was repealed by "The Statute Law Revision Act, 1875.")

II. And, whereas it is expedient to define the meaning in which certain words are hereafter used: It is declared that the several words hereinafter named are herein used and applied in the manner following respectively: (that is to say), Interpretation of terms.

The word "lands" shall extend to and include manors, messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, of every tenure or description, whatever may be the estate or interest therein (a):

The word "stock" shall mean any fund, annuity, or security transferable in books kept by any company or society established or to be established, or transferable by deed alone, or by deed accompanied by other formalities, and any share or interest therein (b):

The word "seised" shall be applicable to any vested estate for life or of a greater description, and shall extend to estates at law and in equity (c), in possession or in futurity, in any lands:

The word "possessed" shall be applicable to any vested estate less than a life estate, at law or in equity, in possession or in expectancy, in any lands:

The words "contingent right," as applied to lands, shall mean a contingent or executory interest, a possibility coupled with an interest, whether the object of the gift or limitation of such interest or possibility be or be not ascertained, also a right of entry, whether immediate or future, and whether vested or contingent:

The words "convey" and "conveyance" applied to any person, shall mean the execution by such person of every necessary or suitable assurance for conveying or disposing to another lands whereof such person is seised, or entitled to a contingent right, either for the whole estate of the person conveying or disposing, or for any less estate, together with the performance of all formalities required by law to the validity of such conveyance, including the acts to be performed by married women and tenants in tail in accordance with the provisions of an Act passed in the fourth year of the reign of His late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled An Act for the abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and the substitution of more simple modes of Assurance (d), and including also surrenders and other acts which a tenant of (a) In one case, where the word "lands" only was used in the vesting order, and the property comprised rent-charges, the order was amended by adding the word "hereditaments;" Re Harrison, 1 Set. on Dec. 516, 4th edit.

(b) The word "stock" includes shares in joint-stock companies; Re Angelo, 5 De G. & Sm. 278; and shares in ships, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91, s. 10.

(c) In suits where all parties beneficially interested are before the Court, it is sufficient for the purchaser to take a conveyance of the legal estate, for the equities of the parties are bound by the order of sale, and no vesting order as to the equitable estate is required or will be made; Re Williams' Estate, 5 De G. & Sm. 515; [and see Cottrell v. Cottrell, 2 L. R. Eq. 330.] See the analogous case under the prior Act, Goddard v. Macaulay, 6 Ir. Eq. Rep. 221.

(d) Thus, where there is an adult tenant for life, with remainder to an infant tenant in tail, with remainders over, a vesting order of the infant's estate with the consent of the tenant for life as protector will bar the entail, and all remainders over; Powell v. Matthews, 1 Jur. N. S. 973; see form of order, 1 Set. on Dec. p. 535, 4th edit.

customary or copyhold lands can himself perform preparatory to or in aid of a complete assurance of such customary or copyhold lands (a) :

The words "assign" and "assignment" shall mean the execution and performance by a person of every necessary or suitable deed or act for assigning, surrendering, or otherwise transferring lands of which such person is possessed, either for the whole estate of the person so possessed or for any less estate :

The word "transfer" shall mean the execution and performance of every deed and act by which a person entitled to stock can transfer such stock from himself to another :

The words "Lord Chancellor" shall mean as well the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain as any Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal for the time being :

The words "Lord Chancellor of Ireland" shall mean as well the Lord Chancellor of Ireland as any Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of Ireland for the time being :

The word "trust" shall not mean the duties incident to an estate conveyed by way of mortgage (b) ; but, with this exception, the words "trust" and "trustee" shall extend to and include implied and constructive trusts (c), and shall extend to and include

(a) See, as to copyholds, Rowley v. Adams, 14 Beav. 130, and post, p. 1163, note (a).

(b) As to the question upon the former Act, 1 W. 4. c. 60, whether the word "trust" included a mortgage," see note (c), p. 836, 3rd edit.

(c) A vendor, after a contract, has been held to be a trustee of shares in a joint-stock bank for the purchaser; Re Angelo, 5 De G. & Sm. 278. But in cases of real estate, if not universally, at least where the alleged trustee can possibly dispute the trust, the constructive trust must first have been declared by the judgment of the Court, and the infant heir of the vendor who died intestate after having contracted to sell real estate is not a constructive trustee for the purchaser unless so declared: Re Carpenter, 1 Kay, 418; [Re Colling, 32 Ch. Div. 333;] Re Burt, 9 Hare, 289; Re Dickenson, 17 L. T. 231; Cust v. Middleton, 7 Jur. N. S. 151; Re Weeding's Estate, 4 Jur. N. S. 707; Re Faulder, W. N. 1866, p. 83; Jackson v. Milfield, 5 Hare, 538; Re Milfield, 2 Ph. 254; [Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, 9 Ch. D. 582.] Re Wise, 5 De G. & Sm. 415, is distinguishable; and see Re Probert's Purchase, 22 L. J. N.S. Ch. 948. But where a vendor died before acceptance of the title having devised the estate to an infant, and the executors prayed that the infant might be declared a trustee within the Act, and that the property on payment of the purchase-money might be conveyed to the purchaser who had accepted the title, and the prayer was supported by the infant's counsel, the Court made the order; Re Lowry's Will, 15 L. R. Eq. 78. [This point is, however, not likely to arise in the future in the case of freeholds, as by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 4, the personal representative of the vendor is empowered to convey, where at his death an enforceable contract is subsisting. Where on the purchase of land by a company the land had been conveyed to the secretary of the company as absolute owner, and no declaration of trust had been executed by him, North, J., doubted whether he had jurisdiction under the Act to appoint a new trustee in the place of the secretary, and required an action to be instituted to establish the trusteeship; Re Martin's Trusts, W. N. 1886, p. 183.]

If the owner of copyholds covenant cases where the trustee has some beneficial interest or estate in the subject of the trust, and shall extend to and include the duties incident to the office of personal representative of a deceased person (a):

The word "lunatic" shall mean any person who shall have been found to be a lunatic upon commission of inquiry in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo:

to surrender, and declares that in the meantime he will stand seised upon trust for the covenantee, the covenantor is a trustee within the Act; Re Collingwood's Trusts, 6 W. R. 536; and see Steele v. Waller, 28 Beav. 466. And even where there is no such declaration, yet if the contract be not in fieri, but has been carried out and completed, the covenantor is a trustee within the Act; Re Cuming, 5 L. R. Ch. App. 72; [Re Bradley's Settled Estate, 54 L. T. N.S. 43; and see Re Colling, 32 Ch. Div. 333.]

If the cestui que trust has sold his equitable interest, and the sale has been completed, the purchaser is then the cestui que trust, and may apply for a transfer of the legal estate; Re Wilkinson's Trust, 10 Jur. N. S. 716; Re Groom, 11 L. T. N.S. 336.

Where a testator had signed an agreement to convey certain easements in compromise of an action, an infant devisee, no title being in question, was held to be a constructive trustee within the Act; Re Taylor, W. N. 1866, p. 5.

Where a compulsory sale had been made to a railway company, and the purchase-money had been paid and possession taken in the lifetime of the ancestor, the case was held to be within the Act; Re Russell's Estate, 12 Jur. N. S. 224; and see Re Badcock, 2 W. R. 386.

A vendor who refused to convey after tender of a deed settled by the judge, or to receive the purchase-money, was declared a trustee, and on the purchaser paying his purchase-money into Court, his solicitor was to execute the conveyance for the vendor; Warrender v. Foster, 1 Set. on Dec. 438, 4th edit.

An executor holding a legacy bequeathed to persons successively is a constructive trustee; Re Davis's Trusts, 12 L. R. Eq. 214.

[An infant who is the sole beneficial owner of stock standing in his name, subject to a provision or direction for his maintenance which is vested in some other person, is a constructive trustee within the Act; Gardner v. Cowles, 3 Ch. D. 304; and see Re Findlay, 32 Ch. D. 221, 641, and see post, p. 1182.]

Where a feme covert is a trustee of stock, the husband, as the Bank acts upon his directions, is a constructive trustee within the Act; Re Wood, 7 Jur. N. S. 323. [See now 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75.]

An heir who takes by descent, but has bound himself on the doctrine of election to hold upon the trusts of the will, is a trustee within the Act; Dewar v. Maitland, 2 L. R. Eq. 834.

Three persons were appointed assignees of a bankrupt; one of them resigned his office and went abroad, and his resignation was accepted by the creditors, and the Court held that the one who had resigned and gone abroad was a trustee within the Act; and an order was made vesting the legal estate in the two acting assignees; Re Joyce's Estate, 2 L. R. Eq. 576; 12 Jur. N. S. 1015.

[(a) For the purposes of the Trustee Act, 1888, the expression "trustee" is to be deemed to include "an executor or administrator, and a trustee whose trust arises by construction or implication of law as well as an express trustee, but not the official trustee of charitable funds," see sect. 1, sub-s. 3, ante, p. 314. A trustee may by virtue of this definition be appointed to perform the duties of an executor; Re Moore, 21 Ch. D. 778; but see Re Willey, W. N. 1890, p. 1, where Cotton, L.J., is reported to have intimated that In re Moore went too far, and that the Court could not appoint a person to discharge duties which belonged only to the office of executor and not to that of trustee; and the petition in that case stood over for evidence that debts and funeral and testamentary expenses had been paid.]

The expression "person of unsound mind" shall mean any person not an infant, who, not having been found to be a lunatic, shall be incapable from infirmity of mind (a) to manage his own affairs:

The word "devisee" shall, in addition to its ordinary signification, mean the heir of a devisee and the devisee of an heir, and generally any person claiming an interest in the lands of a deceased person, not an heir of such deceased person, but by a title dependent solely upon the operation of the laws concerning devise and descent:

The word "mortgage" shall be applicable to every estate, interest, or property in lands or personal estate which would in a Court of equity be deemed merely a security for money:

The word "person" used and referred to in the masculine gender shall include a female as well as a male, and shall include a body corporate (b).

And generally, unless the contrary shall appear from the context, every word importing the singular number only shall extend to several persons or things, and every word importing the plural number shall apply to one person or thing, and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend to a female.

Power to make vesting order as to lands of a lunatic trustee or mortgagee. [Repealed.]

III. (This section and the three following sections, except so far as they relate to Ireland, are repealed by the Lunacy Act, 1890, but are replaced by sections 135 and 136 of that Act, see post, pp. 1189, 1190.) And be it enacted, that when any lunatic or person of unsound mind (c) shall be seised or possessed of any lands upon any trust (d) or by way of mortgage (e), (a) See Re Wakeford, 1 Jon. & Lat. 2 (under 1 W. 4. c. 60); Re Jones, 6 Jur. 545. A person is of unsound mind within this definition if from permanent mental incapacity he is incapable of managing his affairs, although his state of mind is not such as to render him liable to be found lunatic if an inquisition were held on him. Re Martin (34 Ch. Div. 618), overruling Re Phelp's Settlement Trusts (31 Ch. Div. 351); but it is otherwise if the incapacity to transact business, however complete, arises from infirmity of body, Re Barber, 39 Ch. Div. 187.

(b) By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 37, s. 10, the Trustee Act, 1850, is made to extend to a trustee or trustees of the private estates of Her Majesty, her heirs or successors, and any petition or other proceeding for obtaining the benefit of the Act shall be in the name or names of any person or persons authorized by any writing under the sign manual.

(c) Where the unsoundness of mind is contested, the case is not within the Act; Re Walker, Cr. & Ph. 147; Re Campbell, 18 L. T. 202.

(d) See definition of Trust, ante, p. 1147.

(e) See definition of Mortgage, supra. [The Court had jurisdiction under this section to make an order for the transfer of a mortgage vested in a lunatic. Re Nicholson, 34 Ch. Div. 663; Re Pell, 35 W. R. 81; 55 L. T. N.S. 554. Under this and the 20th sections, where new trustees had been appointed in the place of a lunatic and a deceased trustee to act jointly with a continuing trustee the Court made an order vesting in the continuing trustee the right to convey the mortgaged property for the estate of himself and the lunatic; Re Vicat, 33 Ch. Div. 103; and the section was held to apply to the case of a lunatic or person of unsound mind who as one of several trustees was seised or possessed jointly with other persons, Re Jones, 33 Ch. Div. 414; and now sect. 135 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, see post, p. 1190, expressly provides for the case of a lunatic jointly seised or possessed of land on trust.]

(a) It was doubted whether the Lords Justices, though they were in fact intrusted under the Queen's sign manual with the care, &c., of lunatics, had power to exercise the jurisdiction given by the Act to the Lord Chancellor intrusted, &c.; Re Waugh's Trust, 2 De G. M. & G. 279; Re Pattinson, 21 L. J. N.S. Ch. 280. See, however, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 15, removing the doubt, and the 11th section of the Trustee Extension Act, post, p. 1185. [The jurisdiction of the Lords Justices was, by the 7th section of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, rendered exercisable by such of the Judges of the High Court of Justice or Court of Appeal as are intrusted by the Queen's sign manual with the care, &c., of lunatics. By sec. 51 of the same Act, upon the request of the Lord Chancellor, any Judge of the Court of Appeal may sit and act as a Judge of the High Court, and under this section the Judges of the Court of Appeal sitting in lunacy are enabled to act as additional Judges of the Chancery Division not only in all petitions under the Trustee Acts, but in all applications in lunacy which require also an exercise of the jurisdiction of the Chancery Division; Re Platt, 36 Ch. Div. 410. But the jurisdiction of the Lords Justices to act as Judges of the Chancery Division in lunacy matters can only be exercised in aid of their jurisdiction in lunacy; Re Barber, 39 Ch. Div. 187. Sect. 7 of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77 has now been repealed by the Lunacy Act, 1890, and the exercise of the jurisdiction of the "Judge in lunacy" is regulated by s. 108 of that Act, see post, p. 1187.]

In cases of lunacy or unsoundness of mind, the application must have been made exclusively to the Judges so intrusted as aforesaid, as the other Judges had no jurisdiction; Jeffryes v. Drysdale, 9 W. R. 428; Re Ormerod, 3 De G. & J. 249, and cases there cited; and see Re Irby, 17 Beav. 334; Herring v. Clark, 4 L. R. Ch. App. 167; Re Mason, 10 L. R. Ch. App. 273; [Re Stamper, 46 L. T. N.S. 372.]

As the section speaks of conveyance and assignment, the Court had no authority under it to vest a power though an imperative one; Re Porter's Will, 3 W. R. 583. See post, p. 1170.

[Where the person of unsound mind is tenant in tail, it is not necessary in the vesting order to refer to the Fines and Recoveries Act, or to the manner in which the trustee could have conveyed if sane. The order should simply direct the property to vest for all the estate which the person of unsound mind could convey if sane; Mason v. Mason, 7 Ch. Div. 707.]

Where one of several trustees was a lunatic, and it was desired to obtain from the Court an appointment of new trustees in the place of the lunatic and others with a vesting order, the petition had to be intituled in Lunacy and in the Chancery Division; [Re Pearson, 5 Ch. Div. 982; Re Chell, 49 L. T. N.S. 196;] Re Davidson, 20 L. J. N.S. Ch. 644.

As to a person "of unsound mind," who is an infant, see p. 1152, post, note (c).

As to the parties to be served, see p. 1173, post, note (b).

(b) The vesting order being a conveyance, should be so worded as to make it clear by the description what property passes; Re Ord's Trust, 3 W. R. 386.

Where the circumstances require a severance of the property, the Court will make two vesting orders instead of one general one; Brader v. Kerby, W. N. 1872, p. 174. [Where property mortgaged to a lunatic was being sold under the power of sale in the mortgage it seems that resort to a vesting order under this section was necessary notwithstanding sects. 116, 136 of the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853. In Re Harwood, 35 Ch. Div. 470.]

person or persons (a) in such manner and for such estate as he shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee or mortgagee had been sane, and had duly executed a conveyance or assignment (b) of the lands in the same manner for the same estate (c).

Power to discharge any contingent right of a lunatic trustee or mortgagee in respect of lands. [Repealed.]

IV. And be it enacted, that when any lunatic or person of unsound mind shall be entitled to any contingent right in any lands upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to make an order wholly releasing such lands from such contingent right, or disposing of the same to such person or persons as the said Lord Chancellor shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee or mortgagee had been sane, and had duly executed a deed so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

Power to vest stock or chose en action of a lunatic trustee or mortgagee. [Repealed.]

V. And be it enacted, that when any lunatic or person of unsound mind shall be solely entitled to any stock or to any chose en action upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to make an order vesting in any person or persons (d) the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose en action, or any interest in respect thereof (e), and when any person or persons shall be entitled jointly with any lunatic or person of unsound mind to any stock or chose en action upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the said Lord Chancellor to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose en action, or any interest

[(a) The Court will not on the petition of a person absolutely entitled vest the property in the person so entitled, but will appoint a new trustee and vest the property in him, leaving the petitioner to take further steps to put an end to the trust; Re Holland, 16 Ch. Div. 672; but see Re Currie, 10 Ch. Div. 93.]

J. N.S. Ch. 461.]

(c) As to Costs, see sect. 51, and post, p. 1177, note (b).

[(d) The Court of Lunacy declined under this section to make an order vesting the right to transfer the stock in the persons beneficially entitled to it, as that would in effect be an administration of the trust in Lunacy which the Court always refuses, but on a petition instituted in the Chancery Division as well as in Lunacy the Court would appoint the beneficiaries new trustees of the settlement, and vest the right in them in that capacity; Re Currie, 10 Ch. Div. 93.]

(e) Where a person of unsound mind was entitled to a sum of stock as trustee, and also entitled to another sum of the same stock beneficially, as the Bank would not apportion the past dividend between the trust estate and the beneficial estate, the Court in appointing new trustees vested the right to receive the whole dividend in the new trustees upon their undertaking that they would invest in the name of the old trustee so much as belonged to him beneficially; Re Stewart, 2 De G. F. & J. 1; [see Hodges v. Wheeler, 1 Set. on Dec. 4th edit. 522.]

in respect thereof, either in such person or persons so jointly entitled as aforesaid (a), or in such last-mentioned person or persons, together with any other person or persons the said Lord Chancellor may appoint (b).

Power to vest stock or chose en action of a person whose personal representative is a lunatic. [Repealed.]

VI. And be it enacted, that when any stock shall be standing in the name of any deceased person whose personal representative is a lunatic or person of unsound mind, or when any chose en action shall be vested in any lunatic or person of unsound mind as the personal representative of a deceased person, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose en action or any interest in respect thereof, in any person or persons he may appoint.

Power to vest lands of an infant trustee or mortgagee.

VII. And be it enacted, that where any infant (c) shall be seised or possessed of any lands upon any trusts or by way of mortgage (d), it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery (e) to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct (f); and the order shall have

In Re Nash, 16 Ch. Div. 503, where consols were standing in the names of three trustees one of whom was a lunatic, L. J. Cotton refused to make an order vesting the right to transfer until a new trustee had been appointed in the place of the lunatic. But the section clearly gave jurisdiction to vest the right in the other trustees without appointing a new trustee, and where there was no object to be attained by such appointment it was dispensed with; Re Watson, 19 Ch. Div. 384; and see Re Ray, 47 L. T. N.S. 500. Where a mortgage debt and stock were vested in two trustees of a settlement, one of whom was lunatic and the other resident out of the jurisdiction, and new trustees of the settlement had been appointed, the Court made an order vesting the mortgage debt and the right to call for a transfer of the stock first in the trustee resident out of the jurisdiction, and then, it appearing that he was out of the jurisdiction, in the new trustees, Re Batho, 39 Ch. Div. 189.]

(c) A "person of unsound mind" is defined by the 2nd section to mean "any person not an infant, who, not having been found a lunatic, shall be incapable from infirmity of mind to manage his own affairs." And, therefore, where an infant trustee is of unsound mind the case does not fall under the lunacy jurisdiction of the Chancellor, but the ordinary jurisdiction in Chancery; Re Arrowsmith's Trusts, 4 Jur. N. S. 1123, [and the Lunacy Act, 1890 (by sect. 143, see post p. 1192), does not affect the jurisdiction of the High Court as to any lunatic trustee or mortgagee who is an infant]. Power to discharge contingent right of infant trustee or mortgagee to lands.

VIII. And be it enacted, that where any infant shall be entitled to any contingent right in any lands upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order wholly releasing such lands from such contingent right, or disposing of the same to such person or persons as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the infant had been twenty-one years of age, and had duly executed a deed so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

Power to vest lands of a joint trustee out of the jurisdiction.

X. And be it enacted, that when any person or persons shall be seised or possessed of any lands jointly (d) with a person out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or who cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order vesting the lands in the person or persons so jointly seised or possessed, or in such last-mentioned person or persons together with any other person or persons, in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee (e) out of the jurisdiction, or who cannot be found, had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner for the same estate (f).

D. 359; Re Templer's Trusts, 4 N. R. 494; but see McMurray v. Spicer, 5 L. R. Eq. 527.]

(e) The word "trustee" does not include a joint mortgagee. One of the mortgagees being out of the jurisdiction, the mortgage money was paid to the joint account of the joint mortgagees, but the Court refused to make an order; Re Osborn's Mortgage, 12 L. R. Eq. 392.

[But the section is applicable if the mortgagees are trustees of the mortgage money; Re O'Gorman's Trusts, 25 L. R. Ir. 93; and a mortgagee who is a mere nominee of the persons entitled to the mortgage money is a trustee; Re Barber's Mortgage, 58 L. T. N.S. 303.]

(f) The concluding words of this section (as a conveyance by one of several trustees would have the effect of severing the joint tenancy) led to a doubt at one time whether the Court had power under this section to vest the lands in the joint owner within the jurisdiction and another as joint tenants; Re Watt's Settlement, 9 Hare, 106; Re Plyer's Trust, Ib. 220. But the doubt has since been dispelled; Smith v. Smith, 3 Drew. 72; Re Marquis of Bute's Will, Johns. 15.

Power to discharge contingent right of sole trustee out of the jurisdiction to lands.

XI. And be it enacted, that when any person solely entitled to a contingent right in any lands upon any trust shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order wholly releasing such lands from such contingent right, or disposing of the same to such person or persons as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee had duly executed a conveyance so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

Power to discharge contingent right of joint trustee out of the jurisdiction to lands.

XII. And be it enacted, that when any person jointly entitled with any other person or persons to a contingent right in any lands upon any trust shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order disposing of the contingent right of the person out of the jurisdiction or who cannot be found, to the person or persons so jointly entitled as aforesaid, or to such last-mentioned person or persons together with any other person or persons; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee out of the jurisdiction, or who cannot be found, had duly executed a conveyance so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

Power to vest lands held upon trust where it is unknown which of the co-trustees survived.

XIII. And be it enacted, that where there shall have been two or more persons jointly seised or possessed of any lands upon any trust, and it shall be uncertain which of such trustees was the survivor, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the survivor of such trustees had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner for the same estate.

Where it is unknown whether the trustee be living or dead.

Powers to discharge the contingent right of persons unborn who if born would be trustees.

XVI. And be it enacted, that when any lands are subject to a contingent right in an unborn person or class of unborn persons who upon coming into existence would in respect thereof become seised or possessed of such lands upon any trust, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order which shall wholly release and discharge such lands from such contingent right in such unborn person or class of unborn persons, or to make an order which shall vest in any person or persons the estate or estates which such unborn person or class of unborn persons would upon coming into existence be seised or possessed of in such lands.

When such mortgagee shall have died intestate as to such lands, and without an heir, or shall have died and it shall not be known who is his heir or devisee:

And the order of the said Court of Chancery made in any one of the foregoing cases shall have the same effect as if the heir or devisee or surviving devisee, as the case may be, had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner and for the same estate.

And in every case where (the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or) the Court of Chancery, shall, under the provisions of this Act, be enabled to make an order vesting in any person or persons the right to transfer any stock transferable in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of any other company or society established or to be established, it shall also be lawful for (the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or) the Court of Chancery, if it be deemed more convenient, to make an order directing the Secretary, Deputy Secretary, or Accountant General for the time being of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or any officer of such other company or society, at once to transfer or join in transferring the stock to the person or persons to be named in the order (b); and this Act shall be a full and complete indemnity and discharge to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and all other companies or societies, and their officers and servants, for all acts done or permitted to be done pursuant thereto (c).

The same powers given to the Duchy Chamber of Lancaster and the Courts of Chancery of the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham as to lands within their respective jurisdictions as are given by the Act to the Court of Chancery.

XXI. And be it enacted, that as to any lands situated within the Duchy of Lancaster or the counties palatine of Lancaster or Durham, it shall be lawful for the Court of the Duchy Chamber of Lancaster, the Court of Chancery in the county palatine of Lancaster, or the Court of Chancery in the county palatine of Durham, to make a like order in the same cases as to any lands within the jurisdiction of the same Courts respectively as the Court of Chancery has under the provisions hereinbefore contained been enabled to make concerning any lands; and every such order of the Court of the Duchy Chamber of Lancaster,

(a) The conveyance should contain a recital showing that it is made in obedience to the order of the Court, and should be executed by the person appointed to convey in his own name; though the late Vice-Chancellor of England, in a case arising upon the 1 W. 4. c. 60, seems to have considered that the execution by the person appointed to convey, of a deed purporting to be the conveyance of the trustee who refused, would, with a mere reference in the attestation clause to the order appointing the person to convey, be sufficient; Ex parte Foley, 8 Sim. 395.

(b) The person here meant is not a beneficiary, but where a person has become absolutely entitled, the Court can appoint him a trustee, and direct a transfer to him; Re Dickson's Settlement, 27 L. T. N.S. 671; 21 W. R. 220; [and see Re Currie, 10 Ch. Div. 93.]

the Court of Chancery in the county palatine of Lancaster, or the Court of Chancery in the county palatine of Durham, shall, as to such lands, have the same effect as an order of the Court of Chancery: provided always that no person who is anywhere within the limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery shall be deemed by such local Courts to be an absent trustee or mortgagee within the meaning of this Act (a).

Power where joint or sole trustees of stock or choses en action are out of the jurisdiction, or cannot be found, or it is not known whether they are living or dead.

XXII. And be it enacted, that when any person or persons shall be jointly entitled with any person out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery (b), or who cannot be found, or concerning whom it shall be uncertain whether he be living or dead, to any stock or chose en action upon any trust (c), it shall be lawful for the said Court (d), to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof (e), or to sue for or recover such chose

(a) This section does not (nor does 17 & 18 Vict. c. 82) enable the provincial Courts to make orders in lunacy; Re Ormerod, 3 De G. & J. 249.

[The Chancery of Lancaster Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 23), provides that the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster shall from and after the passing of that Act, as regards all persons, bodies corporate, and property within or becoming subject to its jurisdiction, have and exercise the like powers and jurisdiction, and in a similar manner, and subject to the same restrictions in all respects, as the High Court in its Chancery Division now has and exercises, or may, under or by virtue of any Act of Parliament hereafter passed, and not expressly enacting to the contrary thereof, have and exercise, in respect of all persons, bodies corporate, and property within its jurisdiction; and by the Palatine Court of Durham Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 47), s. 8, it is provided that "all the powers and authorities under the Trustee Act, 1850, and by the Act of the fifteenth and sixteenth years of the Queen, chapter fifty-five, exercisable by Her Majesty's High Courts of Justice, and all the provisions therein contained, shall and may be exercised in like manner by the Palatine Court with respect to all lands and personal estate within the county palatine: Provided always that no person who is anywhere within the limits of the jurisdiction of the said High Court shall be deemed by the Palatine Court to be an absent trustee or mortgagee within the meaning of the said Acts."]

(b) Where the trustee out of the jurisdiction is incapacited from lunacy or infancy, the power of the Court must be sought for in the enactments applicable to cases of lunatics and infants, and not in this section. Consequently, in a case arising before the Trustee Extension Act (see 3rd section), the Court had no authority to make a vesting order with respect to stock held by an infant trustee out of the jurisdiction; Cramer v. Cramer, 5 De G. & Sm. 312.

The order should recite the fact that the trustee is out of the jurisdiction; Re Mainwaring, 26 Beav. 172.

As to what will amount to being out of the jurisdiction, see ante, p. 1153, note (d).

When sole trustee of stock or a chose en action refuses to transfer the stock, or receive the dividends, or recover the chose en action.

And be it enacted, that where any sole trustee (c) of any stock or chose en action shall neglect or refuse to transfer such stock or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover such chose en action or any interest in respect thereof, according to the direction of the person absolutely entitled thereto (d), for the space of twenty-eight days next after a request in writing (e) for that purpose shall have been made to him by the person absolutely entitled thereto, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order (f) vesting the

(a) Where the stock is vested in two trustees, one of whom is out of the jurisdiction, the Court has no authority under the first branch of the section to vest the right in the person who asks for it as being the absolute owner; Re Brass's Trust, 4 W. R. 764, but see Ex parte Bradshaw, 2 De G. M. & G. 900. [Where a new trustee had been appointed by deed in the place of the trustee out of the jurisdiction the Court vested the right to transfer in the continuing trustee and the new trustee; Re Blaine's Trusts, W. N. 1886, p. 203.] It does not appear from the report what jurisdiction the Court had to make the order in Re Ryan's Settlement, 9 W. R. 137. The stock was standing in the names of two deceased trustees, and the survivor of them had died intestate, and as letters of administration to him involved no inconvenience, but only expense, the case was not within the purview of the Act, except on the appointment of new trustees; see pp. 1166, note (a), and 1171, note (a).

(b) A. and B. being trustees, the Master found that it was uncertain whether A. was living or dead, but that B. was living. Afterwards B. died. Held that A. was not a sole trustee within the meaning of the 22nd section, as he was not originally the sole trustee; Re Randall's Will, 1 Drew, 401.

(c) Sole trustee may mean the whole number of the co-trustees; see interpretation clause, ante, p. 1149. Re Hartnall, 5 De G. & Sm. 111; [Re Hyatt's Trusts, 21 Ch. R. 978, in which case the order was refused, but it does not appear whether, because the request was not in writing, or, which is more likely, because the petitioner's title was disputed.

(d) A tenant for life is not a person absolutely entitled within the meaning of the Act, except for the purpose of an application limited to the income only; nor is one of two trustees; Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 5 De G. & Sm. 338; more fully reported 16 Jur. 723. But persons duly appointed new trustees are "absolutely entitled;" Ex parte Russell, 1 Sim. N. S. 404; Re Baxter's Will, 2 Sm. & G. App. v.; Re Ellis's Settlement, 24 Beav. 426.

(f) As to the person to be served sole right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof (a), or to sue for and recover such chose en action, or any interest in respect thereof, in such person or persons as the said Court may appoint.

When one of several trustees of stock or a chose en action refuses to transfer the stock or receive the dividends, or recover the chose en action.

XXIV. And be it enacted, that where any one of the trustees of any stock or chose en action shall neglect or refuse to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover such chose en action according to the directions of the person absolutely entitled thereto, for the space of twenty-eight days next after a request in writing for that purpose shall have been made to him or her by such person, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose en action, in the other trustee or trustees of the said stock or chose en action, or in any person or persons whom the said Court may appoint jointly with such other trustee or trustees (b).

When stock is standing in the name of a deceased person, and the personal representative is out of the jurisdiction, or cannot be found, or it is not known whether he is living or dead, or refuses to transfer or receive the dividends.

XXV. And be it enacted, that when any stock shall be standing in the sole name of a deceased person, and his or her personal representative shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found (c), or it shall be uncertain whether such personal representative be living or dead, or such personal representative (d) shall neglect or refuse to transfer such stock, or receive the dividends or income thereof, according to the direction of the person absolutely entitled thereto, for the space of twenty-eight days next after a request in writing for that purpose shall have been made to him by the person entitled as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends under this and the following section, see post, 1173, note (b).

(a) The Court cannot, under this section, make any order as to dividends accrued due subsequently to the date of the request, and à fortiori not as to prospective dividends; Re Hartnall, 5 De G. & Sm. 111. See now sect. 4 of Extension Act.

D. 304, 610; and see Re Hilliard's Settlement Trust, 42 L. T. N.S. 79.]

or income thereof, in any person or persons whom the said Court may appoint.

Vesting order as to stock confers a right to transfer the stock and receive the dividends and indemnifies companies and persons acting in obedience to such order.

XXVI. And be it enacted, that where any order shall have been made under any of the provisions of this Act vesting the right (a) to any stock in any person or persons appointed by (the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or) (b) the Court of Chancery, such legal right shall vest accordingly, and thereupon the person or persons so appointed are hereby authorized and empowered to execute all deeds and powers of attorney, and to perform all acts relating to the transfer of such stock into his or their own name or names or otherwise (c), or relating to the receipt of the dividends thereof, to the extent and in conformity with the terms of such order; and the Bank of England, and all companies and associations whatever, and all persons, shall be equally bound and compellable to comply with the requisitions of such person or persons so appointed as aforesaid, to the extent and in conformity with the terms of such order, as the said Bank of England, or such companies, associations or persons, would have been bound and compellable to comply with the requisitions of the person in whose place such appointment shall have been made, and shall be equally indemnified in complying with the requisition of such person or persons so appointed as they would have been indemnified in complying with the requisition of the person in whose place such appointment shall have been made; and after notice in writing of any such order (of the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or) of the Court of Chancery, concerning any stock, shall have been given, it shall not be lawful for the Bank of England, or any company or association whatever, or any person having received such notice, to act upon the requisition of the person in whose place an appointment shall have been made in any matter whatever relating to the transfer of such stock, or the payment of the dividends or produce thereof.

Effect of vesting order as to chose en action.

XXVII. And be it enacted, that where any order shall have been made under the provisions of this Act, (either by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or) by the Court of Chancery, vesting the legal right to sue for or recover any chose en action or any interest in respect thereof in any person or persons, such legal right shall vest accordingly, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the person or persons so appointed to carry on, commence and prosecute, in his or their own name or names, any action, suit, or other proceeding at law or in equity for the recovery of such chose en action, in the same manner in all respects as the person in whose place an appointment shall have been made could have sued for or recovered such chose en action.

In the case of copyholds, the Court may, with the consent of the lord, vest the lands or appoint a person to make the necessary surrender.

XXVIII. And be it enacted, that whensoever under any of the provisions of this Act, an order shall be made, (either) by (the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or) the Court of Chancery, vesting any copyhold or customary lands in any person or persons, and such order shall be made with the consent (a) of the lord or lady of the manor whereof such lands are holden, then the lands shall, without any surrender or admittance in respect thereof, vest accordingly; and whenever, under any of the provisions of this Act, an order shall be made (either) by (the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or) the Court of Chancery, appointing any person or persons to convey or assign any copyhold or customary lands, it shall be lawful for such person or persons to do all acts and execute all instruments for the purpose of completing the assurance of such lands (b); and all such acts and instruments so done and executed shall have the same effect, and every lord and lady of a manor, and every other person, shall, subject to the customs of the manor and the usual payments, be equally bound and compellable to make admittance to such lands, and to do all other acts for the purpose of completing the assurance thereof, as if the persons in whose place an appointment shall have been made, being free from any disability, had duly done and executed such acts and instruments.

When a decree is made for sale of real estate for payment of debts,

XXIX. And be it enacted, that when a decree shall have been made by any Court of equity directing the sale of any lands for the payment of the debts (c) of a deceased person, every person seised or (a) The Court has power without the consent of the lord to vest in the person nominated by the Court all such estate as was vested in the person in respect of whom the inconvenience to be remedied by the Court arises. Such an order does not affect the interests of the lord, and therefore the petition need not be served upon him. On the order being made, the person in whom the property is vested applies for admission as an ordinary surrenderee would have done. So instead of a vesting order, the Court, without the consent of the lord, may appoint a person to convey the copyholds, and then the person so appointed must surrender, and the surrenderee must be admitted. But to prevent circuity, this section allows the lord to consent to a vesting order, and then the estate will vest without the necessity of any surrender or admission; Paterson v. Paterson, 2 L. R. Eq. 31; S. C. 35 Beav. 506; Re Flitcroft, 1 Jur. N. S. 418; Re Hurst, 1 Set. on Dec. 540, 4th edit.; Re Hey's Will, 9 Hare, 221, overruling Cooper v. Jones, 2 Jur. N.S. 59; Re Howard, 3 W. R. 605.

When on the death of a trustee the customary heir was out of the jurisdiction and the Court appointed a new trustee, the lord claimed two fines, one for the admission of the customary heir and another for the admission of the new trustee, but it was ruled that he could claim one fine only, viz., on the admission of the new trustee; Bristow v. Booth, 5 L. R. C. P. 80.

Where the lord consents, it may be by act in pais, without appearance in Court; Ayles v. Cox, 17 Beav. 585.

possessed of such lands, or entitled to a contingent right therein as heir, or under the will of such deceased debtor, shall be deemed to be so seised or possessed or entitled, as the case may be, upon a trust within the meaning of this Act; and the Court of Chancery is hereby empowered to make an order wholly discharging the contingent right, under the will of such deceased debtor, of any unborn person (a).

XXX. And be it enacted, that where any decree (b) shall be made by any Court of equity for the specific performance of a contract concerning any lands (c), or for the partition (d) or exchange of any lands, or generally when any decree shall be made for the conveyance or assignment of any lands (e), either in cases arising out of the doctrine

(c) See such an order under this Act and the Trustee Extension Act, in Ex parte Mornington, 4 De G. M. & G. 537. [In suits for the specific performance of a contract for a lease the Court has on several occasions made orders under this section appointing a person to convey, or vesting the interests of unborn persons; see Hodgson v. Bower, Howell v. Palmer, 1 Set. on Dec. 4th edit. pp. 529, 530; Hall v. Hale, 51 L. T. N.S. 226; but in Grace v. Baynton, 25 W. R. 506, the late M. R. expressed his opinion that in such a case the Court had no power either to appoint a person to convey in the place of a party refusing to execute the lease, or to make a vesting order.]

(d) In a partition suit, instead of giving an infant entitled to a share a day to show cause, the Court may declare him to be a trustee of such parts of the property as are allotted to other parties; Bowra v. Wright, 4 De G. & Sm. 265.

Where a lunatic was interested in an undivided share, and a partition was decreed with a declaration that the lunatic was a trustee within the Act, the L. JJ. authorized the committee of the estate to convey by an order made under the Trustee Act, and under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70 (repealed by the Lunacy Act, 1890, see post, p. 1187); Re Bloomar, 2 De G. & J. 88. But it was afterwards held that the L.JJ. had jurisdiction to make a vesting order under the Trustee Act; Re Molyneux, 4 De G. F. & J. 365.

(e) In a foreclosure suit by an equitable mortgagee, the Court in making an absolute decree for foreclosure and directing a conveyance, can add a declaration that the mortgagor is a trustee for the mortgagee, and make a vesting order; Lechmere v. Clamp (No. 2), 30 Beav. 218; S. C. (No. 3), 31 Beav. 578; [and in a recent case of an equitable mortgage, where the mortgagor had died having devised his estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and the trustees having disclaimed, the legal estate descended to the heir of the mortgagor, who was an infant and was made a defendant to a foreclosure action, the Court, in making the usual foreclosure decree, inserted a declaration that "in case the plaintiffs were not redeemed within six months, the infant should be a trustee for them within the Act, and that his mother, who was executrix of the mortgagor, should be ordered to convey on his behalf;" Foster v. Parker, 8 Ch. D. 147; but where the mortgagor who had created an equitable mortgage by deposit died intestate, and the estate descended to the infant heir subject to the mortgage, the judgment directed the infant to convey when he attained twenty-one, and gave him a day to show cause; Mellor v. Porter, 25 Ch. D. 158. "This section applies to all cases where there is a judgment against an infant for an immediate conveyance, but this is not the form of a judgment for foreclosure in the Cotton and Lindley considered that it was not proper to reappoint trustees of the validity of whose appointment under the power there was no doubt, and declined to make such an order, and in the subsequent case in Chancery of Re Dewhirst's Trusts, 33 Ch. Div. 416, the Court of Appeal followed Re Vicat, and held that the earlier authorities must be treated as over-ruled; and see Re Gardiner's Trusts, 33 Ch. D. 590;] Re Driver's Settlement, 19 L. R. Eq. 352. But where such an order has been made, the Court, before making it, has required evidence of the fitness of the persons to be appointed; Re Maynard's Settlement, 16 Jur. 1084.

(a) Where it is sought to substitute a trustee in the place of a lunatic trustee, the application must be made in lunacy; Re Ormerod, 3 De G. & J. 249, and cases there cited; Re Davidson, 20 L. J. N.S. Ch. 644; Re Waugh's Trust, 2 De G. M. &. G. 279; Re Good Intent Benefit Society, 2 W. R. 671; Jeffryes v. Drysdale, 9 W. R. 428; see Trustee Extension Act, s. 10, [repealed by the Lunacy Act, 1890, but replaced by s. 141 of that Act, see post p. 1191,] and see Re Burton's Trusts, 6 Ir. R. Eq. 270.

On an application for the appointment of new trustees and a vesting order where the legal estate is vested in three persons, one of whom is a lunatic, the petition should be presented in Lunacy as well as in Chancery; Re Mason, 10 L. R. Ch. App. 273; [Re Duce's or Druce's Trusts, 30, W. R. 759; 46 L. T. N.S. 669; but where the application is merely for the appointment of new trustees and no vesting order is required, the order may be made in Chancery only; Re Vicker's Trusts, 3 Ch. D. 112. Where there were originally three trustees, and a new trustee had been appointed under a power, in the place of one of the trustees who was a lunatic, it was held that a petition for a vesting order must be entitled in Chancery as well as in Lunacy, as otherwise the vesting order would sever the joint tenancy, and that the new trustee must be reappointed by the Court before a vesting order could be made; Re Pearson, 5 Ch. Div. 982; Re Chell, 49 L. T. N.S. 196. Where the existing trustee was of unsound mind and out of the jurisdiction, new trustees were appointed in Chancery and a vesting order made under sect. 9; Re Gardner's Trusts, 10 Ch. D. 29.]

If the power of appointing new trustees be in the tenant for life who is a lunatic, the Court will not appoint a new trustee under the Act until the appointment of a committee; Re Parker's Trusts, 32 Beav. 580.

In an application to the Court, for XXXIII. And be it enacted, that the person or persons who, upon the making of such order as last aforesaid, shall be trustee or trustees, the appointment of new trustees of a settlement, it was objected that the deed was invalid, but the Court refused to enter into that question, and appointed new trustees to protect the property; Re Matthews, 26 Beav. 463.

The decisions were formerly in conflict, whether under this section the Court could appoint new trustees in a case where there was no existing trustee, Vice-Chancellor Parker holding the affirmative; Re Tyler's Trust, 5 De G. & Sm. 56; and Vice-Chancellor Turner the negative; Re Hazeldine, 16 Jur. 853. And see Re Frost's Settlement, 15 Jur. 644. But all doubt for the future has been removed by the 9th section of the Trustee Extension Act.

The Court in appointing new trustees under this section does not limit itself necessarily to the number named in the original instrument of trust. Thus it has appointed two instead of one; Tunstall's Will, 4 De G. & Sm. 421; and has added two new trustees to the two original trustees; Re Baycott, 5 W. R. 15. But it never appoints a single trustee where there were originally more trustees than one; Re Ellison's Trust, 2 Jur. N. S. 62; Re Porter's Trust, 2 Jur. N. S. 349; Re Tunstall, 15 Jur. 645; Re Dickinson's Trust, 1 Jur. N. S. 724. But where there was only one trustee originally and the trust was coming to an end the Court appointed a single trustee; Re Reynault, 16 Jur. 233. The Court will appoint two trustees where there were originally three; Bulkeley v. Earl of Eglinton, 1 Jur. N. S. 994; Re Marriot's Settlement, 18 L. T. N.S. 749; or will appoint three where there were originally four; Emmet v. Clarke, 7 Jur. N. S. 404; and where a fund was bequeathed to a single trustee upon trust for a person for life, with remainder to two others, and the remaindermen petitioned for the appointment of an additional trustee, the Court made the order but threw the costs upon the remaindermen; Re Brackenbury's Trusts, 10 L. R. Eq. 45; [Re Gregson's Trusts, 34 Ch. D. 209.]

In one case, where there was a power of appointing new trustees, with a direction that the number might be augmented or reduced, and one of the three trustees wished to retire, but no new trustee could be found, the Court appointed the two continuing trustees to be the sole trustees; Re Stokes' Trusts, 13 L. R. Eq. 333; [and this decision was subsequently followed in Re Tatham's Trusts, W. N. 1877, p. 259; Re Harford's Trusts, 13 Ch. D. 135; Re Gibbin's Trusts, W. N. 1880, p. 99; Re Shipperdson's Trusts, 49 L. J. N.S. Ch. 619; Re Northorp, 29 W. R. 134; and see Re Mare's Trusts, W. N. 1887, p. 232; Re Fowler's Trusts, 55 L. T. N.S. 546] but in Re Colyer, 50 L. J. N.S. Ch. 479, L. J. Cotton, in a Lunacy petition, declined to follow it, and required the full number of trustees to be made up; and in Re Aston, 23 Ch. Div. 217, the late M. R., with the concurrence of the other members of the Court, while adhering to his decision in Re Harford's Trusts, declined to follow it, on the ground of L. J. Cotton's objection, and to avoid a conflict of decisions between the practice of different members of the Court; and see Re Lamb's Trusts, 28 Ch. D. 77; Re Gardiner's Trusts, 33 Ch. D. 590. But where the whole of the fund is immediately divisible, the Court will not require the appointment of a new trustee; Re Martyn, 26 Ch. Div. 745; Re Lamb's Trust, ubi supra; and in one case where an action was pending to execute the trusts, the Court dispensed with a new trustee on the continuing trustees undertaking to bring the trust funds immediately into Court in the action; Davies v. Hodgson, 32 Ch. D. 225.]

In the case of a charity, the Court appointed ten new trustees and vested the estate in the whole body, and directed that when reduced to three the trustees should apply at Chambers for the appointment of new trustees; Re Bergholt, 2 Eq. Rep. 90.

The Court will not [in general] appoint persons trustees who are resident out of the jurisdiction; Re Guibert, 16 Jur. 852; Re Curtis's Trust, 5 Ir. R. Eq. 429; [but the Court has in several cases, where the special circumstances rendered that course advisable, appointed such trustees; Re Liddiard 14 Ch. D. 310; Re Austen's Settlement, 38 L. T. N.S. 601; Re Cunard's Trusts, 48 L. J. N.S. Ch. 192; 27 W. R. 52; Re Hill's Trusts, W. N. 1874, p. 228; Re Freeman's Settlement, 37 Ch. D.

The husband of a cestui que trust was appointed jointly with another, on the husband's undertaking that if he became sole trustee he would immediately take steps for the appointment of a co-trustee; Re Hattatt's Trusts, 21 L. T. N.S. 781; 18 W. R. 416; [Re Burgess's Trusts, W. N. 1877, p. 87; Re Lightbody's Trusts, 52 L. T. N.S. 40; but this undertaking was not required in Re Jesson (In Lunacy, 7 Aug. 1878, M.S.), where three new trustees were appointed, one of whom was the husband of the tenant for life.] In another case one of the firm of solicitors who acted for the petitioners was appointed trustee; Re Brentnall's Trusts, W. N. 1872, p. 77.

Though a cestui que trust may apply for the appointment of new trustees by petition under the Act, he is not precluded from instituting a suit for that purpose; Legg v. Mackrell, 1 Giff. 165; 4 L. T. N.S. 568. But if he adopt the latter course instead of presenting a petition, the Court may make the offending party answerable for the difference of the costs; Thomas v. Walker, 18 Beav. 521.

[Upon an originating summons for administration and the appointment of new trustees, all persons interested being parties, the Court, in the exercise of its general jurisdiction, made an appointment; Re Allen, 56 L. J. Ch. 779; 56 L. T. N.S. 611, and see O. lv. r. 13a, post, p. 1172.]

Where there are two distinct trust estates under the same will, but only one set of trustees, the Court, with the consent of the representative of the surviving trustee, will appoint new trustees of one estate without dealing with the other estate; Re Dennis, 12 W. R. 575; and generally the Court has assumed the like power of appointing separate trustees of separate shares; Re Cotterill's Trusts, W. N. 1869, p. 183; Re Cunard's Trusts, 48 L. J. N.S. Ch. 129; 27 W. R. 52; Re Paine's Trusts, 28 Ch. D. 725; Re Moss's Trusts, 37 Ch. D. 513; and sect. 5 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 39, now expressly authorizes this to be done. Under that section the application may be made although the trusts of the separate shares may in certain events become identical; Re Hetherington's Trusts, 34 Ch. D. 211; but not unless an appointment of new trustees of the whole property is being made; Savile v. Couper, 36 Ch. D. 520; Re Nesbitt's Trusts, 19 L. R. Ir. 509; but this latter restriction does not apply when the appointment is within the Trustee Act; Re Moss's Trusts, ubi supra.

The Court can appoint new trustees under this section where a trust is an office without any estate; Re Boyce, 4 De G. J. & Sm. 205; 10 Jur. N. S. 138; but in such a case where the trustee was a lunatic, the order should have been made both in Chancery and Lunacy; S. C. see ante, p. 1150, note (a). But by the 10th section of the Extension Act the order could be made in lunacy only; Re Owen, 4 L. R. Ch. App. 782. [Re Rolls Hoare, W. N. 1888, p. 94; and see now the Lunacy Act, 1890, sect. 141, post, p. 1191.] The Court (notwithstanding the 197th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134) appointed new trustees of a creditors' deed; Re Price's Trust Deed, 6 L. R. Eq. 460; Re Bache's Trust, 16 W. R. 1078; Re Raphael's Trust Estate, 9 L. R. Eq. 233; Re Donisthorpe, 10 L. R. Ch. App. 55.

In addition to the evidence of the necessary facts to bring the case within the Act, the Court before appointing new trustees requires evidence by affidavit of the fitness of the proposed trustees, and their consent to act; Re Battersby's Trust, 16 Jur. 900. But if the evidence be satisfactory the Court will make the order at once, without a reference; Re Tunstall, 15 Jur. 645. [In ordinary cases an affidavit of fitness by one responsible person is sufficient, and the costs of a second affidavit may be disallowed, but if the trust fund be of large amount, the evidence of a second person may be required; Re Hartley's Will, W. N. 1879, p. 197; Re Arden, W. N. 1887, p. 166. Where the proposed new trustee has been

And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful (a) for the said Court of Chancery upon making any order (b) for appointing a new trustee or new trustees, either by the same or by any subsequent order (c), to direct that any lands subject to the trust (d) shall vest in the person or persons who upon the appointment shall be the trustee or trustees, for such estate as the Court shall direct; and such order shall have described simply as "gentleman" the Court has disallowed the costs of the affidavit on the ground of its being useless, owing to the vagueness of the description; Re Horwood, 55 L. T. N.S. 373; Re Orde, 24 Ch. Div. 271; and the deponent by whom the affidavit is made should be described fully and not merely as "gentleman;" Re Horwood, ubi sup.; and as to the form of affidavit of fitness, see Re Castle Sterry's Trusts, W. N. 1888, p. 179.]

Where the trust fund is the subject of a suit, the affidavit of the solicitor in the cause is not the proper evidence of the fitness of the new trustee, as it is the trustees' duty to watch the solicitor; Grundy v. Buckeridge, 22 L. J. N.S. Ch. 1007.

The new trustees need not appear upon the petition to consent; Re Draper's Settlement, 2 W. R. 440; though they may appear to consent; Re Parke's Trust, 21 L. T. 218. If they do not appear an affidavit that the proposed new trustees will consent is insufficient; Re Parke's Trust, 21 L. T. 218; and their written consent must be proved. [But now by Order 38, r. 19a, a written consent signed by the trustee and verified by the signature of his solicitor is sufficient evidence of his consent. This order does not apply to proceedings in lunacy; Re Wilson, a lunatic, 31 Ch. Div. 522; but it applies to proceedings in Chancery, although entitled in lunacy also; Re Hume (No. 2), 35 Ch. Div. 457.]

In one order the Court inadvertently appointed an alien a trustee and afterwards refused to substitute a natural born subject without the consent of the Crown, which was not given. The order was then reheard by the same judge pro formâ and discharged, and a natural born subject appointed in the place of the alien; Re Giraud, 32 Beav. 385. See now 33 Vict. c. 14, s. 2. Where the cestuis que trust were living abroad and English trustees could not be found, the Court appointed aliens; Re Hill's Trusts, W. N. 1874, p. 228; [and see ante, p. 1168.]

As to the parties to be served on applications for the appointment of new trustees, see note (b), p. 1173, infra.

(a) The late Vice-Chancellor Parker was not disposed to make a vesting order in cases where a conveyance could be had; Langhorn v. Langhorn, 21 L. J. N.S. Ch. 860. But it is clear that the Court has power to make, and according to the present practice, it frequently does make, vesting orders even where there is no incapacity in the person seised or possessed of the legal estate to convey to the new trustee; Re Manning's Trusts, Kay, App. xxviii.

[(b) Where a trustee, ordered to transfer stock, died before the completion of an order appointing new trustees and vesting the estate, the petition was amended and the order was re-made so as to bear date subsequently to the production of the necessary evidence; Re Havelock's Trusts, 11 Jur. N. S. 906; 35 L. J. Ch. 228; 14 W. R. 26, 174.]

(c) The new trustees may be appointed in a suit, and a vesting order may be made subsequently. See Re Hughes's Settlement, 2 H. & M. 695.

(d) If the lands be leaseholds for a term of years, the Court can, under this section, make a vesting order, and without the concurrence of the landlord, unless there was a restriction against alienation; Re Matthew's Settlement, 2 W. R. 85, &c.; [Re Driver's Settlement, 19 L. R. Eq. 352; Re Dalyleish's Settlement, 4 Ch. Div. 143, reversing S. C. 1 Ch. D. 46; Re Rathbone, 2 Ch. Div. 483;] see ante, p. 1156, note (a). But see Re Farrant's Trust, 20 L. J. Ch. 532. And the Court has jurisdiction to vest the estate though it has escheated to the Crown, provided the Crown consent; Re Martinez' Trust, W. N. 1870, p. 70; 22 L. T. N.S. 403; and see sect. 15, of this Act.

Power of the Court to vest right in the trustees to call for transfer of stock or sue for any chose en action.

XXXV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said Court of Chancery, upon making an order for appointing a new trustee or new trustees, either by the same or by any subsequent order (b), to vest the right to call for a transfer of any stock (c) subject to the trust, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover any chose en action, subject to the trust, or any interest in respect thereof, in the person or persons who upon the appointment shall be the trustee or trustees (d).

Old trustees not to be discharged from liability.

XXXVI. And be it enacted, that any such appointment by the Court of new trustees, and any such conveyance, assignment, or transfer as aforesaid, shall operate no further or otherwise as a discharge to any former or continuing trustee than an appointment of new trustees under any power for that purpose contained in any instrument would have done.

(c) The Court has no power under this section to vest the right to the stock itself, but only the right to call for a transfer; and an order professing to vest the right to the stock was accordingly discharged; Re Smyths' Settlement, 4 De G. & Sm. 499; but see now sect. 6 of the Trustee Extension Act, and p. 1183, post, note (e).

The Court has power under this section to vest the right to stock standing in the name of a deceased person who has no personal representative; Re Herbert's Will, 8 W. R. 272. [See Re Crowe's Trusts, 14 Ch. D. 304, 610.]

The Court will not make a vesting order which would lend any sanction to a past breach of trust; Re Harrison, 22 L. J. N.S. Ch. 69. And the Court, as distinct from the L. C. & L. JJ., will not make a vesting order where the old trustee in whom the property is vested is a lunatic; Re Smith's Trusts, 4 Ir. R. Eq. 180.

[Where part of the trust funds had been invested in unauthorized securities, and it was desired to sell them and reinvest the proceeds in proper securities, the Court vested in the new trustees the right to call for a transfer of the funds to themselves, or to any purchaser or purchasers, the trustees undertaking to hold the proceeds on the trusts of the settlement; Re Peacock, 14 Ch. Div. 212.]

And be it enacted, that any person or persons entitled in manner aforesaid to apply for an order from the said Court of Chancery, (or from the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid,) (b) may, should he so think fit, present a petition (c) in the first instance to the Court of Chancery, (or to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid,) for such order as he may deem himself entitled to (d), and may give (a) A person contingently entitled to a beneficial interest is within the meaning of the Act; Re Sheppard's Trusts, 8 Jur. N. S. 711, reversed 1 N. R. 76; 4 De G. F. & J. 423.

In sales by the Court the purchaser, as beneficially interested in the property sold, is within the meaning of the section; Ayles v. Cox, 17 Beav. 584; Rowley v. Adams, 14 Beav. 130. And the plaintiffs in the suit, as beneficially interested in the proceeds, are also within the meaning of the section; Re Wragg, 1 De G. J. & S. 356. And of course the purchaser or several purchasers and the plaintiffs can join as co-petitioners; Rowley v. Adams, 17 Beav. 130; see 135.

Committees of a lunatic cestui que trust are not beneficially interested within the meaning of the section; Re Bourke, 2 De G. J. & S. 426.

(b) See ante, p. 1157, note (c).

(c) Rule 13a of R. S. C., O. 55, which came into operation in June, 1889, provides, "that in all cases in which the Court has jurisdiction to appoint new trustees upon petition, an application may be made to a judge in chambers by summons, and thereupon new trustees may be appointed; and by the same or by any subsequent orders to be made on the same or any other summons for the purpose, such vesting and other consequential orders may be made as the Court has jurisdiction to make upon petition for the appointment of new trustees. Every such summons shall be intituled in the same manner as the petition seeking the like relief ought to have been, and shall be served upon the same persons upon whom the petition ought to have been served."

Where trustees have been appointed out of Court, this rule does not apply, and a vesting order can only be obtained on petition; Re Peach, 33 Sol. Jo. 575.

The particular sections under which the Court is asked to make an order should be indicated in the petition (or summons); Re Moss's Trusts, 37 Ch. D. 513; Re Hall's Settlement, 58 L. T. N.S. 76.

In a complicated case a petition may be presented, notwithstanding the rule, and the costs thereof allowed; Re Morris's Settlement, 60 L. T. N.S. 96; 37 W. R. 317; W. N. 1889, p. 31.

Where trustees had been appointed by the Court in an administration action, and an application by summons in the action for the appointment of new trustees had been refused on the ground that the above rule applies to originating summonses only, North, J., on motion under sect. 43, made an order referring it to Chambers to appoint new trustees; Re Kay, W. N. 1889, p. 80.

In orders against a lunatic trustee, the committee of the estate must be served, as the lunatic trustee may have some claim for costs or otherwise; Re Saumarez, 8 De G. XLII. And be it enacted, that upon the hearing of any such (motion or) (b) petition, whether any (certificate or) report from a Master shall have been obtained or not, it shall be lawful for the Court, (or the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid,) to dismiss such (motion or) petition, with or without costs, or to make an order thereupon in conformity with the provisions of this Act.

Power to make an order in a cause.

And be it enacted, that whensoever in any cause or matter, either by the evidence adduced therein, or by the admissions of the parties, or by a report of one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, the facts necessary for an order under this Act shall appear to such Court to be sufficiently proved, it shall be lawful for the said Court, either upon the hearing of the said cause, or of any petition or motion (c) in the said cause or matter, to make such order under this Act (d).

R. 428. [In Frodsham v. Frodsham, 15 Ch. Div. 317, it was held by the Court of Appeal, reversing the late M. R., that, having regard to the recital in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 134, s. 16, Cons. Ord. xxxv. rule 1, and the practice which had prevailed ever since, it was so doubtful whether there was jurisdiction to make a vesting order in chambers, except in cases provided for by general order, as to render it unsafe to make such orders. And see Re Moate's Trust, 22 Ch. D. 635. But where the matter had in the first instance been brought before the Court upon petition, it was competent to the judge who heard it to mould his order so as to direct the disposal in chambers of any of the questions arising on the petition. The making of a vesting order may thus be referred to chambers, but an order so made in chambers should state so much of the previous order as directed any inquiry preliminary to the vesting order, and as gave liberty to apply in chambers for a vesting order, and should also state the certificate which followed the inquiry; Re Tweedy, 28 Ch. Div. 529. Orders made by the Court of Chancery, founded on certain allegations, to be conclusive evidence of the matter contained in such allegations.

XLIV. And be it enacted, that whenever any order shall be made under this Act, (either by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or) by the Court of Chancery, for the purpose of conveying or assigning any lands, or for the purpose of releasing or disposing of any contingent right, and such order shall be founded on an allegation of the personal incapacity of a trustee or mortgagee, or on an allegation that a trustee or the heir or devisee of a mortgagee is out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery or cannot be found, or that it is uncertain which of several trustees, or which of several devisees of a mortgage, was the survivor, or whether the last trustee, or the heir or last surviving devisee of a mortgage be living or dead, or on an allegation that any trustee or mortgagee has died intestate, without an heir, or has died and it is not known who is his heir or devisee, then in any of such cases the fact that (the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or) the Court of Chancery, has made an order upon such an allegation shall be conclusive evidence of the matter so alleged in any Court of law or equity upon any question as to the legal validity of the order: Provided always that nothing herein contained shall prevent the Court of Chancery directing a reconveyance or re-assignment of any lands conveyed or assigned by any order under this Act, or a redisposition of any contingent right conveyed or disposed of by such order; and it shall be lawful for the said Court to direct any of the parties to any suit concerning such lands or contingent right to pay any costs occasioned by the order under this Act, when the same shall appear to have been improperly obtained.

Jurisdiction in respect of trustees of charities or societies.

XLV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for (the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or) the Court of Chancery, to exercise the powers herein conferred for the purpose of vesting any lands, stock, or chose en action in the trustee or trustees of any charity or society over which charity or society the said Court of Chancery would have jurisdiction upon suit duly instituted (a), whether such trustee or trustees shall have been duly appointed by any power contained in any deed or instrument, or by the decree of the said Court of Chancery, or by order made upon a petition to the said Court under any statute authorizing the said Court to make an order to that effect in a summary way upon petition.

No escheat or forfeiture of real or personal property held upon trust or mortgage by reason of any attainder or conviction of the trustee or mortgagee.

XLVI. And be it enacted, that no lands, stock, or chose en action vested in any person upon any trust or by way of mortgage, or any profits thereof, shall escheat or be forfeited to her Majesty, her heirs, or successors, or to any corporation, lord or lady of a manor, or other person, by reason of the attainder or conviction for any offence of such trustee or mortgagee, but shall remain in such trustee or mortgagee, or survive to his or her co-trustee, or descend or vest in his or her representative, as if no such attainder or conviction had taken place (a).

Act not to prevent escheat or forfeiture of beneficial interest of the trustee or mortgagee.

XLVII. And be it enacted, that nothing contained in this Act shall prevent the escheat or forfeiture of any lands or personal estate vested in any such trustee or mortgagee, so far as relates to any beneficial interest therein of any such trustee or mortgagee, but such lands or personal estate, so far as relates to any such beneficial interest, shall be recoverable in the same manner as if this Act had not passed (b).

Money payable to infants or lunatics in discharge of lands, stock or choses en action dealt with by the Court under the Act may be paid into Court.

And be it enacted, that where any infant or person of unsound mind shall be entitled to any money payable in discharge of any lands, stock, or chose en action conveyed, assigned, or transferred under the Act, it shall be lawful for the person by whom such money is payable to pay the same into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General, in trust in any cause then depending concerning such money, or, if there shall be no such cause, to the credit of such infant or person of unsound mind, subject to the order or disposition of the said Court; and it shall be lawful for the said Court, upon petition in a summary way, to order any money so paid to be invested in the public funds, and to order payment or distribution thereof, or payment of the dividends thereof, as to the said Court shall seem reasonable; and every cashier of the Bank of England who shall receive any such money is hereby required to give to the person paying the same a receipt for such money, and such receipt shall be an effectual discharge for the money therein respectively expressed to have been received.

Court may make a decree in the absence of a trustee who is merely such, and cannot be found.

XLIX. And be it enacted, that where in any suit commenced or to be commenced in the Court of Chancery it shall be made to appear to the Court by affidavit that diligent search and inquiry has been made after any person made a defendant, who is only a trustee, to serve him with the process of the Court, and that he cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to hear and determine such cause, and to make such absolute decree therein against every person who shall appear to them to be only a trustee, and not otherwise concerned in interest in the matter in question, in such and the same manner as if such trustee had been duly served with the process of the Court, and had appeared and filed his answer thereto, and had also appeared by his counsel and solicitor at the hearing of such cause: Provided always, that no such decree shall bind, effect, or in anywise prejudice any person against whom the same shall be made, without service of process upon him as aforesaid, his heirs, executors, or administrators, for or in respect of any estate, right, or interest which such person shall have at the time of making such decree for his own use and benefit, or otherwise than as a trustee as aforesaid (a).

L. (This section was repealed by "The Statute Law Revision Act, 1875.")

LI. And be it enacted, that (the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, and) the Court of Chancery, may order the costs and expenses of and relating to the petitions, orders, directions, conveyances, assignments, and transfers to be made in pursuance of this Act, or any of them, to be paid and raised out of or from the lands or personal estate, or the rents or produce thereof, in respect of which the same respectively shall be made, or in such manner as the said (Lord Chancellor or) Court shall think proper (b). Costs may be directed to be paid out of the estate.

(a) In Westhead v. Sale, 6 W. R. 52, the Court directed the Records and Writ Clerk to certify that the cause was ready for hearing in the absence of a trustee who could not be found.

(b) The prayer as to the costs should not contain the words "incidental to or consequent" upon the application, as they give rise to uncertainty; Re Fellows' Settlement, 2 Jur. N. S. 62.

[Costs will not be allowed on the higher scale merely on the ground that the trust funds are large; Re Spettigue's Trusts, 32 W. R. 385.]

Where an infant trustee was ordered to convey, it was said that the infant was entitled to the same costs as an adult, and the order was made, "the other party undertaking to pay such costs as should appear to be reasonably incurred;" Re Cant, 10 Ves. 554 (decided under 7 Anne, c. 19).

Where a mortgaged estate has descended to an infant heir of the mortgagee, and the mortgagor is asking for a reconveyance on payment of principal and interest, the infant is also entitled to the costs of any inquiry as to the infancy ultra the ordinary costs; Ex parte Ommaney, 10 Sim. 298; Miltown v. Trimbleston, 1 Flan. & K. 338 (decided under 1 Will. 4. c. 60).

If the lunatic, against whom an order is sought, be a trustee, the trust estate or the cestui que trust must bear the costs of the proceedings under the Act, and if he be a mortgagee, and it appears upon the face of the mortgage deed that the lunatic mortgagee is a trustee for a third party, the costs will fall on the mortgagor; Re Lewes, 1 Mac. & G. 23. But if the mortgagor had no notice of the fact that the lunatic was a trustee, the costs will follow the general rule; Re Townsend, 1 Mac. & G. 686; Re Jones, 2 Ch. Div. 70.

What is the general rule has been much disputed. The latest phase of the law is, that where the lunatic is beneficially interested in the mortgage money, there the costs of the petition, which should be presented by the committee and need not be served on the mortgagor, are (exclusive of the costs of the mortgagor if served) by force of authority and contrary to principle to be borne by the lunatic's estate; Re Wheeler, 1 De G. M. & G. 436; Re Stuart, 4 De G. & J. 319, and cases cited Ib.; Re Phillips, 4 L. R. Ch. App. 629; but that in all other cases the costs must be paid by the mortgagor; Ex parte Clay, Shelf. Lun. 510, 2nd edit., where the mortgage money had not been paid; Re Stuart, 4 De G. & J. 317; Re Jones, 2 De G. F. & J. 554, where the mortgage money had been paid; and see Re Viall, 8

Court may direct a commission concerning person of unsound mind.

LII. And be it enacted, that upon any petition being presented under this Act (to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid,) concerning a person of unsound mind, it shall be lawful for the (said) Lord Chancellor, should he so think fit, to direct that a commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo shall issue concerning such person, and to postpone making any order upon such petition until a return shall have been made to such commission (a).

Court may direct a suit to be instituted.

LIII. And be it enacted, that upon any petition under this Act being presented (to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or) to the Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for (the said Lord Chancellor, or) the said Court of Chancery, to postpone making any order upon such petition until the right of the petitioner or petitioners shall have been declared in a suit duly instituted for that purpose (b).

[Where a mortgagee became of unsound mind but was not so found by inquisition, and an order was made on the petition of the mortgagor authorizing him to pay the mortgage debt into the Bank of England, and vesting the estate in the petitioner, it was held that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the mortgagee or his estate bear the costs where the application was made by the mortgagor; and no costs were allowed on either side; Re Sparks, 6 Ch. Div. 361.]

The costs of applications for the appointment of new trustees come out of the corpus of the trust fund; Re Fellows's Settlement, 2 Jur. N. S. 62; Re Fulham, 15 Jur. 69; Ex parte Davies, 16 Jur. 882. And where new trustees of two funds are appointed upon the same petition the costs are borne by the two funds rateably according to their respective values; Re Grant's Trusts, 2 J. & H. 764.

In Ex parte Davies, 16 Jur. 882, the Court, though after some hesitation, declared that certain costs incurred under the Act should, with interest at 4 per cent., form a charge on the inheritance.

The Court, on appointing new trustees of real estate, has power under the section to direct the costs to be raised by a mortgage to be settled by the Court; Re Crabtree, V.C. Wood, 11 Jan. 1866 (MS.).

Where a petition is presented for vesting the legal estate of the lots sold by the Court in the purchasers, the petition may properly be presented by the purchasers, and the costs of the purchaser of each lot is payable out of the purchase-money of such lot; Ayles v. Cox, 17 Beav. 584. See ante, p. 1172, note (a).

The Court has no jurisdiction [under this section] to order a person served with the petition to pay the costs personally; Re Primrose, 23 Beav. 590. But see the decisions upon the Trustee Relief Act, Re Woodburn's Will, 1 De G. & J. 333, and subsequent cases, ante, p. 1138. [In Re Sarah Knight's Will, 26 Ch. Div. 82, Pearson, J., was of opinion that he had jurisdiction under the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Order 65, r. 1, to order a respondent to pay the costs personally, but the decision was reversed on appeal on other grounds, the Court refraining from deciding the point, but Cotton, L.J., expressing a doubt as to the jurisdiction.]

[(a) A commission will not be directed to issue under this section, where the trustee disputes his insanity, but the inquiry in that case should be under the ordinary proceedings in lunacy. The object of the section is only to give a summary and easy remedy for the removal of the trustee where there is no contest as to the facts, but the Court requires information; Re Combs, 51 L. T. N.S. 45.]

No. IV.

TRUSTEE EXTENSION ACT, 1852.

15 & 16 Vict cap. 55.

An Act to extend the Provisions of the "Trustee Act, 1850"
(30th June, 1852.)

Whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1850: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same.

Court of Chancery may after a decree or order for sale make an order for vesting the estate in lieu of conveyance by a party to the suit or a person bound by the decree or order.

I. That when any decree or order shall have been made (a) by any Court of equity directing the sale (b) of any lands for any purpose whatever (c), every person seised or possessed of such land, or entitled to a contingent right therein, being a party to the suit or proceeding in which such decree or order shall have been made, and bound thereby (d), or being otherwise bound by such decree or order, shall be (a) A decree made before the passing of this Act is within the operation of this clause; Wake v. Wake, 17 Jur. 545. The decree or order binds only the parties to the suit, and therefore in an administration suit, if the legal estate has descended to the heir of the testator who is not a party, the Court has no jurisdiction to make a vesting order; Gunson v. Simpson, 5 L. R. Eq. 332; and see Gough v. Bage, W. N. 1871, p. 327; 25 L. T. N.S. 738.

[By 47 & 48 Vict. c. 71 (The Intestates Estates Act, 1884), s. 5, on a sale under that Act of any estate or interest of the Crown, this section is to apply as if such estate or interest were vested in a subject.]

[(b) This section applies to a sale under the Partition Acts; Beckett v. Sutton, 19 Ch. D. 646.]

(c) The 29th section of the Trustee Act, 1850, applied only to decrees directing a sale for the payment of debts; and consequently where the decree for sale had been made in order to provide a fund available for the payment of costs, the Court had no power to make a vesting order; Weston v. Filer, 5 De G. & Sm. 608. This enactment remedies the inconvenience; Hancox v. Spittle, 3 Sm. & G. 478. And now in cases falling under this section, a vesting order may be obtained in Chambers; see [Rules of the Supreme Court, Order 55, R. 2, Art. 8. The section applies to the case where the person to convey is not under disability, per V. C. Bacon; Re Lee, Kenyon v. Lee, 1 Set. on Dec. 4th edit. 537; Beckett v. Sutton, 19 Ch. D. 646; but see Strong v. Padmore, contra, 1 Set. on Dec. 4th edit. 537.]

[(d) A devisee of real estate charged with debts who had become a lunatic, and had subsequently by his committee, with the sanction of the Master in Lunacy, commenced an action for the administration of his testator's estate, is bound by an order for sale of the real estate made in the action, and is a trustee within the section; Re Stamper, 46 L. T. N.S. 372.]

deemed to be so seised or possessed or entitled (as the case may be) upon a trust within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1850; and in every such case it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery (a), if the said Court shall think it expedient for the purpose of carrying such sale into effect, to make an order vesting such lands or any part thereof, for such estate as the Court shall think fit, either in any purchaser (b) or in such other person as the Court shall direct; and every such order shall have the same effect as if such person so seised or possessed or entitled had been free from all disability, and had duly executed all proper conveyances and assignments of such lands for such estate.

Power to make an order for vesting the estate, on refusal or neglect of a trustee to convey or release.

II. In every case where any person is or shall be jointly or solely seised or possessed of any lands or entitled to a contingent right therein upon any trust, and a demand shall have been made upon such trustee by a person entitled to require a conveyance or assignment of such lands, or a duly authorized agent of such last-mentioned person, requiring such trustee to convey or assign the same, or to release such contingent right, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, if the said Court shall be satisfied that such trustee has wilfully refused (c) or neglected to convey or assign the said lands for the space of twenty-eight days after such demand (d), to make an order vesting such lands in such person, in such manner and for such estate as the Court shall direct, or releasing such contingent right in such manner as the Court shall direct; and the said order shall have the same effect as if the trustee had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands, or a release of such right, in the same manner and for the same estate (e).

(a) And the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction even where the party seised or possessed was of unsound mind, but not found lunatic; Herring v. Clark, 4 L. R. Ch. App. 167.

(b) As to the persons to present the petition where lands are sold in several lots to different purchasers, see ante, p. 1172, note (a); p. 1178, note.

As to the costs of the petition, see ante, p. 1178, note.

(c) A married woman is capable of refusing; Rowley v. Adams, 14 Beav. 130. [A refusal is not wilful if the title of the person requiring the conveyance is disputed and the trustee entertains a bonâ fide doubt as to it; Re Mills' Trusts, 40 Ch. Div. 14, 19, where Cotton, L.J., observed that the section was only intended to apply in clear cases, as, for instance, where a conveyance to a new trustee as to whose title there is no doubt, is asked for. Quære, whether the refusal must be by the person who is trustee at the date of the order; see Re Mills' Trusts, ubi sup.]

(d) In Knight v. Knight, 14 L. T. N.S. 161, a divorced woman obtained a vesting order against her late husband.

(e) Under the 17th & 18th sections of the Trustee Act, 1850, the power of the Court arose only upon written refusal to convey, or neglect or refusal so to do after tender of a proper deed. The former contingency was of rare occurrence, and considerable difficulty was often experienced in bringing the case within the terms of the latter. In copyholds, for instance, vested in a feme covert, who could only surrender with consent of the husband, and on being privately examined, how could a proper deed be tendered? See Rowley v. Adams, 14 Beav. 130.

Power to make an order for the transfer, or receipt of dividends of stock in name of an infant trustee.

III. That when any infant shall be solely entitled to any stock upon any trust, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting in any person or persons the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof (a); and when any infant shall be entitled jointly with any other person or persons to any stock upon any trust, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, either in the person or persons conjointly entitled with the infant, or in him or them together with any other person or persons the said Court may appoint (b).

On neglect to transfer stock or receive dividends or to sue

IV. That where any person shall neglect or refuse to transfer any stock or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover any chose en action, or any interest in respect thereof, for the surrender copyholds to the mortgagee, and refused to surrender for twenty-eight days, the Court made a vesting order, and service on the mortgagor, who could not be found, was dispensed with; Re Crowe's Mortgage, 13 L. R. Eq. 26; [and see Re Mills' Trusts, 37 Ch. D. 312, at p. 316.]

(a) An order was once made by mistake under this Act, where the infant was entitled beneficially; Re Westwood, 6 N. R. 61; but the order was afterwards corrected, and made under the proper Act, viz., 1 W. 4. c. 65, s. 32; Re Westwood, 6 N. R. 316.

Agents of executors invested a sum of stock in the names of infants, who had an interest under the will, instead of in the names of the executors, and the Court made a vesting order for the transfer into the names of the executors; Rives v. Rives, W. N. 1866, p. 144; 14 L. T. N.S. 351. So where executors had invested stock in the names of themselves and an infant, and the infant was the survivor; Gardner v. Cowles, 3 Ch. D. 304.

[Where stock had been invested in the name of an infant domiciled in Scotland, and the Court of Session had authorized advances from time to time not exceeding in the whole £100 out of capital for maintenance and education, an order was made declaring the infant a trustee, and vesting the right to transfer £100 stock, and to receive the dividends to accrue during the minority in the guardian; but the Bank objected to act upon the order so far as it declared the infant a trustee and vested the right to transfer the stock, and this part of the order was thereupon abandoned; Re Findlay, 32 Ch. D. 221, 641. And where a sum of consols was standing in the sole name of an infant, and the dividends were not required for her maintenance, the Court, upon a petition for appointment of trustees of the stock, suggested that an order might be made directing the Bank to accumulate the dividends. The Bank, however, refused to act on such an order, and the Court under 11 Geo. 4. c. 65, s. 3, made an order for payment of the dividends to the trustees of the will under which the infant was entitled, to be by them applied for her benefit; Re Alice Kemp, 36 W. R. 729; W. N. 1888, p. 138; 59 L. T. N.S. 209.]

Where stock was standing in the names of three trustees and (legefor) an infant, and two of the trustees were dead and the third was out of the jurisdiction, the Court appointed a guardian, and allowed maintenance, and vested the right to receive the dividends in the guardian during the infant's minority; Re Morgan, 1 Set. on Dec. 516, 4th edit.

(b) In Cramer v. Cramer, 5 De G. & Sm. 312, Vice-Chancellor Parker held that, the Trustee Act 1850 having conferred no general power in the case of an infant trustee of stock within the jurisdiction, the Court had no authority to make a vesting order with regard to stock held by an infant trustee out of the jurisdiction. Hence this clause; see Sanders v. Homer, 25 Beav. 467.

[The section applies to the case of stock to which an infant is beneficially entitled standing in the joint names of the infant and another person; Re Harwood, 20 Ch. D. 536; Re Barnett, 61 L. T. N.S. 676.]

space of twenty-eight days next after an order of the Court of Chancery for that purpose shall have been served upon him (a), it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order (b) vesting all the right of such person to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose en action, or any interest in respect thereof, in such person or persons as the said Court may appoint.

for chose en action or interest for 28 days vesting order may be made.

V. When any stock shall be standing in the sole name of a deceased person, and his personal representative shall refuse or neglect to transfer such stock or receive the dividends or income thereof for the space of twenty-eight days next after an order of the Court of Chancery for that purpose shall have been served upon him, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, in any person or persons whom the said Court may appoint (c).

On like neglect by executor to transfer stock, or receive dividends, similar order may be made.

VI. When any order being or purporting to be under this Act, or under the Trustee Act, 1850, shall be made (by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or) (d) by the Court of Chancery, vesting the right to any stock, or vesting the right to transfer any stock, or vesting the right to call for the transfer of any stock, in any person or persons, in every such case the legal right to transfer such stock shall vest accordingly (e): and the person or persons so appointed shall be authorized and empowered to execute all deeds and powers of attorney, and to perform all acts relating to the transfer of such stock into his or their own name or names, or otherwise, to the extent and in conformity with the terms of the order, and the Bank of England, and all companies and associations whatever, and all persons,

Bank of England and companies to comply with such orders.

(a) In Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 5 De G. & Sm. 338, it was held that the case of a person refusing to transfer stock in obedience to an order of the Court, was not provided for in the Trustee Act, 1850. Hence the present remedial enactment.

(b) The order under this section need not be made upon a petition, but may be made upon motion; Re Holbrook's Will, 5 Jur. N. S. 1333.

(c) It is the practice of the Bank of England not to allow the dividend to be split into fractional parts; Skynner v. Pelichet, 9 W. R. 191.

[(d) By the Lunacy Act, 1890, schedule 5, sections 6 and 7 are repealed so far as relates to "the Lord Chancellor entrusted as aforesaid," except so far as the sections relate to Ireland.]

(e) In Re Smyth's Settlement, 4 De G. & Sm. 499, it was held that, under the 35th section (which differed in this respect from the 26th section) of the Trustee Act, 1850, the Court had no power to vest "the right to the stock," but only "the right to call for a transfer of the stock," and that the Bank was justified in refusing to transfer stock to new trustees under an order vesting in them "the right to the stock." Hence this enactment, which directs the Bank to obey all orders vesting the right to stock or the right to call for a transfer of it. [Where the trustees appointed by a testator died and new trustees were appointed in their place, and all the trust property was vested in the new trustees, the Bank declined to act unless the order directed the new trustees to transfer the stock into their own names; Re Glanville's Trusts, W. N. 1877, p. 248; 1878, p. 21.]

shall be equally bound and compellable to comply with the requisitions of such person or persons so appointed as aforesaid, to the extent and in conformity with the terms of such order, as the said Bank of England, or such companies, associations, or persons would have been bound and compellable to comply with the requisitions of the person in whose place such appointment shall have been made.

Indemnity to Bank and companies so obeying.

VII. That every order made or to be made, being or purporting to be made under this or the Trustee Act, 1850, (by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or) by the Court of Chancery, and duly passed and entered, shall be a complete indemnity to the Bank of England, and all companies and associations whatsoever, and all persons, for any act done pursuant thereto; and it shall not be necessary for the Bank of England, or such company or association or person, to inquire concerning the propriety of such order, or whether (the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or) the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction to make the same.

Power to appoint new trustees in lieu of persons convicted of felony, and to vest the trust estate accordingly.

VIII. That when any person is or shall be jointly or solely seised or possessed of any lands or entitled to any stock, upon any trust, and such person has been or shall be convicted of felony, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, upon proof of such conviction, to appoint any person to be a trustee in the place of such convict, and to make an order for vesting such lands, or the right to transfer such stock, and to receive the dividends or income thereof, in such person to be so appointed trustee; and such order shall have the same effect as to lands as if the convict trustee had been free from any disability and had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of his estate and interest in the same.

Power to the Court to appoint new trustees where there is no existing trustee.

IX. That in all cases where it shall be expedient to appoint a new trustee, and it shall be found inexpedient, difficult, or impracticable so to do without the assistance of the Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order appointing a new trustee or new trustees, whether there be any existing trustee or not at the time of making such order (a).

(a) See note, p. 1168, supra, as to the doubt which led to this enactment. See an order under this section, Davis v. Chanter, 4 Jur. N. S. 272. It has been doubted whether the Court has jurisdiction to appoint trustees of personalty where none were appointed by the testator, but the Court has authority to do it by its inherent jurisdiction independently of the Act; Dodkin v. Brunt, 6 L. R. Eq. 580. [And it has since been held that the executor or heir must be deemed a constructive trustee so as to give the Court jurisdiction to appoint trustees under the Act; Re Davis' Trusts, 12 L. R. Eq. 214; Re Moore, 21 Ch. D. 778, and see Re Smirthwaite's Trusts, 11 L. R. Eq. 251; Re Gillett's Trusts, 25 W. R. 23.

The Court sitting in Lunacy and in Chancery has power under this section to appoint new trustees of the will of a deceased lunatic, where the trustees appointed by the lunatic have died in his lifetime, for the purpose of getting rid of the funds standing in Court to the credit of the lunacy; Re Orde, 24 Ch. Div. 271.]

Chancellor may make order for appointment of trustees, without its being necessary that it should be made in Chancery, &c. [Repealed.]

X. (This section, except so far as it relates to Ireland, is repealed by the Lunacy Act, 1890, but is replaced by sect. 141 of that Act, see post, p. 1191.) In every case in which the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid (a) has jurisdiction under this Act, or the Trustee Act, 1850, to order a vesting order, it shall be lawful for him also to make an order appointing a new trustee or new trustees, in like manner as the Court of Chancery may do in like cases, without its being necessary that the order should be made in Chancery as well as in Lunacy, or be passed and entered by the Registrar of the Court of Chancery (b).

As to powers of persons intrusted with the care of lunatics. [Repealed.]

XI. (This section, except so far as it relates to Ireland, is repealed by the Lunacy Act, 1890.) That all the jurisdiction conferred by this Act (c) on the Lord Chancellor, intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual with the care of the persons and estates of Lunatics, shall and may be had, exercised, and performed by the person or persons for the time being intrusted as aforesaid.

Act to be construed as part of Trustee Act, 1850.

XII. That this Act shall be read and construed according to the definitions and interpretations contained in the second section of the Trustee Act, 1850, and the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act (except so far as the same are altered by or inconsistent with this Act) shall extend and apply to the cases provided for by this Act, in the same way as if this Act had been incorporated with and had formed part of the said Trustee Act, 1850.

All orders made under Trustee Act, 1850, or this Act, to be chargeable with the same stamp duty as deeds of conveyance.

XIII. That every order to be made under the Trustee Act, 1850, or this Act, which shall have the effect of a conveyance or assignment of any lands, or a transfer of any such stock as can only be transferred by stamped deed, shall be chargeable with the like amount of stamp duty as it would have been chargeable with if it had been a deed executed by the person or persons seised or possessed of such lands, or entitled to such stock; and every such order shall be duly stamped for denoting the payment of the said duty.

County Courts.

By the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43) s. 67, it is enacted that the County Courts shall have and exercise all the powers and authority of the High Court in the actions or matters hereinafter mentioned (that is to say), Under the Trustees Relief

Acts, or under the Trustee Acts, or under any of such Acts, in which the trust estate or fund to which the action or matter relates shall not exceed in amount or value the sum of £500.

By section 75, subs. (2), it is enacted that "Proceedings under the Trustee Acts, 1850 & 1852, shall be taken in the Court," i.e. the County Court, "within the district of which the persons making the application, or any of them, reside or resides."

By the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39) sect. 62, every instrument and every decree or order of any Court or of any commissioners, whereby any property on any occasion, except a sale or mortgage, is transferred to or vested in any person, is to be charged with duty as a conveyance or transfer of property.

THE LUNACY ACT, 1890.

53 Vict. cap. 5.

Such only of the provisions of this Act are here stated as affect the operation of the Trustee Acts.

1. This Act may be cited as the Lunacy Act, 1890.

2. Save as in this Act otherwise expressly provided, this Act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

3. This Act shall come into operation, save as in this Act otherwise expressly provided, on the 1st day of May, 1890.

[The Judge in Lunacy.]

108. (1) The jurisdiction of the Judge in Lunacy under this Act shall be exercised by the Lord Chancellor for the time being entrusted by the sign manual of Her Majesty with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of lunatics, acting alone or jointly with any one or more of such Judges of the Supreme Court, as may for the time being be entrusted as aforesaid, or by any one or more of such judges as aforesaid.

PART IV.

Judicial Powers over Person and Estate of Lunatics.

[Management and administration.]

117. The powers and provisions of the part of this Act relating to management and administration apply:—(a) To lunatics so found by inquisition; (b) To lunatics not so found by inquisition for the protection or administration of whose property any order has been made before the commencement of this Act; (c) To every person lawfully detained as a lunatic, though not so found by inquisition; (d) To every person not so detained and not found a lunatic by inquisition, with regard to whom it is proved to the satisfaction of the Judge in Lunacy, that such person is through mental infirmity arising from disease or age incapable of managing his affairs; (e) To every person with regard to whom it is proved to the satisfaction of the Judge in Lunacy by the certificate of a master, or by the report of the Commissioners, or by affidavit or otherwise, that such person is incapable of managing his affairs, and that his property does not exceed £2000 in value, or that the income thereof does not exceed £100 per annum; (F) To every person with regard to whom the judge is satisfied by affidavit or otherwise that such person is or has been a criminal lunatic, and continues to be insane and in confinement. (2) In the case of any of the above-mentioned persons not being lunatics so found by inquisition, such of the powers of this Act as are made exerciseable by the committee of the estate under order of the judge shall be exercised by such person in such manner and with or without security as the judge may direct, and any such order may confer upon the person therein named authority to do any specified act, or exercise any specified power, or may confer a general authority to exercise on behalf of the lunatic, until further order, all or any of such powers without further application to the judge. (3) Every person appointed to do any such act, or exercise any such power, shall be subject to the jurisdiction and authority of the judge as if such person were the committee of the estate of a lunatic so found by inquisition. (4) The powers of this Act relating to management and administration shall be exerciseable in the discretion of the judge for the maintenance or benefit of the lunatic or of him and his family, or where it appears to be expedient in due course of management of the property of the lunatic. (5) Nothing in this Act shall subject a lunatic's property to claims of his creditors further than the same is now subject thereto by due course of law.

[Committee may exercise power vested in lunatic in character of trustee or guardian.]

128. Where a power is vested in a lunatic in the character of trustee or guardian, or the consent of a lunatic to the exercise of a power is necessary in the like character, or as a check upon the undue exercise of the power, and it appears to the judge to be expedient that the power should be exercised or the consent given, the committee of the estate, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under an order of the judge, made upon the application of any person interested, may exercise the power or give the consent in such manner as the order directs (a).

[Appointment of new trustees under power to have effect of appointments by High Court, and like orders may be made as under Trustee Act, 1850.]

129. Where under this Act the committee of the estate, under order of the judge, exercises, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, a power of appointing new trustees vested in the lunatic, the person or persons who shall, after and in consequence of the exercise of the power, be the trustee or trustees, shall have all the same rights and powers as he or they would have had if the order had been made by the High Court; and the judge may in any such case, where it seems to him to be for the lunatic's benefit and also expedient, make any order respecting the property subject to the trust which might have been made in the same case under the Trustee Act, 1850, or any Act amending the same, on the appointment thereunder of a new trustee or new trustees (a).

Vesting Orders. (b)

[Power to transfer stock of lunatic.]

133. Where any stock is standing in the name of or is vested in a lunatic beneficially entitled thereto, or is standing in the name of or vested in a committee of the estate of a lunatic so found by inquisition, in trust for the lunatic, or as part of his property, and the committee dies intestate, or himself becomes lunatic, or is out of the jurisdiction of the High Court, or it is uncertain whether the committee is living or dead, or he neglects or refuses to transfer the stock, and to receive and pay over the dividends thereof as the Judge in Lunacy directs, then the judge may order some fit person to transfer the stock to or into the name of a new committee or into court or otherwise, and also to receive and pay over the dividends thereof in such manner as the judge directs.

[Stock in name of lunatic out of the jurisdiction.]

134. Where any stock is standing in the name of or vested in a person residing out of the jurisdiction of the High Court, the Judge in Lunacy, upon proof to his satisfaction that the person has been declared lunatic, and that his personal estate has been vested in a person appointed for the management thereof, according to the law of the place where he is residing, may order some fit person to make such transfer of the stock or any part thereof to or into the name of the person so appointed or otherwise, and also to receive and pay over the dividends thereof, as the judge thinks fit.

Power to vest lands and release contingent right of lunatic trustee or mortgagee.]

135. (1) When a lunatic is solely or jointly seised or possessed of any land upon trust or by way of mortgage the Judge in Lunacy may by order vest such land in such person or persons for such estate, and in such manner, as he directs (c).

(2) When a lunatic is solely or jointly entitled to a contingent right in any land upon trust or by way of mortgage, the judge may by order release such hereditaments from the contingent right, and dispose of the same to such person or persons as the judge directs (d).

(3) An order under sub-sections (1) and (2) shall have the same effect as if the trustee or mortgagee had been sane, and had executed a deed conveying the lands for the estate named in the order, or releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

(a) This section is in substitution for sect. 138 of the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853.

(b) As to the parties to make application under these sections, the title of summons, and service, see the Rules in Lunacy, 1890, rr. 55—57.

(c) Compare sect. 3 of Trustee Act, 1850, ante, p. 1149.

(d) Compare sect. 4 of Trustee Act, 1850, ante, p. 1151.

(4) In all cases where an order can be made under this section the judge may, if it is more convenient, appoint a person to convey the land or release the contingent right, and a conveyance or release by such person in conformity with the order shall have the same effect as an order under sub-sections (1) and (2) (a).

(5) Where an order under this section vesting any copyhold land in any person or persons is made with the consent of the lord or lady of the manor, such land shall vest accordingly without surrender or admittance (b).

(6) Where an order is made appointing any person or persons to convey any copyhold land, such person or persons shall execute and do all assurances and things for completing the assurance of the lands; and the lord and lady of the manor shall, subject to the customs of the manor and the usual payments, be bound to make admittance to the land, and to do all other acts for completing the assurance thereof, as if the persons in whose place an appointment is made were free from disability and had executed and done such assurances and things (c).

[Power to vest right to transfer stock and sue for chose en action.]

136. (1) Where a lunatic is solely entitled to any stock or chose in action upon trust or by way of mortgage, the Judge in Lunacy may by order vest in any person or persons the right to transfer or call for a transfer of the stock, or to receive the dividends thereof, or to sue for the chose in action.

(2) In the case of any person or persons jointly entitled with a lunatic to any stock or chose in action upon trust or by way of mortgage, the judge may make an order vesting the right to transfer or call for a transfer of the stock, or to receive the dividends thereof, or to sue for the chose in action either in such person or persons alone or jointly with any other person or persons (d).

(3) When any stock is standing in the name of a deceased person, whose personal representative is a lunatic, or when a chose in action is vested in a lunatic, as the personal representative of a deceased person, the judge may make an order vesting the right to transfer or call for a transfer of the stock, or to receive the dividends thereof, or to sue for the chose in action in any person or persons he may appoint (e).

(4) In all cases where an order can be made under this section, the judge may, if it is more convenient, appoint some proper person to make or join in making the transfer (f).

(e) Compare sect. 6 of Trustee Act, 1850, ante, p. 1152.
(f) Compare sect. 20 of Trustee Act, 1850, ante, p. 1157.

(5) The person or persons in whom the right to transfer or call for a transfer of any stock is vested, may execute and do all powers of attorney, assurances, and things to complete the transfer to himself or themselves or any other person or persons according to the order, and the Bank and all other companies and their officers and all other persons shall be bound to obey every order under this section according to its tenor (a).

(6) After notice in writing of an order under this section, it shall not be lawful for the Bank or any other company to transfer any stock to which the order relates, or to pay any dividends thereon except in accordance with the order (b).

[Person to be appointed to transfer.]

137. Where a person is appointed to make or join in making a transfer of stock, such person shall be some proper officer of the Bank, or the company or society whose stock is to be transferred (c).

[Charity trustees.]

138. The powers conferred by this Act as to vesting orders may be exercised for vesting any land, stock, or chose in action in the trustee or trustees of any charity or society over which the High Court would have jurisdiction upon suit duly instituted, whether the appointment of such trustee or trustees was made by instrument under a power, or by the High Court under its general or statutory jurisdiction (d).

[Declarations and directions.]

139. The Judge in Lunacy may make declarations and give directions concerning the manner in which the right to any stock or chose in action vested under the provisions of this Act is to be exercised (e).

[Order to be conclusive evidence of allegation on which it is founded.]

140. The fact that an order for conveying any land or releasing any contingent right has been founded upon an allegation of the personal incapacity of a trustee or mortgagee shall be conclusive evidence of the fact alleged in any court upon any question as to the validity of the order, but this section shall not prevent a Judge of the High Court from directing a re-conveyance of any lands or contingent right dealt with by the order, or from directing any party to any proceeding concerning such land or right to pay any costs occasioned by the order when the same appears to have been improperly obtained (f).

[Power to appoint new trustees.]

141. In every case in which the Judge in Lunacy has jurisdiction to order a conveyance or transfer of land or stock or to make a vesting order, he may also make an order appointing a new trustee or new trustees (g).

[Costs.] 142. The Judge in Lunacy may order the costs of and incident to obtaining an order under the provisions of this Act as to vesting orders and carrying the same into effect, to be paid out of the land or personal estate or the income thereof in respect of which the order is made, or in such manner as the judge may think fit (a).

[Saving of power of High Court.] 143. The provisions of this Act as to vesting orders shall not affect the jurisdiction of the High Court as to any lunatic trustee or mortgagee who is an infant.

[Power to make rules.] 338. By this section, sub-section 2, the Lord Chancellor is empowered to make rules in lunacy "for carrying this or any other Act, relating to lunacy into effect, and also for regulating costs in relation thereto" (b).

[Definitions.] 341. In this Act, if not inconsistent with the context—

"Contingent right" as applied to lands, includes a contingent and executory interest, a possibility coupled with an interest, whether the object of the gift or limitation of such interest or possibility be or be not ascertained, also a right of entry, whether immediate or future, and whether vested or contingent (c).

"Convey" and "conveyance" include the performance of all formalities required to the validity of conveyances by married women and tenants in tail under the "Act for the abolition of fines and recoveries, and for the substitution of more simple modes of assurance," and also surrenders and other acts which a tenant of copyhold lands can perform preparatory to or in aid of a complete assurance of such copyhold lands.

"Land" includes an undivided share of land; "Lease" includes an underlease; "Lunatic" means an idiot or person of unsound mind.

"Property" includes real and personal property, whether in possession, reversion, remainder, contingency, or expectancy, and any estate or interest therein, and any undivided share therein.

"Stock" includes any fund, annuity or security transferable in books kept by any company or society, or by instrument of transfer alone, or by instrument of transfer, accompanied by other formalities, and any share or interest therein, and also shares in ships registered under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854.

(a) Compare sect 51 of Trustee Act, 1850, ante, p. 1171.

(b) See the Rules in Lunacy, 1890, annulling the Lunacy Orders, 1883, and the Orders of May 4, 1827; Aug. 3rd, 1876; Feb. 6th, 1889; and May 6th, 1889.

(c) The definitions of "contingent right," "convey," "conveyance," "stock," "transfer," "trust," and "trustee" may be compared with those contained in the Trustee Act, 1880, ante, pp. 1146, 1147.

"Transfer" includes assignment, payment, and other dispositions, and the execution, and performance of every assurance and act to complete a transfer.

"Trust" and "trustee, include implied and constructive trusts, and cases where the trustee has some beneficial interest, and also the duties incident to the office of personal representative of a deceased person, but not the duties incident to an estate conveyed by way of mortgage.

342. The Acts mentioned in the fifth schedule are hereby repealed to the extent set forth in the third column of the same schedule (a).

Provided that this repeal shall not affect any jurisdiction or practice established, confirmed, or transferred, or any salary or compensation or superannuation secured, by or under any enactment repealed by this Act.]

(a) The repeals, contained in schedule 5, which are material for the present purpose have already been indicated; see ante, pp. 1149, 1157, 1183, 1185.

[No. 6.

THE LUNACY ACT, 1891.

54 & 55 Vict. cap. 65.

[Procedure as to Chancery Lunatics.]

27. (1) Subject to rules in lunacy the jurisdiction of the Judge in Lunacy as regards administration and management may be exercised by the masters, and every order of a master in that behalf shall take effect unless annulled and varied by the Judge in Lunacy.

(2) The power to make rules under section 338, sub-section (2), of the principal Act shall extend to all applications under the principal Act and this Act, and also to applications in the Chancery Division of the High Court in cases where such applications are also made under the principal Act.

[Definition of "seised" and "possessed."

28. In the principal Act, the word "seised" shall include any vested estate for life or of a greater description, and shall extend to estates at law and in equity in possession or in futurity in any lands; and the word "possessed" shall include any vested estate less than a life estate at law or in equity in possession or in expectancy in any lands.
